Index to Reviews, Comments, and Stories of Films

Appended is a list of subjects covered by our reviews and comments and the synopses furnished by the manufacturers released for the three months ending June 30, 1916. This list of releases with dates is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information that we have received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors, we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review, comment, or synopsis can be found. "R" stands for review; "C" for comment; and "S" for synopsis. Where reference letter is omitted to either review or comment it signifies that none was published, and the omission of reference letter "S" indicates that synopsis was not furnished by the manufacturer. Of the later releases where any or all reference letters are omitted it may be said that the missing information, or part of it, will probably be published in the next volume.

Essanay Service

Essanay now is prepared to give you a better service than ever before—the best that can be had.

Its new studio—the largest artificially lighted in the world—now is in full operation.

This means no delay in production, no dependency on the inclemencies of weather. It means complete sets can be put in place at once, so all scenes will harmonize.

It means more care to detail and more artistic productions.

Essanay's service of standardized photo-plays can not be excelled.

Essanay Realism

Kipling's idea of paradise is a place where one can "draw the thing as he sees it."

This is the keynote of Essanay realism.

In every heart there is an innate love of truth to things as they are. When you look at a painting, when you read a book, when you see a photoplay that is true to life, you are instinctively stirred by the fact that it is as it should be.

You are quick to reject that which is untrue to things as you know them.

Essanay spares no pains to draw the things as it sees them and as they are.

That is why Essanay plays strike a universal chord.

PICTURES WHICH CHALLENGE NATURE'S FIERCEST FORCES

SNOW-BOUND Washington!—country of blizzards and blockades!—mercury touching bottom!—small community!—country patronage! What more difficult test of their drawing powers could moving pictures have? Yet witness the report of Big Four's showing in the town of Sequim.

> "Last night's film enthusiastically received by large-sized crowd. V-L-S-E features deserve all credit for bringing out people with weather conditions at their worst. Terrific cold, snow and wind. All irrigation systems frozen and country folk beside themselves as to how to water stock, yet came long distances to see your picture."—J. E. Musgrave, Mgr. Olympic Theatre, Sequim, Wash.

And then to parallel this achievement in Northwestern Minnesota, land of bitter gales and biting cold, with the thermometerten below zero:

Gentlemen:

Enjoyed fine business last Sunday in spite of the extremely bad weather. In the evening the thermometer registered 10 below zero and a stiff northwest gale whirled the fine snow that had fallen during the day into a raging blizzard.

In spite of this, however, four young ladies and their escort, all good picture judges, made the drive in a bob-sleigh from Glenville (eight miles south) to Albert Lea, just to see our show. When they reached the theater, they were too cold to remove their own wraps, but after seeing the picture, they said it was worth all the discomfort to which they had been subjected, and started on the home trip, vowing they would be willing to do the same thing over again for so enjoyable an evening.

I consider this the greatest compliment ever indirectly paid a picture in my house, and cannot refrain from passing it along to you.

Yours very truly,

Valleau

Instances of the drawing power of V-L-S-E releases in every clime and under all conditions, might be multiplied tiresomely. In Dayton, Wash., for instance the American Theatre reports that "with the mercury two below zero, doors opened at 7:00 o'clock. At 7:30 'S. R. O.' Admission twenty-five cents. Box office records broken at 8:40." Suffice it here, however, to suggest that if you seek attractions of proved profit-making value, you would do well to consult the nearest V-L-S-E exchange.

We are always ready to help you help yourself.

Gentlemen:

I have been in the motion picture business in St. Louis eight years. I opened with the V-L-S-E service in the latter part of July--the first features shown at my house at advanced prices.

I have been using the service from the V-L-S-E regularly each week since, and find it satisfactory to myself and to my patrons--in fact after carefully reviewing all the features on the market at the present time, I consider the V-L-S-E ahead of the best of them.

The advanced prices which V-L-S-E bring, being very profitable, I am now considering a regular two a week V-L-S-E program--in this way using V-L-S-E's entire output.

It is also always a pleasure to me to be instrumental in securing new accounts for the V-L-S-E.

Very truly yours.

I take great pleasure in expressing my appreciation in regard to your wonderful pictures. I have used a number of them, and can frankly say that they are unquestionably the most popular pictures I show my patrons.

I am glad to say that V-L-S-E features have increased my business and show a big profit on the days that I have used them.

I am always glad at any time to give my assistance in helping to place the Big Four at the top.

Hearst-Vitagraph Wins Again!

On Friday, March 10th, the front page of every newspaper in the United States carried headlines similar to the above.

On March 14th the motion pictures of the Villa raid on Columbus, New Mexico, were shown in the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial in New York City.

These pictures were made the morning following the massacre and were taken fifty-four hours before any other camera man was on the ground.

New York's newest creations in women's millinery and foot-wear are elaborately displayed.

The Chicago Nationals romp through a couple of innings in their first Spring practice at Tampa.

"Krazy Kat" and "Ignatz Mouse" are among those present and play through two hundred feet as students of bugology.

Facts and Comments

AGAIN good news comes out of Pennsylvania. The Court of Common Pleas has reversed two decisions of the Breitinger-Overholtzer Censor Board. One of the judges characterized the action of the state censors as "a clear and absolute abuse of discretion." The judge says further that there are "certain inaccuracies" in the film in question, but he makes it plain that in his opinion "the play is innocuous." Just what we have always pointed out: Censorship is not only wrong in principle, but it is altogether impracticable. Only a very small percentage of the Breitinger-Overholtzer decisions have been appealed from and the percentage of reversals is nearly one hundred per cent. It is reasonable to conclude that many cases in which no appeal was taken would have resulted in additional reversals. Thus producers and exchange men are subjected to constant annoyance and loss of money on the mere whim of men for whose judgment the courts have so far shown very little respect indeed.

THE amended Ahern Bill now pending in the New York Legislature and recently reported favorably by the Codes Committee, is by far the most vicious and oppressive censorship measure yet devised in any state. It allows an appeal to the court, but it conditions the allowance of such an appeal on so many technicalities that a long delay is certain in every case. In other words, the right of appeal is conceded theoretically, but denied in practice. We hope the readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will use the list of Assemblymen we have printed in this paper for the last two issues and get in touch with the Assemblyman in their district. Another bill providing for a different kind of censorship of motion pictures has been introduced in the legislature of the state. It vests the right to censor the motion pictures in the Board of Regents. The Board of Regents standardizes public education in this state, and is doing its work with great efficiency. Why it should be burdened with such an absurd function as censorship it is difficult to understand.

A FRIEND of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD sends an interesting letter showing how hazardous a thing the production of films has become. He figured that with a negative costing but $5,000 ($1,000 for a reel), and with a sale of twenty copies at the prevailing prices it is altogether probable that the producer will lose on his investment. Men well versed in conditions know that the cost of a good negative greatly exceeds the above estimate. The lesson seems simple. To manufacture for the American market alone is to gamble in nine cases out of ten. The European market now and for some time to come will be hard to approach. The agitation in Great Britain for a complete shutting out of all foreign-made films looks dangerous. There is one market, however, which promises compensations. It is the Latin-American market, which is reached by Cine-Mundial, the Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. With Cine-Mundial as a guide and bureau of information the American manufacturer enjoys unusual facilities for reaching that market.

THE one thing among others that makes us believe we are in close touch with the needs and the great topics of the film world is the generous response of our readers in their comments and suggestions. A well-known Philadelphia exhibitor accepting our recent invitation to be heard on the subject of comedy writes that in his opinion "high-class comedy was never more plentiful." He thinks that the low class comedy is losing ground "because the comedians are not funny. They stick to their old styles. Their comedy does not go over. One man discovered a new style and the screen is littered with imitators." Our correspondent mentions several high-class feature companies as "putting out excellent comedies." He also speaks favorably of the feature companies who "add a touch of comedy relief to their dramas to strengthen the contrast." We like to hear from more of our readers.

Press and Screen

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Trade Board met and dined. Then up rose an Able Editor and upset the accustomed order of interfluent felicitation. From the high standpoint of one who does not have to investigate a subject in order to know all about it, the Able Editor drove home some truth so unpalatable that part of it has not yet been fully digested. Most startling was his proclamation of common ignorance. "At present," he said bluntly, "all that the motion picture amounts to is an amusement, and its success is based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race."

The Able Editor has a sound proposition behind his statement. We do not need any better evidence that a large proportion of our people are what he declares them to be than the fact that they can stomach the stuff published in his paper, particularly in its editorial columns. It can with equal justice be declared that he is giving his best energies to a paper amounting to little more than a one-cent amusement, whose "success is based on the stupidity and lack of intellectual development" among those who devour its sickly sensationalism.

The sharp-pointed truth back of his assertions is that our civilizing agents, those who discover, who originate, who reveal through genuine artistry, are so little encouraged that the common people, those who merely imitate and perpetuate what great agents of civilization produce, do not get the knowledge they need, that they crave. Knowledge is not born in us. It must be given to us as mental nourishment during the formative periods of our lives through the schools and through such powerful mediums of expression as the press and the motion picture.

There are reputable publications in this country which are sustaining the critic in his efforts to discriminate between falsity and verity in artistic production. Then there are notorious publications which no longer mark the difference between right and wrong in artistic production for reasons scarcely creditable to any person pretending to honest intention, that of replacing the ignorance and errors of humanity with knowledge and truth. Is the noble art of printing to be judged by its inferior examples?

There are reputable producers of moving pictures who are striving earnestly to combine, in what is primarily distributed for purposes of entertainment, all the enlightenment that may be attached to a vital theme without trespassing on good nature with preachment, who are trying to visualize history and classic story with consistent artistry, who are on their way to a success rivaling that of our greatest periodicals. Then there are others, men whose principles may, like those of some newspaper publishers, be summed up in one word of coarse avarice.

It is neither broad nor generous to judge an entire art without a discriminating examination of its evolution, of its methods, of its attainments, of its progress, of its possibilities. Such criticism is on a par with the kind we receive from publicity-seeking foreigners who visit our shores for the first time and publish only their own lack of depth and thoroughness in their superficial views. The Able Editor's comments were probably well-intended, but they were far from edifying, merely a splendid opportunity thrown away, and about as appropriate under the circumstances as the funny story a dentist attempts to tell while engaged in filling a patient's tooth.

It need not be denied that common people are moved forward through what is furnished by a few great creative minds, but evidence is not lacking that common people of America have shown generous appreciation of the best that has been given them through the printed word. They have accorded genius the opportunity it needs in order to reach adequate expression of itself, and they have enlarged that opportunity by their warm support of a new medium of expression, one in which there is no Tower of Babel, yet one scarcely noticed by literary men except in contemptuous designation until it handed them some easy money.

Those of us who have felt that we were participating in the evolution of a wondrous new art can recall without difficulty a period of contemptuous indifference on the part of newspapers and periodicals, that of inoffensive ignorance, then one of venomous envy, all at a time when the new art had long been entrenched in the hearts of millions of common people. What a noble change of attitude when it became possible for newspapers and periodicals to obtain some advertising and cooperative publicity from motion picture production! Wherein was the lack of intelligence? Was it among the animals who nursed and supported the young art until it was able to make its own way, or among those who only woke up when it became a direct source of revenue to their respective publications?

Be it admitted that the Able Editor is right in saying "The success of moving pictures, gentlemen, is due to this—we are a race of animals." Facing, as we do, the mysteries of life and death on either hand, why should any of us pretend that we are more? But why scoff at any opportunity that we may seize for self-improvement?

First essential in the art of screen visualization, as in that of imparting words on paper, was utility. It had to pay through commercial methods for its artistic and scientific development. The same was probably true of the older art, one which has had time to grow since Columbus discovered America. But it would seem to an unbiased observer that our animal-like achievements in motion-picture production have wrought a marvelous improvement during a very short space of time. The general tendency is still that way, and, strange as it may seem to an Able Editor, there are animals engaged in this industry as altruistic and humanitarian as himself.

A small army of animals are engaged. Authors, directors, actors, critics, investigators, inventors, scientific developers and business men are bending all their energies to the betterment of what common people all over the country have come to love. We are trying to give them something worth while. And we are not attempting to exploit the unintelligent class by means of false promises for political purposes. Nor are we offering them a lot of chaff from which can be separated only an infinitesimal amount of anything that has the remotest resemblance to either knowledge or truth.

Can there be any attitude more offensive to good taste, to intelligence and sincerity of purpose, to all that makes for the administration of the social estate through the diffusion of knowledge, than the attitude of a man who offers a criticism of human effort without in the least concerning himself as to the truth or falsity of his statements? Honi soit qui mal y pense.

The New Richardson Handbook

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD takes pleasure in announcing the completion and publication of the third edition of the "Motion Picture Handbook." The book is by far the most painstaking effort to supply by text and illustrations an absolutely dependable guide for managers and operators of motion picture theaters. The book contains 700 pages of text and 319 illustrations. It covers the field or rather the science of projection in every conceivable aspect.

Written by the foremost expert on projection, Frank H. Richardson, it embodies the studies, observations and experiences of many years in a busy and useful life. Mr. Richardson is above all a practical man. He began his systematic study of projection when that great field was almost unexplored and he has progressed with its development up to the present minute. Indeed, it may be said without exaggeration that there is not a motion picture house anywhere in the country which has not directly or indirectly been benefited by the labors of Richardson. This third edition of the handbook is beyond all question the most substantial and the most authentic contribution to the library of the manager and operator.

It is quite impossible to indicate with any degree of completeness the voluminous contents of this book. Some idea of the thoroughness of the book may be gained from the fact that the index alone occupied twelve pages. The arrangement of the index will be found most acceptable to the reader, for the classification of the contents is given in great detail, enabling the reader to find what he wants at a glance. The index runs in alphabetical order. There is no problem in projection which may not be brought to a happy solution by consulting this handbook. All the great practical questions are treated most minutely and exhaustively in the clearest and plainest of language. Its popular style is surely not the least merit of this publication. This plain and popular style was born of the author's practical experience with the men in whose hands rests the fate of projection. There is no attempt to soar into the hazy regions of theory and speculation.

Just as a sample of the plan of treatment and not with any intention of summarizing the contents of the book, we point to the complete and detailed instructions to the operator. There are general instructions dealing with the question of the mechanism of all machinery and with the various parts thereof. These are followed by most exhaustive instructions for the proper handling of the six projectors now in common use. The value of this feature alone is clear. If the house decides to change from one machine to another and the catalogue of the new machine is not handy, this book will be found a most welcome guide. Contrasts between mechanisms and peculiarities of the various projectors are gone into in the most useful and practical manner.

The concluding paragraph of the Publisher's Note to this edition may well find a place in this brief mention of the book: "The author has spent all of his time for many years in the study of projection and we confidently believe this comprehensive work will meet with the unqualified approval of every reader."

WARREN KERRIGAN A BLUEBIRD.

Otis Turner has produced "The Gay Lord Waring" for Bluebird Photoplays with J. Warren Kerrigan in the title role. It will be released April 24, following Violet Mersereau in "The Great Experiment." The story of "The Gay Lord Waring" was written by Houghton Townley and the scenario was prepared by F. McGrew Willis. The piece carries a mystery plot which is reputed to be something different in the line of photoplays.

Censor Bills in Congress

Propositions in Crafts' New Measure Provide Unlimited Graft—Towner Bill Ample Protection.

REPORTS from Washington show that the enemies of the motion picture have entangled themselves in a legislative maze worse than the mazes in which Marc Antony's mercenaries were caught and destroyed in Asia when they set out to conquer and enslave the eastern world. The Education Committee of the House of Representatives now has under consideration a hodge-podge of bills sent to Washington by persons who are willing to ruin the motion picture industry if they can attain a purely selfish end—financial advantage for five per cent. of the industry at the expense of the other ninety-five per cent.

Private despatches quote parts of a proposed new measure which has been put into the form of a crazy-quilt by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts' self-constituted band of moral censors of the nation and lawyers hired by the one or two per cent. of picture makers who seek Federal censorship for the benefit of their pocketbooks.

Here are some sample sections from the crazy-quilt which, if enacted into law, would suffocate a $500,000,000 industry which has already lifted itself into the realm of human happiness and advancement:

That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal Motion Picture Commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of the commission shall be designated by the President as chairman.

That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, except that the annual salary of the chairman shall be $8,000. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of deputy commissioners and such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties.

That the principal office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but it shall establish and maintain offices or bureaus wherever efficiency, economy and the public interest require. Each bureau or office which for the aforesaid reasons is designated by the commissioner as a place for the submission of films shall be in charge of a commission with authority to issue licenses and permits, as hereinafter described, in all proper cases.

That the commission shall promptly license for interstate and foreign commerce every motion picture film submitted to it as herein required, unless such film or a part thereof is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, or is a reproduction of an actual bull fight or prize fight, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite to crime. If the commission shall not license any film for any of the above reasons, it shall furnish to the applicant a written report clearly setting forth the reasons for its refusal and a description of each rejected part of any film not disapproved in toto, and upon the applicants filing in the office in which the application for license is filed, a statement under oath by the owner or lessee of said film that the part or parts described have been eliminated from the film and all copies thereof, and that the corresponding parts of the negative from which the film submitted was made have been destroyed or are therewith delivered to the commission, a license shall be issued forthwith. But any license obtained upon a false or misleading affidavit or application shall be wholly void ab initio. A copy of such license, or a certificate of its issuance, shall be provided by the commission to accompany each copy or duplicate film so licensed.

That the commission shall collect from each applicant for a license or a permit, except as otherwise expressly provided in section five of this act, a license fee of two dollars for each one thousand feet or fraction thereof of film and 25 cents for each additional copy thereof, licensed by the commission: Provided, however, that upon the expiration of six months from the date of approval of this act, and from time to time thereafter, as circumstances warrant, the commission shall revise and fix the fees at such sums as will probably produce no larger income than is necessary to support the work of the commission, including salaries and all other expenses.

That the commission shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

"Under the provisions of the crazy-quilt bill," said J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, "Federal censorship might cost either $300,000 or $400,000 a year—an all too moderate estimate—or $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. Congress will surely realize that any form of pre-publicity censorship of motion pictures by a board or commission would be undemocratic, un-American and dangerous to all our institutions. The situation is exactly the same as if the Parkhurst Society of New York should demand a government board to censor the newspapers of the whole country and the utterances of preachers and other public speakers.

"The Towner bill, now in the Judiciary Committee of the House, provides an easy way out of the mire of vicious and selfishly inspired censorship bills. This measure has the support of more than ninety-five per cent. of the stabilized motion picture industry and simply adds the words 'motion picture film' as an amendment of Section 245 of the Criminal Code. This would then read, in part:

"That whoever shall bring, or cause to be brought into the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, from any foreign country, or shall therein knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof to any other state, territory or district of the United States or place non contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof to any other state or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States through a foreign country to any place in or subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any place in or subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to a foreign country, any obscene, lewd, or lascivious or any filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character, * * * or whoever shall knowingly take or cause to be taken from such express company or other common carrier any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

Another Censor Bill

Measure Offered by Assemblyman Wheeler at Albany Said to Be Most Puerile in Character.

THE Education Committee of the Assembly at Albany, has granted a hearing on the newest and weirdest of the motion picture censorship bills yet introduced in the legislature of the state of New York. This proposed measure is fathered by Heber R. Wheeler, of Ontario county, and first saw the light of day on March 15. The hearing will take place in the Education Committee room in the Capitol at two o'clock on the afternoon of March 21, when the motion picture industry will be well represented.

The Wheeler bill may be classed as a mentally deficient and morally overfed younger brother of the Ahern bill which through the fine work of Assemblyman Ahern of Kings escaped from the Codes Committee a few days ago—the committee of which Mr. Ahern is the chairman.

The Wheeler bill is in a way welcome to the motion picture interests because of its foolish and impossible provisions. It undertakes to saddle the State Board of Regents with a censorship job. The State Board of Regents, being one of the most respected and useful organizations constituting the state government, the Wheeler bill will no doubt be killed through the influence of the Regents themselves.

The Ahern bill, which will meet a just fate on the floor of the House, is hardly recognizable in its amended form. However, the principal reason for the change of language was to enable the censors to draw a few thousands of dollars more from the state treasury. The weakling younger brother—the Wheeler bill—reads as follows:

Board of Censors.—The State Board of Censors is hereby established, to consist of three members, to be known as Moving Picture Censors. The members of such board shall be appointed by the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York. The full term of office of any such censor shall be six years from the first day of January on which the term of his predecessor expires; except that the first appointments under this article shall be made for such terms and in such manner that the term of office of one censor shall expire on January first, nineteen hundred and eighteen one on January first nineteen hundred and twenty, and one on January first, nineteen hundred and twenty-two. Such Board of Regents shall have power to fill any vacancy in the membership of such Board of Censors for the unexpired term. The Board of Censors shall elect one of its members to be president, to act as such during the term of his appointment as member of such board. The members of such board shall be persons having proper qualifications for performing its powers and duties. The members of such board shall each receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars. The Board of Regents shall employ a secretary and such clerks and agents for such Board of Censors as the Board of Regents may deem necessary or proper to carry out the provisions of this article, and fix their compensation. As used in the ensuing provisions of this article, the term "regents" shall mean the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, and the term "board" shall mean the Board of Censors hereby established.

Powers and Duties of the Board of Censors.—The Board of Censors shall examine all moving picture films or reels, and report to the regents its approval of such films or reels as it shall find to be moral and proper and its disapproval of such films or reels as it shall find to be sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral or tending to debase or corrupt the morals. Each report submitted shall be accompanied with the film or reel to which it relates. The regents may adopt or reject any such report and approve or disapprove any such film or reel, without regard to the action by the Board of Censors. Upon each moving picture film or reel having the approval of the regents, they shall caused to be placed the words "Approved by the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York," accompanied with the date of approval and a serial number, to be assigned thereto by the regents and appended at the end of the film or reel. The regents may, in their discretion, by majority vote, revoke their approval of any such film or reel at any time. Such revocation shall be complete upon personal service of notice of such application upon the proprietor or such film or reel or upon any agent of such proprietor having charge of the leasing, sale or exhibition of any such film or reel. Subject to the supervision and control of the regents the Board of Censors shall have general power and authority to supervise and regulate the display of all moving picture films or reels in all places within the state. Such power and authority shall include the power to inquire into and investigate, and to have displayed for the benefit of such board or for the regents, the moving picture films or reels intended to be displayed.

Examination Fees.—For each examination made by the board under this article, the vendor, lessor or proprietor of the film or reel examined shall pay to the secretary of the board of a fee of five dollars for each five hundred feet of film, and for each major fraction thereof in excess of five hundred feet or of an exact multiple of five hundred feet, but the fee in any case shall not be less than five dollars. For the purpose of computing such fee, all films and parts of films attached together upon one reel shall be deemed a single film. No film or reel shall be examined until such fee shall have been paid. If a duplicate of any approved film or reel be made by any such vendor, lessor or proprietor and pictures be exhibited therewith, such vendor, lessor or proprietor shall pay the secretary of the board an additional fee of five dollars for each duplicate thereof until all of the fees herein provided for shall have been paid. All fees collected under the provisions of this section shall be paid over monthly to the state treasurer as provided in the state finance law. The legislature shall appropriate annually the necessary moneys for paying salaries and expenses under this article.

This act shall take effect immediately.

AHERN BILL REPORTED.

The Ahern bill to provide official censorship for motion pictures in the state of New York was reported favorably by the Assembly Committee on Codes on March 15. The bill has been amended to provide for a court review of the decisions of the censors, and the board is to be known as the New York Motion Picture Commission.

Opening of Brooklyn Rialto

Controlled by Picker and Bennett—Robert Roberts Is Manager.

AN event of considerable importance in the classic section of Flatbush took place on Saturday, March 18, when the Rialto theater at Flatbush avenue and Cortelyou Road was opened with much pomp of circumstance and under the most auspicious surroundings. The theater is constructed for the exhibition of high-class photoplays exclusively. It has a seating capacity of about 2,000 and is decorated in the handsomest style.

The opening night saw a crowd of huge proportions congest the entrance at an early hour. Indeed the crowd was so numerous and so insistent that the management had the utmost difficulty in handling it. There was but one thing more remarkable than the size of the crowd and that was its quality.

The opening ceremonies included a special overture, brief addresses by Dr. Cranston Brenton of the National Board of Censorship, and W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, and a bass solo Rialto Theater, Flatbush, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The rest of the program which was thoroughly enjoyed by the vast gathering consisted of scenics and comedy and —the piece de resistance—of Selig's great production, "The Ne'er-Do-Well."

Messrs. David V. Picker and Whitman Bennett are interested in the Rialto, which was constructed at a cost of $125,000. The new theater is designed on strictly modern lines and stands in an exclusive residential portion of the Flatbush section. The policy of the house is modeled on that of the Broadway Strand theater, the program containing vocal and instrumental numbers. A large orchestra, the members of which were selected with a view to providing the best musical talent procurable, adds much to the attractiveness of the program. The interior of the house abounds in tasty decorations, no expense having been spared by the management to combine comfort for its patrons with beauty of design. All the latest improvements, including ample fire protection and projection machine constructed according to the most recent patents are embodied in the new theater.

Robert Roberts, the well-known "legitimate" star, officiates as manager of the Rialto. Mr. Roberts' reputation as a leading light of the stage is international, his experience covering many years of travel around the globe with his own companies. His engagement in his present capacity marks Mr. Roberts' entrance into the moving picture world, a venture in which his knowledge of things theatrical promises to prove valuable.

Oppose Sunday Shows

Improvement Association Records Itself Opposed to Sunday Shows—W. Stephen Bush and Max Simon Plead Exhibitors' Cause.

AT a meeting held March 13 at Berkeley Hall, the Clinton Hill Improvement Association, a civic organization having large influence in the city, went on record as being opposed not only to Sunday shows in the Clinton Hill section of the city, but to exhibitions of moving pictures throughout the entire city on the Sabbath. Among the exhibitors scattered through the audience were the following: Joseph Stern, of the National theater; Max L. Lebow, of Walnut theater; Charles J. Straehle, of Star theater, and Herman Austerman of Playhouse.

W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, started off the discussion. He told of the good results following the introduction of Sunday shows that he had witnessed in the course of his travels through this country. He promised, in behalf of the Newark exhibitors, that pictures of educational and scientific nature would form the program of the Sunday shows. Mr. Bush also told of the numerous news-pictorials, the Paramount Travel Series and Pictographs, the Pathe colored pictures, and films taken from the classic authors.

Max Simon, a moving picture exhibitor of Passaic, then told of the splendid results Passaic had experienced since picture shows are given there on Sunday. Mr. Simon asserted that crime has been diminished, that hanging-around on the corners has disappeared, that children are brighter in their studies, and that the library has been used more than previously since the advent of Sunday pictures. He emphasized his remarks by quoting from various city officials, whom he had interviewed prior to coming to the meeting.

Then followed remarks on the negative made by members of the organization. Dr. Buerman said that the moral standing of the community is lessened considerably by allowing Sunday shows. He said that, instead of going to church, people would go to the picture shows, if they were allowed to open. Henry Schulte, a Sunday school teacher, declared that moving pictures in general had an evil effect on young minds.

George M. Judd, an active member of the association, contended that Sunday was practically the only day in the week free to the working class of the city. As to the assertion that motion pictures are generally immoral and obscene, Mr. Judd stated that he went as many as three times a week, and had yet to see a picture which he would be ashamed to have his wife and daughter view. Frederick Fisher, answering the declaration that films would supersede church, said: "I am not such a sinner that I must attend church three times a day. Once is sufficient."

At the conclusion of the discussion, the association went on record as opposing Sunday shows, with only two or three dissenting votes.

Boosting the Actors' Fund

In Philadelphia.

THE Philadelphia General Committee for the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund of America has been formed and a big meeting was called for Monday night, March 20, to put through suggested plans for helping the collection of $500,000 in 15 weeks to endow the Actors' Fund. The committee is composed of Sigmund Lubin and Ira Lowry for the film manufacturers; J. C. Smith, F. Day, I. Buxbaum, J. C. Clark and Reynolds Schwalbe for the film exchange men; J. L. Covington of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, publicity manager, Stanley Mastbaum, J. McCready and W. Burbank for theater owners.

Among other committees being appointed by this general committee Mr. Burbank, who is president of a printing establishment, was made chairman for benevolent organizations and Mr. McCready chairman for baseball associations. Mr. McCready is Connie Mack's representative. It is anticipated that Philadelphia will contest strongly with Chicago, Pittsburgh and Boston to make the largest contribution to the campaign fund.

In Boston.

A spirit of rivalry already has been engendered in the largest cities of the country to raise the greatest individual contribution to the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund. With Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia already in the field Boston now has joined heartily in this contest.

With Mayor Curley as honorary chairman, Mr. Moe Mark has begun the campaign in Boston as active chairman. Already several benefits and special affairs of a social character are planned. With Mr. Mack in the organization of the several committees, Mr. J. P. Connolly of the Boston Herald and also president of the Boston Press Club, will be associated.

Mr. Mark, who is proprietor of the Strand theater in Lynn, Mass., will carry the campaign of Boston into that city.

In Pittsburgh.

Girls of Pittsburgh have enlisted in the motion picture campaign for the Actors' Fund and word has been received from Chairman A. W. Cross of Pittsburgh Screen Club that many of the fair citizens of that city are to sell tickets on the streets for various theaters that have agreed to donate a percentage of their receipts to the fund on National Tribute Day, May 15.

THE WEATHER AND THE BOX OFFICE.

A new feature has been added to programs, the handy memorandum calendar issued monthly by Biograph. In addition to the usual analysis of the day's business, each calendar page of the April issue contains a line for recording the weather. The purpose of this feature, suggested by an exhibitor, is to enable the exhibitor to keep a complete record of conditions which can be plotted on a chart to show the development of the year's business.

HARRY POLLARD BUSY.

Harry Pollard wired George W. Lederer from southern California this week that the great weather on the Coast has enabled him to take a view of the U. S. Pacific Battle Fleet, headed for Mexican waters; a Mexican bull fight; all of the huge International Expositions on the Coast, in their entirety; several interiors and exteriors, and has a chartered yacht to take him to some of the remote islands in the Pacific, there to complete the exteriors for "The Pearl of Paradise," the Pollard Photoplay Corporation's first masterpiece, starring Margarita Fischer.

Vitagraph's New Publicity Staff

Engages a Battery of 42-Centimeter Pencil Pushers for News Service Department.

TO meet the constantly increasing demands made by the unusual number of feature films now being released by the Vitagraph Company, together with the fact that the most famous theatrical stars and photoplay favorites are now appearing in these films, a special department has been organized to distribute press material and magazine stories.

Vitagraph Press Staff.

The new organization is known as the News Service Department and the intentions are to have it live up to its title in every sense of the word. The efforts of the News Service Department will not be directed toward obtaining Vitagraph publicity but will aim to render service to all publications, enabling the latter to cater to the needs of their readers in more attractive manner.

With such stars as E. H. Sothern, Edna May, Frank Daniels, Anita Stewart, Charles Richman and others working under the Vitagraph standard, the demand for special press material is constantly growing. New writers engaged to carry the Vitagraph message to all publications. Among the staff is James W. Beckman, former secretary to the late Elbert Hubbard; Garrett Cupp, a well-known newspaper man; Tom Brett and Frank Koch, magazine writers; Dee Selwyn, familiar with theatrical and other press agentry; Raymond Gallagher and others who have already made names for themselves in the world of motion pictures.

An important part of the new service will be to supply publications with the most artistic photographs obtainable. The new department occupies the office of the former publicity department.

Horsley Drops in on New York

Los Angeles Manufacturer Declares Exhibitors Should Join Local Trade Boards—Industry Behind Him in Congress Fight.

EVERY exhibitor should join the Board of Trade in his community, declared David Horsley in his New York offices this week. Mr. Horsley is making one of his weekly, or rather quarterly visits, to the film distributing center, in which he expects to remain until near the end of March, when he will hurry back to Los Angeles to "look after his fences," as the politicians say. As the World already has announced, Mr. Horsley is to contest at the Los Angeles primaries for a place on the Congressional ticket.

The remark about exhibitors joining boards of trade had cropped out casually in the course of a running conversation about the moving picture business in general and Los Angeles conditions in particular. It struck the World man as being one of the best suggestions he has heard in some time. As Mr. Horsley pointed out, membership in his local board of trade will not only keep an exhibitor in touch with the men of his own calling, but it will make him more influential among the men of larger affairs in his town. It will bring to the aid of the picture man in many instances the exact assistance necessary to combat and to negative the periodical assaults of the short-haired women and the long-haired men, the inescapable would-be professional reformers.

Mr. Horsley said the heavy rains during January had somewhat retarded the manufacturers in their work. While the rainfall last year totaled something less than seventeen inches the precipitation for the first month this year alone was twenty inches. In February while for the first three weeks there was no rain, the cloudy weather again interfered with operations—that is, for those manufacturers who did not possess closed studios. The Centaur chief added that he was one of the fortunate ones in the latter respect, as he had transformed his former auditorium into an electric studio.

Mr. Horsley has given up the daily exhibitions of his animals. The interest of the general public in motion pictures was so great that it was found the crowds would not attend the arena, but instead thronged the balconies overlooking the stage that they might watch the actors at work. So the animals are now put through their public paces only on Sundays. Through a unique arrangement of entrances it is possible for visitors to enter the balconies direct without encroaching on the stage. Asked if the presence of strangers did not interfere with or embarrass the actors, Mr. Horsley declared the effect was really the opposite—that players accustomed to an audience really worked better when outsiders were looking on.

Charles Chaplin will make his Mutual debut in pictures made at the Horsley studio. Mr. Horsley said he had offered to the Chaplin company the facilities of his studio until such time as the comedian was provided with a home of his own, and that the offer had been accepted. This was made possible by reason of the rearrangement of the studio grounds. Where formerly four of the five acres of the plant were given over to the Bostock show now the animals are grouped within one acre, leaving four for picturemaking.

"How about production in Los Angeles, Mr. Horsley?" the World man inquired. "Are there more or less manufacturers than a year ago—is the total output as great?"

"I think there is an increase in footage," was the reply. "All the companies that are active are planning for larger output, and there's a lot of films now being produced. You have heard, of course, of the trouble we had during January over the local censorship question. The manufacturers received offers from all around the neighboring country, from communities anxious to have the picture men join them. The difficulties were straightened out, however. All the important factors of the town's business life are with us—newspapers, banks, merchants—all of them."

Mr. Horsley said he had received from all sides offers of assistance in his campaign for Congress—from even the political parties, he admitted with a chuckle. At the coming primaries the two receiving the highest votes will be the candidates. If any one receive two-thirds of the votes cast he is automatically elected. The manufacturer is assured of his support of the 15,000 men and women engaged in the making of pictures alone—and all those they may influence.

Mr. Horsley said for some time he had been impressed with the necessity of the motion picture industry being directly represented in the halls of Congress. He said he had tried hard to induce some one of the many he believed competent to undertake the campaign, but that eventually it had been "wished" on him. He said that while Southern California looked better to him in the summer time, and especially so in the winter months than did Washington, he was going to make the fight. Last summer the Centaur head had entertained Congressmen passing through Los Angeles. Among these were Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, Senator Stone, of Missouri, and Senator Burton, of Ohio. These men had told him that what the picture-industry needed was constructive legislation—the sort that would classify the industry so that it would be immune to attacks like that of censorship; that it needed a standing akin to that of newspapers and books, guaranteed by legislative enactment. "We are open to attack from every long-haired reformer because motion pictures have not been defined in law," he declared.

The district in which Mr. Horsley will make his fight comprises Los Angeles, Santa Monica, Venice, Ocean-Park, Sawtelle and Hollywood. In the latter suburb Mr. Horsley was the pioneer manufacturer. We don't have to take it from Mr. Horsley that he is strong there—it goes without saying.

Raver Has a Studio

It Is at Rockville Center, Long Island, and Is Equipped for Business—Will Have Clubhouse Annex.

ALL future Raver Film Corporation productions, such as "The Witching Hour," "Alabama," "The Hoosier Doctor," "As a Man Thinks," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," and many other Thomas plays will be made in the new Raver studios at Rockville, Long Island. The studio is but a few short blocks out of the village of Rockville Center with every necessary natural bit of scenery within easy distance of the studio.

The studio proper is completely finished with the exception of the installation of lights. The ordinary line of props and scenery is being built and laboratory facilities are being installed. The studio will consist of several buildings and include a plot of ground covering about five acres.

Beside the indoor studio, a large outside stage is being constructed adjacent to the property room for use in good weather. In the construction of the studio the buildings have been arranged with a view of securing the greatest efficiency. Adjoining and connecting with the studio proper is the property building. On the other side of the property room is the large outdoor stage. On the opposite side of the group is the laboratory with its tanks, dry rooms, printers and assembling rooms. Over this is the carpenter's shop and scenic department. In addition to this group of buildings there is an extra store room and a garage which will accommodate five automobiles.

While many splendid propositions were offered Mr. Raver in his search for a studio site, this Rockville Center plot appealed to him more strongly because of its many natural advantages. It is but a few minutes' ride from New York City. It is in the center of a country rich with natural scenery and splendid homes. Everything from the busy hum of factory life and active city streets to the quietness of farm and woodlands are conveniently available.

The fourteen room house which is standing on this site will not be razed. The house will be converted into a clubhouse for the players and directors with a library, lounging room, pool and billiard room, a swimming pool, shower baths and lockers.

Freuler Discusses Brisbane's Speech

Mutual's President Pays His Respects to the Editor and Tells Why He Disagrees With Him.

"ARTHUR BRISBANE reminded me so much of the woman who appeared before the House Committee on Education, during the Federal Censorship hearings in Washington," remarked John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, in alluding to the remarks of the editor at the dinner given recently by the publication committee of the Board of Trade to newspaper men.

"This dear lady, after uttering a long tirade against motion pictures, was asked if she had ever seen a motion picture.

"'No,' she answered, 'but I have heard about them and I know they're awful!'

"Mr. Brisbane, who so vastly entertained us with his views on motion picture censorship, admits that he has only seen three pictures, and that he saw one of these under duress of social obligation. This is a very curious confession to come from Mr. Brisbane. Mr. Brisbane is the editor of one of the greatest papers in the great city of New York. It is also very much a paper of the masses, the great common people. Mr. Brisbane is admitted to be a great editor.

"At the banquet he gave us some very interesting circulation figures concerning the newspaper with which he is allied. It is a repeated statement in Mr. Brisbane's own editorials that they reach I forget how many millions of persons every day. The same people for whom he is writing advice on every subject from baby food to war are patrons of the motion pictures. Probably it is true that the motion picture is the greatest amusement and exerts the greatest influence in the lives of the people who read Mr. Brisbane's editorials.

"Mr. Brisbane, supposedly with his eloquent fingers on the pulse of the people, admits that he has only seen three motion pictures. He owes it to himself, and to the millions of persons for whom he writes, to find out something about the motion picture. He said, among other things: 'I don't care in the least whether the motion picture is censored or not. Its success is based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race.'

"It is painful to be forced to believe Mr. Brisbane is so wholly indifferent on so vital an issue, and one which so deeply concerns the fundamental rights of the human race, of which he is a member, and in which he professes to be so much interested. It is rather inconsiderate of Mr. Brisbane to assume this attitude toward the motion picture, when his power, career and all that pertains to him are based upon the primary rights of a free press, free speech and the right of self-expression.

"If Mr. Brisbane would or could recognize without a biased and distorted view the identity of the rights of the motion picture and the newspaper, he would probably be more interested in the menace of censorship. His opinions on the picture are about as valuable as would be the opinions concerning newspapers from a man who could not read or write. If censorship of the newspaper were suggested to such a man, he probably would say: 'Yes, sure they should be censored. They print awful things about murders, runaway wives, bad girls and burglars.' This man, of course, would be talking on hearsay.

"In view of Mr. Brisbane's statement that the success of the motion picture is based on the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of human race—which, by the way, is in the nature of an indictment of the approximate 80,000,000 people who see motion pictures every week—I wonder how he can quiet his conscience while he gets out a newspaper for this vast army which he charges with being low-browed. They seem to like his papers pretty well. He seems to strike about their gait when he writes. I wonder if there is a dual personality? Perhaps Mr. Brisbane writes for his newspaper with his left hand.

"I would not spend so much valuable time talking about one man's opinions on the motion picture, if he didn't happen to occupy a position of such importance and responsibility to the public. When Arthur Brisbane can be so misinformed or so uninformed about the motion picture, we should be little surprised that there is so much support for censorship or so much public indifference to the primary human rights involved. Perhaps the public may be excused, but Arthur Brisbane ought to know better—and more.

"I should like to take this occasion to express appreciation of the time which he spent with us as guest of honor at the Motion Picture Board of Trade banquet. As an authority and as a writer on many subjects I admire both Mr. Brisbane's expressions and his styles, but for him as a motion picture critic I somehow do not feel the same warmth. His duty to the public should compel him to at least patiently consider the motion picture."

Exhibitors on Screen Comedy

Interesting and Instructive Observations Communicated by Two Readers of the Moving Picture World.

OUR invitation to readers of the Moving Picture World to express their likes and dislikes on the question of screen comedy has resulted in a variety of opinions. We select two from a large number. H. Bradsbury, of Los Angeles, writes:

In reply to your query as to the kind of comedy that suits readers of Moving Picture World, I as a subscriber like the knockdown and dragnet kind, when done cleverly and to a purpose, though. The "Oliver Series" are certainly laugh producers.

I am strong for moving picture comedies and never a day passes I do not attend one or more shows, but believe slapstick comedy will not get the patronage from the classes that it does from the masses, if the prices of admission are raised skyward.

The most interesting and instructive communication on the subject comes from Frank M. Wiltermood, of California, who says:

In a recent issue of The Moving Picture World, W. Stephen Bush discusses "The Mystery of Laughter" in a thoughtful essay and invites the views of his readers on the style of comedy they favor most. In humbly accepting this solicitation for opinions, I offer my own in a modest spirit of attempted helpfulness towards the greatest present need of the cinema industry, first-class comedies. It is my belief, based on many years' experiences inside some of the largest studios in the world and as a constant, almost daily theater-goer for more than a score of years, that stage and screen comedies could well be appraised as being in two classes, artistic and acrobatic, the former apparently depending for success almost entirely on ingeniously-clever caricatures of humanity and surprising, humorous situations, while the latter sort of comedy devolves wellnigh altogether on roughhouse antics of the players

In an hour's talk I had with Charlie Chaplin some time ago I asked him many questions about his art, and he said that most all his actions in a comedy are copied from real life, from people whom he has met in his travels, ranging all the way from a purse-proud millionaire to a tip-seeking barber. "My leaden-footed walk," he stated, "typifies the sore feet of an almost penniless usptart trying to pose as an aristocratic swell, while my attempted smug complacency under the most adverse rebuffs characterizes concurrently that usual human trait that is seen everywhere, in a stranded race track tout or bootblack, to try to appear clever and superior to moneyless surroundings. I am constantly studying people I meet to note their personal idiosyncrasies, and whenever I see any antics that impress me as being comic I mark the eccentricities in my mind and practice them at the studio so as to bring laughs to theater-goers, hence the greater part of my acting is borrowed from real human characters."

This statement doubtless may impress students of cinematography as affording some light on the question of what kind of comedy theater-goers most like to see, and it would thus apparently seem to be that form of comedy that is slightly an exaggeration of peculiar types of humanity, burlesques of men like Micawber, Mr. Pickwick and Lord Dundreary. Opposed to this kind of comedy is that sort known as acrobatic, slapstick productions, wherein the players aim for success through their physical prowess in inflicting violent humorous assaults on their fellow thespians, this variety of fun being designated, of course, as slapstick, which word was first used to typify the action in the century-old Drury Lane yuletide extravaganzas whereby the clown castigates his tormentors with a paddle made of two thin barrel staves nailed to a handle. From these ideas one receives an impression, therefore, that a consideration of the merits of the two kinds of comedy, caricatures and acrobatic, would bring a conclusion that the burlesquing of human eccentricities has a world of odd characters for its illimitable field, while the other sort of comedy, acrobatic, must always be circumscribed by the one narrow, rather antique condition of the infliction of physical pain on an opponent. The wit and humor of Dickens' novels are, as everyone knows, artistically excellent, not through roughhouse, slapstick evolutions of the characters, but because the readers are happily entertained with artistically clever slightly exaggerated portraits of eccentric people in all walks of life.

The producer of comedies seemingly could best serve the theater-owner and his patrons by striving to emulate the example set by Dickens, to make people laugh by holding the mirror up to the Sam Wellers and the Mr. Jingles of the world today, and if a comedy director were to thus aim to put clever caricatures on the screen, and concomitantly avoid physical castigations, he would surely have before him a task large enough to keep him within well-defined lines of artistic endeavor. Mr. Chaplin's wonderful success has been grounded in elements that made Charles Dickens supreme in his work, the creation of humor by the depiction of real, human eccentricities. Any hotel clerk in a large city will tell you that almost daily a shabby genteel seeker after accommodations on credit approaches the desk in much the same loftily-affected style that Chaplin himself would use to wheedle board and room out of caravansary, and so therefore as Chaplin enacts this bluffing character on a theater screen we laugh, because it is a human type, albeit we allow him the privilege to exaggerate eccentricities of the upstart, for amplified merriment.

One answer, therefore, to Mr. Bush's indicated question as to a solution of "The Mystery of Laughter" might be, that first-class, thoroughly legitimate film comedy depends almost entirely on artistic depiction of true types of eccentric humanity, and not on the physical contortions of players. In brief, the best comedy is that which puts on the screen finesse instead of acrobatics.

LEAVES MUTUAL FOR BLUEBIRD.

W. A. Campbell has been appointed manager for Ontario to promote Bluebird Photoplays, with headquarters in Toronto, where he has been manager of the Mutual's affairs. His large acquaintance with Canadian exhibitors and his good record will undoubtedly sustain him in the fast pace he must maintain in his new connection.

Glen Island for Pictures

Peerless Pictures Corporation, a New Producing Company, Buys Famous Resort and Will Erect Studios and Laboratories.

GLEN ISLAND, which for the past quarter of a century has entertained the pleasure seekers of New York City and vicinity, has been purchased by the Peerless Pictures Corporation, of 18 East 41st street, New York City, at a price which, together with the personal property and valuable exhibits on the islands, involved one million dollars.

The Peerless Pictures Corporation has acquired Glen Island for motion picture purposes, and will erect the largest and most complete picture studios and laboratories in this country, on Island Wild, the most southerly of the group, which is farthest removed from the amusement attractions, and which has not formed a part thereof.

While it is purposed to establish the islands as the center of moving picture production in the East, the remaining islands will be continued as an amusement park, and conducted as a high class resort. In the winter an ice palace will provide the public with skating and winter sports with first class music and cuisine. They are within easy reach, being fifty minutes from the heart of New York City, either by boat direct, or by train to New Rochelle.

There are over one hundred acres of land in the five islands, comprising the Glen Island group, which are located about four hundred feet off the New Rochelle shore, and completely surrounded by waters of the Long Island Sound. They are well known as the most beautiful amusement resort in the East. The landscape gardener and nature have vied with each other in producing one of the most picturesque parks in the country. Its parked grounds with beautiful winding asphalt walks, a wealth of fine old shade trees, and rare shrubbery, magnificent lawns, beautified with picturesque flower beds, summer houses and rustic arbors, rare statuary and bronzes, its many lakes and beautiful grottoes, and bathing beach, comprise a perfect paradise of backgrounds for motion picture photography.

There is, probably, nothing like it scenically in America, and yet it is only fifty minutes from the heart of Broadway. Its rocky coast line of mighty boulders affords the grandeur of the stately Maine coast; its seals among the rocks present a replica of the seal rocks of the Pacific; its alligator ponds furnish a reproduction of the Everglades of Florida, and its magnificent Zoo and unsurpassed collection of wild animals bring you into the very heart of an African jungle.

One island carries you into the heart of Europe. "Little Germany" is famous throughout the East; its majestic Starnburg Castle, with its fine masonry and old ivy, are magnificent and is a perfect architectural reproduction. The old Dutch windmill on the "Zuyder Zee" was built in Holland in 1641, and erected on the island by the late John H. Starin.

Another island carries you to the Orient. "Nippon," with its Japanese pagoda, its lillied lagoon and oriental garden, its rustic tea house adorned with wisteria and beautifully clustered tassels; its geisha girls and lanterns, transport you into the land of the midnight sun.

Still another island finds you in the Philippines, with its Morro Castle and Fort, every stone of which was transported on battleships by the United States Government direct from the Phillipine islands.

The Museum of Natural History, founded by the late John H. Starin, at an expenditure of more than one hundred thousand dollars, comprises the finest private collection of relics in the world

Mummies from 332 B. C., Indian relics from the stone age, Egyptian relics and rare antiques; the desk on which Aaron Burr wrote his challenge to Alexander Hamilton; links of the chain stretched by General Washington across the Hudson river during the Revolutionary War; the last cannon fired by General Sherman on his march to the sea; the first fire engine used in New York, and a piano made for John Jacob Astor in 1795, comprise only a few items of this interesting collection.

Just adjacent to Glen Island is Travers Island, the summer home of the New York Athletic Club, and on Davids Island, Fort Slocum, the United States Army reservation, so that the adjacent surroundings are singularly rich with athletic and military settings for picturization.

The officers of the Peerless Pictures Corporation are Albert Clark Case, president; Howard C. Griffiths, vice president and general manager; Emil Offeman, treasurer, and Temple Scott, secretary.

The British Isles have been organized by Mr. Albert Blinkhorn of London, in conjunction with Kineco, Ltd., of Cardiff, and the foreign market will be handled by the Anglo-Peerless Pictures Corporation, of which Mr. Blinkhorn is vice president and foreign manager.

MABEL NORMAND SIGNS WITH NEW YORK.

Mabel Normand, familiarly known to motion picture patrons throughout the civilized world as "Keystone Mabel," will continue as one of the players producing pictures for the Triangle Film Corporation. Miss Normand yesterday (March 17) affixed her signature to a contract with the New York Motion Picture Corporation, one of the corporate factors of the Triangle Film Corporation. For the present Miss Normand will continue as a member of the Keystone company producing this unique class of comedy at Fort Lee, N. J. Whether or not Miss Normand's activities will take a larger field later in the season has not yet been determined. There have been rumors to the effect that the popular comedienne would be found as a member of other organizations. Miss Normand has definitely set at rest these unauthorized rumors in the manner noted above.

BLACKWELL AND ASHLEY WITH WORLD FILM.

Carlyle Blackwell, recently seen in a visualization of Samuel Hopkins Adams' "The Clarion," and whose future was rather undetermined owing to the rumors that after his short term agreement with Equitable expired, he would join another concern, set at rest all rumors this week when he signed a three-year contract with the World Film Corporation for appearance in features of that concern and its ally, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

Another important engagement entered into this week by the World Film Corporation, was the securing of Arthur Ashley for a long period, Arthur Ashley, like Carlyle Blackwell, is of and from the screen. He has appeared in no less than eighty film productions, including "Sealed Lips" in which his work stamped him as a heavy man of more than ordinary ability, and his work in "The Struggle," another Ince picture, procured his World contract. Arthur Ashley will be seen next in "The Grubstaker" opposite Alice Brady.

Pictures or Pulp

The Prohibition Agitation of London Scaremongers—Picture Men Making a Strong Fight.

(From Our Own Representative.)

London, February 26.

THE agitation against imported motion picture films instigated by a well-known group of daily and weekly publications has had to take this week a place in the background, owing to the principal mouthpiece being preoccupied with another daily newspaper in a quarrelsome controversy respecting its German shareholders. The temporary and involuntary truce is giving our importers an opportunity of fortifying their positions and initiating a careful plan of campaign, and of acquainting the public with the facts before it has time to digest the fiction.

No words of mine could ever expose the motive of the agitators in all its base superficiality and narrowness. Its beginning can be traced to the middle of last year when certain members of their staff acquired an interest in a newly formed film producing company. "Stop all foreign films and we shall make a fortune," one could imagine them saying, and forthwith the agitation was opened with harrowing accounts of the work of a great American film trust which drew immense profits from England and paid them into the pockets of German shareholders, a matter which has previously been exploded in the World. But for a more timely excuse for its resumption we must look a little deeper. Besides considering the best means of conserving national wealth the Government is at present considering means for liberating as much shipboard as possible owing to vessels being required for war service. One suggestion towards its consummation is the cutting down of bulky imports, and as everyone knows wood pulp from Sweden, Canada, Newfoundland and the U. S. A. ranks with the bulkiest. This is made here into paper for newspapers and is already marked down for curtailment to the extent that newspaper owners have been notified that the supply of paper will soon be reduced one half.

To a publishing house whose proud boast is that it turns out a different periodical for every hour of the clock each week this reduction may doubtless foreshadow serious inconvenience, and in hopes of a reaction it commissions its "experts," who, by algebraic equations and the measurement of plus in cubic feet, prove conclusively to the public and the government that a Kinema film must be something like the dimensions of a Zeppelin and that, by prohibiting their importation, the government will release miles of shipboard for the transport of its own goods—and paper pulp.

If such an agreement fails to convince incredulous readers it is not too stringent in principle to manufacture something more original. Its newest stunt last week was a suggestion that the trade opposition to its campaign against imported films was that film importers are opposed to the public exhibition of the government's official war films lest their exhibition would entail a sacrifice of their profits. The answer to the former argument propounded at length in "The Times" is found in the fact that the parliamentary committee considering shipboard economy has not yet mentioned films. Their parliamentary mention has so far been confined to the war economies committee.

Meanwhile the exhibitors' association has "officially" entered the field in collaboration with the importers. The latter will shortly issue to the press and public a general statement, compiled by a reputable firm of accountants, showing in figures defying perversion what is actually paid to America for the films she sends us as against the proportion of their cost that remains in England.

Individual letters to the general press have been extensively circulated reflecting the opinions of the heads of different importing houses. The following by Syd. Baber (Famous Players) is typical of many. "A gross injustice is being done to American Film Producers who purchase at enormous cost world's rights of famous British authors' works. Thousands of pounds are being paid to these authors annually for royalties, and when American companies use such good judgment in purchasing the world's rights of famous authors' works they should be allowed to market their productions in the country where such work originated. The film producer speculates with films in the same manner that the stage producer, such as Sir H. Tree, speculates with legitimate plays. They may turn out to be great successes on the screen or equally huge failures. Contracts are entered into between the producers and authors which cover a period of years, and if the producers were to lose the English market they would in the majority of cases make tremendous losses which would rebound on the English authors, as the producers would be unable to fulfill their contracts with them, while the general public would be deprived of an everlasting monument to the greatness of their country's authors."

Selig General Film Releases

Prominent Players Will Be Seen in Multiple and Single Reel Productions.

THE Selig Polyscope Company announces some unusual releases through General Film Company in the near future. "The Devil, the Servant and the Man" will be a multiple-reel feature, released on Monday, April 3. This unusual drama features Kathlyn Williams, supported most ably by Guy Oliver and Lillian Hayward. The scenes in the snow-bound Northland are particularly convincing.

"Wives of the Rich" will be released on Monday, April 10, and features Harry Mestayer, supported by Lillian Hayward and an all-star cast of players. This drama is particularly absorbing, as it handles in an interesting and convincing manner the foibles of high society.

On Saturday, April 15, there will be released by the Selig Company, through General Film service, "The Beauty Hunters," which the Selig Company claims is one of the best short length comedies released in a long time. James Bradbury enacts the leading part.

The Selig Company will release through General Film service on Monday, April 17, the multiple reel feature, "The Three Wise Men." This beautiful production was directed by Colin Campbell and features Thomas Santschi and Miss Bessie Eyton. There is a pathetic appeal in every inch of this wonderful drama, which recalls Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" to the minds of the spectators, but which story is in no way founded upon the Dickens classic. Mr. Santschi and Miss Eyton are supported by Edith Johnson and other stars.

Louis Myll, Comedy Producer

LOUIS MYLL, who directed George Kleine's film comedy, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," which attained country-wide fame over night, must also be credited with conceiving the greater part of the comedy and the credit is also due to him for the ingenuity in constructing the many mechanical devices used in these comedies. Mr. Kleine had some very pretentious ideas regarding "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" and there can be no mistaking the implied compliment he paid Mr. Myll when he placed the production of this big comedy in his hands.

Mr. Myll has had an extended theatrical experience and describes part of it as follows:

"I first started in the show business as cornet player in a theater at the age of eighteen. When 'The Fencing Master' with Dorothy Morton as the star played the theater, I received an offer to go on the road with that company, to play cornet, as they carried eight of the principal musicians. After a couple of seasons on the road, I took a position as manager of F. A. Mills Music Publisher and we published the first Rag Time Cake Walk march called 'Rastus on Parade' and put out many a musical hit.

Louis Myll.

"After that I started leaning toward the theatrical line and somebody told Mr. Belasco I could act. Think of that! Such a story teller! Anyway, my foot slipped and I landed in the show business and Mr. Belasco stood for me for seven years as stage director. I worked on Mrs. Carter's plays, "Zaza," "Du Barry," "Adrea," etc., and was then sent on the road with Mrs. Carter. I also directed "La Tosca," "Camille," "Two Women," "Heart of Maryland," etc.

"I constructed the Electric Amusement Park in Detroit and managed the same during the summer months. I have also played vaudeville over the Orpheum Circuit and also managed Nance O'Neil in vaudeville.

"Mr. Kleine took me with him to Italy to work on 'Du Barry' and I was later engaged by him as manager of productions."

War Pictures from Three Fronts

The Extraordinary Adventures of Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt in Galicia, on the Italian Front and in Serbia.

By W. Stephen Bush.

WHEN I say that Captain Frank E. Kleinschmidt, the famous Alaskan explorer, has stepped forth unscathed even from the Chambers of Death, I would like to be understood in the most literal sense of the words. A man who has been the target of a hundred anti-aircraft guns, a man around whom shrapnel exploded near enough to deafen him, a man who was pursued in a frail launch, the pursuers being aeroplanes and warships, a man who has stood within hitting distance of the infernal "drum-fire" on the Doberdo Plateau, a man who has fallen out of an airship in the densest fog and landed in dense forest surely has flirted with the Grim Spectre.

Taken at the Cannon's Mouth.

Captain Kleinschmidt has something like fifteen thousand feet of wonderful and unheard-of films, taken at the cannon's mouth, entirely without assistance from the press agent.

Austrian U-Boat Coming Home.

All these pictures are remarkable for their genuineness and their power. The horrible, and yet sublime, tragedy of war, is brought fearfully close to us by means of these films. To mention but one scene: We are on the Galician front, on the Austrian side, less than a hundred feet from the nearest Russian trenches. An alarm is sounded and the Austrians rapidly fill up the trenches. We get a glimpse of about twenty men standing in a row behind the trenches firing away, with grim faces and taut muscles. Presently one of the men falls, dropping like a corpse behind the line. An officer takes the gun of the man, who is now carried away on a stretcher. One cannot tell whether he is dead or wounded, and one does not have much time to guess, for the next instant another man has been hit. His face has the look of agony that one sees in dying animals, but he moves and slowly recovers. A third man is hit and, holding his hands to his head, steps out of the line and sits down, evidently controlling his pain and misery with a great effort.

Austrian Launch on Scouting Expedition, Pursued by Italian Warship.

A fourth man drops. In less than two minutes four men out of twenty have been disabled. Presently there is a fierce attack with the bayonet and the cameraman has to retire with the rest. There are scenes showing the submarine campaign in the Adriatic Sea, a very dangerous campaign, indeed, portraying in pictures taken at moments of actual danger the terrible risks which the submarine must be prepared at all times to incur. One understands the perils of submarine warfare much better after seeing these films. Death of course lurks on every front and on sea as well as on land, but nowhere is death more constantly present than on the U-boat. One can well believe, after seeing these films, that the loss in U-boats has been terrible.

Operations on Sea.

The operations of a mine sweeper are shown in most interesting and thrilling detail. Captain Kleinschmidt was out on the Adriatic near Grado with a mine-sweeping craft when he was surprised by Italian destroyers.

"Our craft, consisting of two barges, a scow and a steam launch, no doubt looked very strange and dangerous to the Italians, and, instead of bearing down upon us directly, they lost valuable time in circling about. It was this apprehension on the part of the enemy that enabled us to escape." Mine sweeping is the most ticklish military operation. Each nation has its own mines, of course, and they are constructed to explode on slight contact unless one knows the mechanism. On the mine-sweeping expedition of which Captain Kleinschmidt was a member four big Italian mines were successfully fished out, and they are shown at close range in the pictures. Captain Kleinschmidt saw the barge and the two scows blown up; it was only the launch that escaped.

Adventures in the Air.

Not less thrilling, though of course entirely different, were the Captain's adventures in the air. He flew over Venice, over the bloody Doberdo Plateau, which now occupies so much space in the news from the Isonzo front, and over Belgrade. His flight over Belgrade after the taking of that famous citadel resulted in some of the most remarkable pictures ever seen on the screen. The pictures were taken from the aeroplane and show the warlike scenes on the Danube and on "War Island," which lies near Belgrade. The effects of the Austrian howitzers on the forts are appalling to behold. Parts of the Serbian campaign are depicted with great realism. There are moments when one has to hold his breath as waves of horror and pity sweep over him, and there are thrills at the sight of heroic charges and no less heroic defence. There was more of a revival of old-fashioned and spectacular war in the Serbian campaign than in any other. The sufferings of the soldiers on both sides are told in eloquent pictures: the simple eloquence of realism. There is a complete series of pictures showing how the captive balloons are used in connection with artillery. All these scenes are not only very interesting but instructive as well.

Burning Towns in Russia.

Readers of war news will remember the report of how at Brest-Litovsk and Novogeorgievsk the Russians decided to repeat their tactics of destruction which proved the ruin of Napoleon's army in 1812. It was the good fortune of Captain Kleinschmidt to follow in the wake of the Russians just about that time and obtain pictures of the burning cities and villages which are unparalleled in the history of kinematography.

"You probably wonder," he said to me, "how I was able to get so close to the burning towns. Look at this scene now before I explain further."

"I saw Russians in headlong flight pouring across bridges and rushing along railroad tracks.

"You see," continued the Captain, "the Russians, who are brave and stubborn soldiers, by no means to be despised, are often poorly led and unskillfully handled, Though their rear guard stood up bravely, once they were beaten they failed to destroy railroads and bridges and we were enabled to press them very close. That's why I was able to get these pictures."

The scenes from the Italian front show the work of the wonderful Skoda guns of the Austrian artillery. Several of these monsters are seen in action. Pictures of these guns, showing in detail how they are worked, were not allowed to be shown in Europe. One of these guns is loaded with a projectile weighing 800 pounds. The masking of these guns to protect them from the prying eyes of hostile aviators is clearly shown on the screen.

Hell on Doberdo Plateau.

"By far the bloodiest and bitterest fighting I witnessed," said the Captain, "occurred on the Italian front, especially on the Doberdo Plateau. Here the Austrians are holding three times as many Italians. If you have an idea, however, that the Italians cannot fight, dismiss it from your mind. They certainly are brave, especially their officers, who are always ahead of their companies. With all the chances I had it was impossible to get pictures that do full justice to the situation."

Having seen the pictures of the fighting on the dreaded Doberdo Plateau, I venture to disagree with the Captain.

"What you have seen is terrifying and realistic enough, but I wish I could have taken closer scenes of the famous attack of the Austrian Imperial Chasseurs when they charged Hill 95. Three regiments were almost decimated. Artillery poured in upon the fighting infantry ranks when the Austrians made their first charge and nobody knows whose artillery it was, though most of the shells hit the Russians. When you see life in the trenches behind the plateau and realize that there is not a drop of water on or near the whole plateau, you may begin to realize what fighting on that front means."

It is impossible in mere words to tell what these pictures show. One more word is necessary. Captain Kleinschmidt has by no means neglected the picturesque side and the grim humors of war. We see soldiers and officers playing with young colts, while a mile away the battle is raging; we see dental surgery of the most primitive character and soldiers playing cards, dancing and playing on musical instruments in the short pauses between the harvests of death.

MERGER OF FILM COMPANIES RUMORED.

Story from Chicago of Plans for Consolidation of Some of the Larger Concerns Is Both Affirmed and Denied in New York.

ON Sunday, March 19, the New York Times printed under a Chicago date line a story setting forth that affirmations and denials follow one another as to the truth that may be in a rumored consolidation of film interests. It quoted a report of plans for a sixty-million-dollar corporation which would include in its fold all the financially sound motion picture companies. The statement was made that the organization was to be formed along the lines of the Klaw & Erlanger Corporation.

An interview with "a pioneer film man" represented him as saying that the picture business in recent months has been in an unsettled condition, due partly to the influx of capital. Expenses have been multiplied and salaries boosted. J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph company is said to have admitted that changes are contemplated. Harry Aitken, president of the Triangle, is reported to have admitted a change is on the way. William N. Selig and George K. Spoor also were named in the dispatch as having been dissatisfied for some time with conditions.

A World man made inquiries in New York City and likewise encountered "affirmations and denials." One circumstancial story, however, was to the effect that plans really are on foot for a consolidation of the larger, the financially sound companies, and that the proposed combination has the backing of two of the most prominent banking houses in the country. The statement was made by a man whose standing compels respect. It was later confirmed by another film man who is in an excellent position to know what is going on in the "politics" of the industry.

NEW FILM COMPANY ANNOUNCED.

Gilbert P. Hamilton Will Have Charge of Technical Details—Six Contributing Concerns.

GILBERT P. HAMILTON, who for several weeks has been in New York City, announced just before his departure for his new studio at Round Up, Mont., that on or about May 5 next there would be a new program on the market. Contributing to it would be six companies, three of which will be new concerns. The studios of the six companies will be in different parts of the country.

Mr. Hamilton, who has had wide experience in the film industry, both on the studio and laboratory, as well as the manufacturing side, will be in charge of the technical department of the company. The printing will be done in New York. Mr. Hamilton stated that ample capital already had been subscribed and that he had every reason to believe the company would be able to produce pictures that would be welcomed by exhibitors.

FIRE AT QUALITY-METRO CAMP.

After losing all their clothing and luggage, when their hotel in northern Maine was destroyed by fire, Director Fred J. Balshofer, Harold Lockwood, May Allison and twenty other members of the Quality-Metro Company returned to New York in rough logging costumes which they wore while making the picture. In their quaint costumes the players attracted no end of attention, when they arrived at the Grand Central station, and made their way to their hotels.

Mr. Balshofer piloted the company to a picturesque locale in the Maine woods, eight miles from Corabassett. They worked there for four weeks, completing the exteriors for one production and making a large number for a second one. While engaged in making what they thought would be the last dozen scenes in the woods, their hotel, the Lodge House, caught fire and was completely destroyed.

More than two thousand feet of film was also lost in the fire, which necessitated the company remaining over for re-takes. Considerable raw material was also destroyed by the flames, and the company's wardrobe was practically wiped out, save what they had on their backs. Mr. Lockwood lost three trunks full of clothing, and Miss Allison a like number. Mitchell Lewis, one of the players, lost among other things a gold watch presented to him several years ago at the Players Club.

SIDNEY CHAPLIN RETURNS EAST.

Sidney Chaplin, who recently completed the business arrangements whereby his brother, Charles, was secured by the Mutual chiefs, and who accompanied Charles Chaplin's party as far as Chicago, has returned to New York.

E. B. DUNN REPORTS BUSINESS GOOD.

E. B. Dunn, who has just returned to New York from a tour through New York State, reports that he found business good in the picture theaters. Mr. Dunn added he had been successful in securing many orders for the speed controller.

WHY CERTAINLY.

My Dear Editor—Please accept my correction of the spelling of my name. It is written "Colwell," not "Coldwell." I will appreciate your kindness very much. I noticed the mistake in the comments on "The Yaqui."

Always my very best wishes for the future success of The Moving Picture World. GOLDA COLWELL.

QUEEN THEATER, WILMINGTON, DEL.

All of Its 2,000 Seats Upholstered in Fabrikoid—Inclined Passageways Lead to Balcony.

IN WILMINGTON, Del., there was opened recently one of the most attractive theaters of the East, in fact, the country. It is first class in every detail and its furnishings are of the best. It has a seating capacity of 2,000. While it will be used mostly for moving pictures, it is also adapted for play purposes, having a large stage.

The lobby is out of the moving picture theater class, being much larger than the majority of them, it measuring 22 by 50 feet. The walls are wainscoted with marble to a height of eight feet and caen stone is used above that point. One of the attractive features of the theater is the fact that there are no stairways. From the front entrance on each side a gentle slope leads to the balcony. The interior is strikingly handsome.

The seats are upholstered in Fabrikoid. This material is clean, neat, and gives a luxurious appearance to the theater. It not only adds to the appearance of the house, but also is a decided advertising point for it, with a local and continuous appeal. Every patron wants to feel that the theater he patronizes is sanitary and that the appointments are all that it is possible to make them. Fabrikoid is also waterproof, an advantage which allows it to be washed without injury. This is a feature that will no doubt interest other theater owners.

Universal Ball is Gay Affair

How President Carl Laemmle Loses a Solid Gold Cash Prize—Little Lord Fauntleroy Violet Mersereau Wanders About on a White Horse.

CARL LAEMMLE almost won a solid gold cash prize at the Universal bal masque at Grand Central Palace on the night of March 18, and the morning of another day. But the truth leaked out. An aged woman burdened with a baby in a basket was found to be none other than the president of the Universal Company, and it had been stipulated that men, however they might appear for the moment, were ineligible for the pieces of gold. Ringmaster Nat Rothstein regretfully barred President Laemmle from competition, and the masque moved merrily, noisily onward.

The ruling in the case of President Laemmle established a precedent that could not be violated for the benefit of other female impersonators, though they included so important a personage as R. H. Corcoran. No less trustworthy an authority than H. H. Van Loan—white wigged and debonair, looking for all the world like a titled fortune hunter in a Universal melodrama—stood on a chair in the press box, regarded the kaleidoscopic figures on the floor and said, "Somewhere out there I believe Mr. Corcoran is impersonating a ballet dancer." Efforts to verify this report were fruitless. Mr. Corcoran remained under cover, failing to compete for the pieces of gold, or as Mr. Van Loan will have it, the "bucks."

As the Evening Progressed.

Beerbohm's orchestra and Master of Ceremonies Rothstein, clad in the striking garb of a ringmaster, occupied the platform on the north side of the Palace. Whenever anything of special moment was about to happen—a quite frequent occurrence—Mr. Rothstein used a megaphone to catch the ear of the crowd. The dancers gathered to regard Ida Schnall (Undine), who presented an exotic young woman in swimming attire suitable to the over-heated tropics; they formed in lines to welcome Violet Mersereau in a Little Lord Fauntleroy costume and seated on a white horse, led by Paul Gulick and Mr. Van Loan; they applauded the "Song of the Nations," given with the spectacular aid of flags lowered through a maze of colored streamers, and then they danced again until the ringmaster raised his megaphone, the equivalent of cracking a whip.

All Out for the Grand March.

Miss Mersereau on her white charger led the grand march. President Laemmle, in the costume already noted, followed with Mary Fuller, appearing quite unlike herself in a blond wig. Joe Brandt chose to be a Cossack officer in full dress uniform; the moderness of Mr. Gulick was concealed beneath a periwig and the satin and furbelows of a George Washington; George U. Stevenson and Walter K. Hill displayed academic caps and gowns; M. H. Hoffman became a Spaniard; Robert Doman went to the far East for his model; Mrs. Van Loan appeared in a stunning Gaby Deslys costume, and Leon J. Rubinstein escorted Betty Lawson, who was clad as an Indian maiden, typifying "Hiawatha," the first Laemmle release.

There were Bluebirds in full plumage, Red Feather girls less completely protected against the cold, Spanish dancing girls, Apaches, clowns, importations from the Sultan's family, and others whose costume would not have appeared inappropriate in a Winter Garden show. The colorful procession tapered off into the black and white of twentieth century convention.

Ringmaster Rothstein selected Tracy Lewis as chairman of the press committee to award the prizes. He allowed Mr. Lewis to scrutinize the envelopes containing the solid gold, and admonished him to be careful in guiding the deliberations of the jury—in other words, to look only at the costumes and ignore their contents, lest individual preferences work an injustice. The consideration of Mr. Lewis and his committee resulted in the following selections in the order given: Violet Mersereau, Betty Lawson, Edith Roberts, Gertrude Cameron, Helen Adams, Violet Mack, Mrs. Nat Rothstein, Clarise Drexler, Louise Gately, Florence Roberts and Louise Alexander.

Florence Lawrence, Rosemary Theby, Hobart Henley, every one in fact in anyway connected with the Universal organization in the East, and hundreds who were not, spent Saturday night and Sunday morning at the Palace. Among the guests were Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss, Fulton Brylawski of Washington, Oscar Eagle, Joseph Smiley, Samuel Trigger, Julian Solomon, Hy Mayer and Pat Sullivan.

One of the enjoyable features of the evening was the appearance of Helen Coyne in a song and dance number, the music for which was written by Emma R. Steiner. It is called "Florence Lawrence."

Horsley Releases for April

Output Embraces Two Five-Reel Features and Four Cub Comedies.

DAVID HORSLEY productions to be released through the Mutual Film Corporation exchanges during the month of April offer some interesting announcements. The output for that period is comprised of four one-reel Cub comedy subjects and two five-reel features labeled Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition.

The Cub comedies are scheduled for release April 7, 14, 21 and 28 and feature George Ovey in each case. Director Milton Fahrney, in charge of production of this brand, has lately been introducing an element of the spectacular and thrill in the Cubs, with very fine results. In the April releases he has carried on this idea even a little further than before, with such success that studio advices herald his latest pictures as the funniest he has staged since his alignment with Mr. Horsley. The first of the Cubs of this nature to come along in April is called "The Winning Punch." In it George Ovey's feats of comedy are said to surpass those which made his latest appearances so successful. On the strength of this information great things are expected of the April releases.

Of the two five-reel subjects, the first to be offered is "The Leopard's Bride," the release date of which is April 15. In every regard it shapes up as an excellent photoplay. The author of the story, Theodosia Harris, has evolved an interesting romantic drama, and by setting it in picturesque India provided plenty of opportunity for scenic beauty, of which every advantage was taken.

To enact it an excellent cast was chosen. Margaret Gibson, one of the most beautiful women in motion pictures, and a highly accomplished actress, and William Clifford, a popular leading man, have the leading roles and feature positions. Their supporting company is made up of well-known photoplayers, including Brooklyn Keller, Nan Christy, Frederick Montague, Fred Goodwins, Edward Gordon and Paul Machette.

One of the features of the production that will doubtless arouse comment is the work of several trained leopards of the Bostock animal collection. With their help, several unusually thrilling scenes have been obtained.

"The Conscience of John David" is the title of the month's second five-reel feature. The release date is April 24.

Crane Wilbur is featured in "The Conscience of John David," which is said to be in every way as big a photoplay as his preceding subject, "The Love Liar."

The star is also the author of the play. He has chosen a psychological theme and by judicious and sympathetic treatment has skillfully woven a story of deep dramatic purpose. The action, brought up to the minute, transpires for a good part of the picture in the high circles of social life. The investiture is entirely as pretentious as in any previous David Horsley release in which Wilbur has appeared.

In the leading role of a spendthrift millionaire later reduced to a menial position and then rising above the ashes of his first failure, Wilbur has a role that is well suited to his capabilities. In his support he is fortunate, for he has in his cast such players as Mae Gaston, Alice Rinaldo, Frederick Montague, John Oaker, Louis Durham and Francis Raymond.

With such features and comedies David Horsley productions are sure to gain added prestige.

RECENT ADDITIONS TO V-L-S-E FORCES.

C. L. Kendall, formerly of the Universal booking service, Cincinnati, has joined the V-L-S-E forces of that city in a similar capacity. Mr. Kendall's experience in the booking department extends over a period of ten years.

Announcement is also made of the promotion of L. H. Wâtrous of the Toronto sales forces, to the position of Manager of the Montreal sub-office, succeeding Mr. McCullum. Manager W. C. Gookin has named R. O. Caveness to cover the territory over which Mr. Watrous formerly held jurisdiction.

J. A. Conant has been transferred from the Cincinnati sales department to that of the Cleveland office, and Marx S. Nathan, formerly of the Kleine feature service, is now a member of the Washington sub-office of Philadelphia.

George T. Pardy has joined the publicity staff of the V-L-S-E at the New York headquarters. Mr. Pardy is well-known in the journalistic world, having worked in an editorial capacity on leading newspapers of Chicago, New Orleans and New York.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

ONE of the criminal courts of Greater New York has held for sentence under heavy bail a get-rich-quick man who has been making a business of boosting poor-paying picture houses in order to tempt unsuspecting investors to buy them out. The accused in this case has pleaded guilty, and his fate is dependent solely upon the extent of punishment that should be dealt him. We hope that when the time for sentence comes the court will have a full scope of the offense committed and give the accused all the law will allow. Two years, or more, ago the operations of such people were commented upon at length and for some time the "bum boosters," as they are known to the reputable motion picture exhibitors, kept under cover. The game is but a species of the old-time "green goods" swindle. Sharpers will make search for picture houses which, for various reasons, have become unprofitable to the legitimate owners and secure them at a very low price—in fact, at bargain sale prices. A few dollars are spent in renovating the place and for a week or two programs are presented that occasion considerable and favorable neighborhood comment. Then comes the "padding" of the house and on the night the unsuspecting investor is to make his inspection he finds the house crowded and people outside awaiting admission—all bogus patrons, at the expense of the schemers handling the gold brick. The investor loses no time in parting with his money. The "bum boosters" snatch it with equal alacrity and proceed to locate another plant for dupes.

As P. T. Barnum said, "One is born every minute"; and, in view of the wide publicity that is given in modern times to games of this character, one is almost tempted to congratulate, rather than condemn, those who succeed in "putting one over" on the foolish investors that allow themselves to be duped. In fact, the courts have frequently condemned dupes of get-rich-quick and green goods schemes. But the injury resulting from the operations of these "bum boosters" are so far-reaching in their virulent effect that they eat into the vital interests of legitimate people in the business who have no recourse at law against the guerrillas. The unlawful schemers keep alive motion picture places that should be allowed to die. They put the places into the hands of people who are either incapable, or unfit, to handle them. They help to injure the reputation of the motion picture business as a whole and jeopardize the interests of bona fide exhibitors who have genuine places to sell but are unable to realize what they are entitled to on account of the effect made by operations of the "bum boosters." It is for this reason that the legitimate motion picture interests hope that whenever opportunity affords the courts will impose the extreme penalty upon all the "boosters" as a protection to the legitimate industry.

Anyone traveling from one of the many studios to another has realized that the number of photoplayers working in many of them has been considerably reduced during the past several weeks. The effect has been especially felt by those known as "extras." Naturally the cry of "What is the matter?" is heard, and it is quite interesting to listen to some explanations offered by some people who have as much conception of the real solution as the youth who gets in no closer touch to the moving picture business than his five cents will take him. In spite of the fact that there are twenty thousand, or more, moving picture houses in operation in the United States, many of the old line theatrical people will tell you that the reason of the dullness is that the pictures have seen their best days and are losing their hold. Of course, with these people, "the wish is father to the thought." A most amusing solution was offered by an actor in a well-known theatrical rendezvous the other night. He said, "It is not a difficult problem to solve. You see, nearly all the theatrical profession have been until recently unalterably opposed to motion pictures and motion picture work. I speak of the professional people—people who have established themselves upon the stage. For instance, myself. Until a year ago I would as soon consent to drive a truck as I would to pose for moving pictures. Since that time I have radically changed in my opinion. Now the people who have been appearing in moving pictures during their ascendency have become worn out, as it were. The public is tiring of their faces and their work, and the producers of the pictures now find themselves obliged to turn to the stage for new players. As I once did, the professional people hesitate about adopting the new field of employment, but they are gradually falling into line, and it will not be long before all studios will have full forces again."

Can you beat that for conceit? Here is a one-year-old convert who knows it all and his fertile brain has solved (?) the problem. He occupies the same position that many others in the business do. After playing parts in a couple of pictures and getting a glimpse at moving picture studio work, they feel qualified to not only direct a picture but operate an entire plant. That is why there are so many picture-producing companies in existence. It is not because there is a market for the pictures, but because so many conceited and over-ambitious individuals feel that the market needs them!

A veteran producer said the other day, "Most people look upon motion picture studios as mints. They are not supposed to have a lull in operations. For several weeks many studios have been rather quiet, but this is not unusual. It is not a surprise to the old-timers. Those who are most impressed by the conditions are those who become interested in the motion picture business during a comparatively recent period. Bear in mind that the supply of new pictures to the thousands of picture houses throughout the country goes on uninterruptedly, so that there is something doing, in spite of the apparent halt in the wheels of the industry. You cannot judge the operations of a company by the appearance of its studios at this season. A studio may be absolutely idle and the forces working in more advantageous locations in the South. You know in the winter time all the leading producers hike to that part of the country until weather conditions permit full operations at home. Don't let any of these stage people fool you into the notion that the photoplay is on the wane. All the picture theaters are running on full schedule time and new houses are building so fast it is hard to keep track of them."

"I have heard rumors of late," said the writer, "that there is a tendency on the part of producers to curtail expenses."

"Well, I guess you got in pretty close touch with the right dope there," said the veteran. "I have been expecting that for some time. But get the right idea: this curtailment is not a general one. It applies more particularly to salaries paid the players. You see the desire of some companies to get the services of players employed by other companies became so keen that salaries have attained what may be termed fictitious values. I believe that many companies have come to the conclusion that expenditures in this direction have reached the top notch. I have heard from several quarters that many companies are feeling their way towards establishing plans by which the actual value of a player to them may be more definitely determined. I mean that in arriving at the value of a player the management will not be as much influenced by the name or ability of a player as it will by the player's money-making power on the screen. The Charlie Chaplin case perhaps explains the situation better than any other illustration. As actors his superior, both on the stage and on the screen, are legion, but as a money-winner he outclassed anything in the history of the theatrical profession during the past year. The players' salary list is one of the greatest sources of expense and really the only one on which retrenchment can be figured. The staging of pictures is also an expensive proposition, but the sharp competition between the numerous companies in the field precludes any attempt at retrenchment in that direction. Indeed, the staging of many pictures has as much to do with their success upon the screen, if not more so, than the work of the players. This rumored retrenchment, so I am informed, applies only to the top notchers in the business."

An old photoplayer, when told of what the veteran had to say, said he had heard rumors to the same effect, but they had not disconcerted him because he had never been fortunate enough to get a startling salary. "What he says is logical," said the player. "I am not the least envious of my more fortunate brethren and wish them all kinds of luck, but I have had grave doubts of the ability of some companies to keep going under the stupendous salary lists they have shouldered to get control of certain players. Why, some of my old friends are earning under contract from three to four times more in pictures than they received during their most successful career on the stage. One I have in mind never earned in his life more than $500 a week for a season of thirty to forty weeks, but in pictures has been getting close to $100,000 a year, and he is not Charlie Chaplin. That is a big individual item for one payroll."

AUSTRALIAN NOTES

THE two Australian pictures mentioned in my last letter have been released. Neither were up to the standard of imported films. The first was a J. C. Williamson four-reeler, a screen visualization of the famous stage comedy "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford." As on the stage, all the fun was in the dialogue, as a screen comedy it fell very flat. The leading parts were taken by Fred Niblo and Josephine Cohan.

"Pictures as they shouldn't be" is the best way to describe the other production. It is a war drama by a new company, and is entitled "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell." The cast included some of the best-known stage notabilities in Sydney, and yet the finished picture is everything it should not be. The acting is the worst I have ever seen in any Australian subject. Of course, because of the story, the production is having a very successful run. Perhaps this is all the company thought of.

The firm of Higgins Brothers, with head offices in this city, produced a few subjects about a year ago. Since then the chief partner has been on an extensive trip through the United States, and it is now stated that on his return the company will take up the filming of high class features for direct release through American exchanges.

Another new company, the B. E. Picture Producing Company, is at present engaged on a picture to be released next month. At present no details are available, but I hope to give more information next letter.

The latest stage concern to break into the motion picture game is the George Willoughby Dramatic Company. They will produce features, from original scenarios by Australian writers.

Only last letter I stated that the Metro Pictures Corporation had no agents in this country. Last week the Co-operative Film Exchange, which already controls World Features, announced that they had secured the Metro pictures. The first to be shown will be "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," which will be screened at the new Australian Photoplay Theater, one of the finest in Australia.

"The Mirror," the foremost Sydney weekly paper, recently conducted a Photoplayers Contest. The winners were as follows:

Drama—Henry Walthall, Mary Pickford, 1st; Maurice Costello, Marguerite Clark, 2nd; Harold Lockwood, Florence LaBadie, 3rd.

Comedy—Charles Chaplin, Mabel Normand, 1st; Roscoe Arbuckle, Fay Tincher, 2nd; Ford Sterling, Mary Pickford, 3rd.

I may state that this is the first contest of its kind yet held in Australia.

The Palace theater, which is one of the oldest "legit" houses in Sydney, is opening this week to photoplays again with "The Juggernaut," Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature. Australasian Films, Limited, have the rights for Australia and are charging 3, 2 and 1 shilling (75c, 50c and 25c) admission. The Palace theater had shown several famous pictures during the last year, including "Judith of Bethulia" and "Hypocrites."

William Fox Photoplays (Australasia), Limited, has been formed with Lieutenant James P. Anderson as manager. The new firm will act as sole distributing agents of William Fox productions in Australia. I had the pleasure of being present at a private exhibition of several subjects, namely "Carmen," "Samson," "The Kreutzer Sonata" and "The Plunderer." Leading Sydney professional men, including several members of Parliament, were present, and also many theatrical managers and artists. "Carmen" is a splendid picture, and was loudly applauded. Theda Bara deserves much credit for her fine interpretation of "Carmen." William Farnum gained many new admirers by his fine work in "Samson" and "The Plunderer." The announcement by the J. C. Williamson Company that they would regularly show these features at one of their theatres in Sydney has caused quite a sensation in the moving picture world here. The Theater Royal has been chosen as the place of screening, and it is notable that this house has played "legit" ever since its opening, over forty years ago, with the exception of about three weeks, when in September last, the Panama Exposition pictures were shown. The rates of admission will be 3 shillings, 2 shillings and 1 shilling (75c, 50c and 25c). "Carmen" will be the first attraction, and will be supported by a program of small pictures. Each feature will run for one week only, regardless of popularity.

"The Warning," the five-part Equitable feature, is at present breaking all attendance records in Sydney. Being widely advertised before its first presentation at the Crystal Palace theater, it became well-known to all picture-goers, and the result is crowded houses wherever shown.

Features shown here during the past three weeks include "The Labyrinth" (Equitable). This picture, like other dramas by the same company, had a very successful run, being retained for an extra week at the Lyric theater. The "train wreck" in this play deserves special mention, especially when no train was used. "Kilmeny," by Morosco, featuring Lenore Ulrich; "Her Triumph," with Gaby Deslys; "After Dark" (World) with the Sydney photoplayer, Alec B. Francis, and "The Cub" (World).

TOM S. IMRIE.

Sydney, Australia, February 14, 1916.

"IRON CLAW" WARDROBE EXPENSIVE.

Pearl White, the daring heroine of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine," who is now starring in "The Iron Claw," the new Pathe serial, has been equipped with no less than thirty-four gowns, thirteen suits, eleven cloaks and coats, innumerable hats and other accessories costing the Pathe Company $25,000, a record sum even in these days of extravagantly produced screen plays. Miss White declares she will do better work in "The Iron Claw" than in any of her previous successes. "To be well dressed is half the battle," she says, "and I know I can take care of the other half."

One of the most striking of Miss White's gowns is one of sapphire blue sequins on shaded green and blue chiffon, bound at the edges with silver ribbon and trimmed with small silver balls. The skirt is of sequins, finished with an eight-inch flounce of blue net and hemstitched in silver. The bodice is of sequins with draped tulle sleeves. This creation cost $1,000, and while wearing it Miss White is required to struggle with the villain down a flight of stairs. Ten dollars should be a good price for it after the "take."

Another sartorial triumph is an afternoon gown of dark blue Georgette crepe trimmed with ruffles of old blue taffeta and dark blue ribbon. French rosettes of dark blue and silver tassels provide a further trimming for the bodice which has a deep white chiffon collar, trimmed with Krimmer fur.

A sapphire blue chiffon velvet evening coat, worn by the peerless Pathe star in another episode, should make the fair members of the audience gasp at its gorgeousness. It is trimmed with solid gold ornaments set with jet. Another masterpiece of the modiste is a Russian dark blue chiffon velvet suit with a cape edged with Krimmer fur and collar and cuffs of the same material.

Some of the costumes will be worn by Miss White only in one scene. After the camera handle has been turned on them for a few minutes they will have served their purpose as far as the Pathe Company is concerned.

MAINE THEATERS, INC., BUILDING ANOTHER HOUSE.

Another high class moving picture theater will soon be opened by the Maine Theaters, Inc., of Rockland, Me. The new house will be in Biddeford, Me., at the corner of Alfred and Bacon streets, and will have a seating capacity of 1,300. The Maine Theaters, Inc., already operate ten photoplay palaces.

GLADYS BROCKWELL BACK.

Miss Gladys Brockwell has returned to work at Universal City, and will be seen in leads with the Robert Leonard Company, working principally under the direction of David Kirkland. Miss Brockwell is a favorite at the big film city and her many friends were delighted to hear this clever actress had been re-engaged. Her first work under the present arrangement will be the lead in "Their Wedding Night."

LONDON TRADE TOPICS

"THE Battle Cry of Peace" has been shown to the trade and press under the auspices of the Vitagraph Company and under the new title of "An American's Home." The fact that British audiences are already war-hardened to a certain extent will not shear this Blue Ribbon of its dominating power. It has already been eulogized by staff officers of the army as a picture that will effectually stimulate recruiting wherever exhibited. The main idea of the production is, however, not exactly new to us, having been previously exploited in a stage play of five or six years ago entitled "An Englishman's Home."

A clumsy anachronism is being noticed and pointed out by many people in the Famous Players film, "The Moth and the Flame." In the first reel the girl receives a telegram from Fletcher upon the identical form it was despatched and with the postage stamps, tendered in prepayment at a place more than a hundred miles away, adhering to it.

Harold M. Shaw, producer of the first subject issued by the London Film Company, "The House of Temperley," and subsequently of "Trilby" and "England's Menace" among others, has severed his connection with that company and will shortly journey to the United States.

Among a certain set of people in London it has become a fad to attend the private trade shows of the different film companies, says a writer, and these faddists have been given the name of "first-filmers." There is no gainsaying this assertion. Not that the "first-filmers" have the remotest connection with the trade. They watch the announcements of manufacturers and agents and turn up at the trade shows in such large numbers that very often the bonafide viewer or exhibitor has to stand. At the show the other day of the new Hepworth Pinero picture a welcome expedient was found in numbering and reserving seats for all members of the trade likely to attend.

The Hepworth Co. by the way has just completed another visualization of a Pinero play. This is Sir Arthur's famous comedy of theatrical life, "Trelawney of the Wells." The Turner Films, Ltd., associated with the Hepworth Company, also announce this week the completion of a drama of slumdom called "Doorsteps." Florence Turner with Henry Edwards opposite take the two chief characters.

The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies has once more been taking stock in his motion picture department. His most recent statistics show that during the year 1915 disaster overtook a larger proportion than usual of motion picture enterprises, there being an excess of 150 companies compelled to retire from business. To counter balance this there were only 53 new registrations, the aggregate capital amounting to approximately $2,150,000. In 1914 there were just over 300 new companies incorporated with a combined capital of over $12,000,000, and since the inception of the industry there has been a total of 1,887 separate concerns registered under the limited liability laws involving a total capital of nearly $60,000,000.

Pathe Freres are following the "Elaine" serial in Great Britain with its shorter successor, "The Girl of Lost Island," released in the States under the title, "Neil of the Navy." The practice of rechristening foreign films shipped to Britain does not as a rule find much favor with the London agents of manufaeturers except in the case of a different language making it necessary. It savors too much of the obsolete theatrical strategem of touring an unsuccessful American play in England under a new name to confuse critics and reviewers. The newest Universal serial, "Graft," comes to us as "The Mills of Greed," while the current serial from the same house, "The Purple Iris" first saw the arc-light in America with the designation of "Under the Crescent."

While still cherishing its grotesque ideas of foreign film prohibition the London scare press never loses an opportunity to attack the home industry—or those parts of it in which it is not interested—and if the opportunity is not periodically present it never disappoints the public by failing to manufacture one. The London County Council has under consideration a proposal to place all Sunday kinema performances in the Metropolis under the control of the National Sunday League, an organization for the provision and control of suitable Sunday entertainments in the city. In commenting upon this, the newspaper in question infers in customary trend of its own thoughts that the change is due to managers of moving picture theaters falsifying receipts upon those occasions when their doors have been open to aid the different charities. Fortunately, for the paper, the accusation is a general one and not directed at any particular hall or individual.

The truth of the impending change is, however, recorded in the proceedings of the London County Council and is purely and simply on account of the ability and experience of the National Sunday League to organize Sunday entertainments upon an extensive scale, and furthermore is in deference to a long-standing suggestion of the Exhibitors' Association. Under the new arrangement all Sunday exhibitions in London would in future be given under the auspices of the League and after the payment of expenses the entire profits would be devoted to charities approved by the Council.

Two cases of particular interest to the export trade recently occupied the attention of the courts. The first concerned the British rights of the film, "The World, the Flesh and the Devil," in which Mrs. Laurence Cowen sued the Ideal Film Renting Co. for breach of contract. The film was originally owned by the McEmery Syndicate and from them Mrs. Cowen purchased world's rights except North America. She entered into an agreement with the Ideal Company to exploit the film in this country upon a twenty-five per cent. commission basis and her claim arose out of an allegation that this company ceased to advertise the film and instructed their agents not to secure any further bookings after Sept. 14 last. She contended that her agreement meant that the company must exploit the film so long as copyright lasted or until public taste was satiated. Subsidiary issues to the same claim were the surrender of copies and contracts and payment of money due. As a set-off against the latter the defence was that £100 had already been paid in financing another production of Mrs. Cowen's. Judge Neville in his decision said Mrs. Cowen was entitled to a statement of receipts, but entered no further judgment, leaving both parties to pay their own costs of the action.

A similar claim was heard in the King's Bench Division, where Godfrey V. Z. Phillips sued Paul Mayer for the rescinding of an agreement to buy a film, "Wild Game Hunt in the Soudan," and for damages for breach of contract. The evidence showed that the film was not original nor exclusive and when shown at the London Opera House previous to the war was objected to because some of the scenes had been seen before. Judge Bailhache assessed Mr. Phillips damages at £250 subject to the payment of £100 balance of account to Mr. Mayer.

John D. Tippett, managing director of the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, has sold the Williamson submarine series of motion pictures to Edward Laurillard of the New Gallery Kinema in Regent street. To commemorate the successful run of these pictures at the Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Tippett last Wednesday invited a party of novelists, literateurs and pressmen to luncheon at Pagani's. The object of the function, to quote Mr. Tippett, was to act as a precursor of closer and more amicable relations between American producers and British authors. Dr. Charles announced on behalf of the Trans-Atlantic and Universal Companies that Mr. Tippett had arranged with the Society of British Authors to pay royalties upon work used instead of a lump sum as heretofore and for the reversion of the rights to the author again after the elapse of a specified period. Charles Garvice, probably the most widely read writer of light literature in England, welcomed the concession as one that would appeal to all authors, and W. L. George, another well known novelist, remarked that authors working for the screen would have to change their ideas considerably, as at present most of them seemed to be writing on the theme, "Why am I, what I am, and if I were not what I am, why should I not be?" A good theme for a film story, observed Mr. Garvice.

Mention of the Society of Authors recalls that at the last meeting of its Cinema Sub-Committee, exception was taken to the large number of middlemen or intermediaries that were being placed between the manufacturer of motion pictures and the public. According to the secretary, the consequence was that both in America and England royalties upon sales and leases of films were being unfairly curtailed. A new form of contract between author and manufacturer was suggested as a remedy, but it is hoped the arrangement outlined in the foregoing paragraph will be adopted by all manufacturers, thus obviating further disputes.

The new shipping regulations imposed by the American shipping and freight agencies in regard to the package of film exports in sealed metal cases (described in a recent issue of the "World") have occasioned considerable delay in recent shipments of negative and positive stock from New York.

The second series of the official war films of the British Army in France and Belgium arrived in town last week, and are certainly a much better contribution than the first series. They depict in graphic reality the shelling and destruction of an enemy's blockhouse, a vivid panorama of devasted Ypres; pleasing pictures of the Prince of Wales in action; the use of a war invention, the "sniperscope," and other convincing phases of the ghastly struggle. From the American view, this series is of particular interest, for the concluding parts illustrate some of the Canadian forces in action. And one glance at the screen is sufficient to prove its terrible reality. Closer views of the fifth battalion of the Canadian Infantry and Princess Patricia's Light Infantry going into action are included.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

The film manufacturer has invaded Uncle Sam's farthermost possession and January saw the formation of the Cines Manila, the first manufacturer of films in the Islands. The managing director is E. M. Gross, a cinematograph man of a decade of experience in the Orient.

The company's first work was the dramatization of "El Filibusterismo," one of the novels of Jose Rizal, the author-martyr of the Filipino people. Rizal was executed in Manila in 1896 and his execution really started the revolt against Spain which culminated in the arrival of Dewey's fleet and the American troops. Mr. Gross last year produced the first of a series of novels by Rizal, "Noli Me Tangere," and it is still running to capacity houses in the theaters of the Islands. "El Filibusterismo" is a sequel to "Noli," and an even greater success for this picture is predicted.

The Cines Manila has its own troupe of carefully trained Filipino actors, and in the production of "El Filibusterismo" has used half a dozen of the leading actors of a Spanish troupe which was playing in Manila on a round trip of the world.

The company is the only manufacturer of film in the Philippines and expects to specialize on Philippine scenic topic and dramatic film, occasionally producing a historical drama.

BLEECKER HALL SECURES NEW WAR FILMS.

New film angles on the great European war are presented in a new collection of films which Bleecker Hall, the cameraman, recently brought back from Liverpool. Some of these were taken by Mr. Hall himself, and others are from negatives taken by the official photographers on the eastern front, the exclusive rights to which have been secured by the Hippodrome Film Company, 110 West Fortieth street, New York, which will present them to the exhibitor under the title "At the Front with the Allies."

Thomas Meighan With Lasky

THOMAS MEIGHAN, who has come rapidly into popularity as one of the leading members of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play studio organization, according to announcement made last week, is to be featured soon in several elaborate productions. Few players having achieved exceptional success on the dramatic stage—for Mr. Meighan was well known to Broadway audiences for several years before he went with the Lasky company—have been able to so quickly adapt themselves to photoplay acting as has Mr. Meighan.

Thomas Meighan.

Following his most recent big role as the revenue officer in the Lasky production, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," Mr. Meighan has begun work in leading support of Blanche Sweet in the picturization of "The Sowers." In this production he will appear as Paul Alexis.

Mr. Meighan has had an interesting career. He was born in Pittsburgh and during his school years he achieved considerable prominence as an athlete. Despite the wishes of his parents, Mr. Meighan cherished a desire to go on the stage. His first engagement was with Henrietta Crossman. Just previous to joining the Lasky company, last summer, Mr. Meighan had one of the principal roles in the original production of the melodrama "On Trial." His first appearance in a photoplay production with the Lasky Company, was as Burton Temple in "The Fighting Hope," a Lasky-Belasco production. Subsequently, he appeared in "Blackbirds," "Out of Darkness," "The Secret Sin," "Puddin' Head Wilson," and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

Jack Dillon, Vogue Director

"SLAPSTICK with a Reason" is Jack Dillon's religion. He is the director of one of the Vogue comedy companies, and has few equals when it comes to cramming laughs into film in a compact series of superlatively comical plots and actions.

Further, Mr. Dillon is resourceful. He will not permit weather conditions or anything else to delay his output of mirth-creating pictures.

Jack Dillon.

During the recent weeks when southern California was held rigidly in the grip of inclement weather, Jack Dillon was there behind the camera—sometimes in front of it—with little "Brownie" (W. J. Brown) industriously cranking to register every atom of fun that was going on before the lens.

Mr. Dillon conceived the idea of making a motion picture of a cinema production, giving to the public a precise idea as to how the films are made for the purpose of amusing and entertaining the millions of people who patronize the motion picture theaters.

This one-reel Vogue comedy is called "More Truth Than Poetry," featuring Russ Powell, Priscilla Dean and Arthur Moon in the important roles; and, aside from being highly amusing, it will be of instructive value to moving picture fans who are interested in knowing just how a picture is produced. This comic reel was released on the Mutual program, March 12.

GERMAN TRADE NOTES.

THE latest effort toward talking-pictures had its inaugural at the Union theater, Friedrich Strasse in the form of a film opera. The Deutsch Lichtspier Opera Company screened Wagner's "Lohengrin," using in the main roles such first-class opera singers as Elisabeth Boehm van Endett, Frieda Langendorff and Felix Dahn. The opera was taken under the baton of Director Hermann Stange of the royal German Landstheater, Prag, who is throughout the picture shown directing in a small frame at the bottom of the film. At the performance singers hidden in the darkened room are substituted for the originals in the film. The film has not made a very favorable impression for numerous reasons, chief among which are that the voices of the singers shown in the picture are too well known in Berlin to permit substitution, the difficulty for the singers, orchestra and projecting machine to work simultaneously, and the lack of changing scenes which give life and imptus to a film. Especially unfortunate was the choice in opera, as "Lohengrin" with its long acts, especially the first, greatly tired the spectators, who are used to action in films. The possibilities which the outdoor scenes afforded were also lost since all of these scenes were taken in the studio. With all its failings the film opera is at least a step toward giving the small town dweller, who is not so critical of vocal resemblances, an opportunity to see some of the better things which his city cousin enjoys.

Kinematograph patrons in Berlin have been especially fortunate in the number of splendid features which have recentl, been offered them.

The Union theaters are featuring the Deutsche Mutoscop and Biograph Company's "Der Rote Faden" (The Red Cord), which demonstrates in a very interesting and cleverly worked out detective story the possibilities for films of this kind through the aid of secret doors, sinking furniture and other clever technical constructions.

The Tauentzien Palast is playing Rudolf Meinert's "William Voss, der Millionendieb," an exciting detective film taken from an idea by the late Director L. N. Turzinsky. The film, although throughout replete with thrills, embodies a refinement which causes even opponents of detective films to view this work with great enjoyment.

The Kammerlichtspiele presents as the main attraction the Nordische-Film, "Der Ring der Pharaonen," with Ebba Thomsen in the leading role. The action of the drama, which begins in old Egypt and then comes down to modern times, is gripping as well as picturesque. A Wild West act, "Der Praeriekutscher" (The Prairie Coacher), shows some wonderful riding stunts.

The attraction at the Mozart Lichtspiele is the Walter Schmidt-Haessler supervised fantastic tragedy in five acts, "Spinolas letztes Gesicht" (Spinola's Last Face). Public and critics are unanimous in acknowledging the merits of this exceedingly well staged picture. Maria Carmi once more exhibited her versatility and charm in her Genoveva role, while Josef Klein as the main figure, Spinola, and Theodor Loos as the poet interpreted their parts with equal skill.

Visitors at the Marmorhaus were kept in continuous laughter by Heinz Gordon's farce, "Wie werde ich Amanda los?" The cast consists of a number of star laugh producers, including Henry Bender, Mizzi Wirth, Hanna Brinkmann, Heinrich Peer, Victor Janson and Max Adalbert.

The "Wittelsbach" on Bayerischer Platz in addition to an amusing Dorrit Weixler comedy, "Auf Hoheits Fuersprache," shows the Nordische tragedy, "Die Sensation im Morgenblatt" with Carlo Wied in the leading part. The picture is especially good in photography, various and intricate light effects and beautiful outdoor views add materially to the charm of the picture.

Prompted by the idea of raising the standard of films and also with a view towards encouraging the talent in young German writers, the Oliver Film Company has inaugurated a film idea contest. All ideas received up to the twenty-ninth of February, 1916, and which are produced in film during the current year will be paid for upon acceptance with 300 marks. The film must not exceed 1,000 meters and should preferably be divided into three acts, although this last stipulation is not exacting. Books on the rental of these films will be kept and the author whose film will register the highest returns will be rewarded with a prize of 1,500 marks, the second and third highest with respectively 1,000 marks and 500 marks.

Richard Oswald has commenced work upon the filming of "The Tales of Hoffmann." C. T. U. Hoffmann's tale has been rearranged by Fritz Friedman-Friedrich and Mr. Oswald for the film. Hoffmann will be played by Erich Kaiser-Titz; the other roles will be taken by Ferdinand Bonn, Friedrich Kuehne, Werner Krauss, Lupu Pick, Resel Orla, Thea Sandten, Relly Ridon, Loere Rueckert and Kaete Oswald. The stage-settings are in the hands of Manfred Noa. Music taken from Offenbach's motives is being arranged to accompany the film.

The May-Film has secured the filming rights for Konrad Wieder's romance, "Der Teutone." Since the action of the story transpires in various seasons of the year, the film will not be complete until next Fall. The direction will be under Joe May.

As a serial to "Der Rote Faden," which is having a run at the Union theaters, the Deutsche Mutoscop & Biograph Company is preparing the second work of the Barker-Swift series, "Wer war es?" (Who was it?). The leads will be taken by Rudolf Klein-Rohden and Louis Ralph under the direction of von Woringen.

According to reports received from Duesseldorf, "William Voss," which met with such success at the Berlin Tauentzien Palast, is playing nightly in the Palast theater to sold-out houses.

An extraordinary film which is at present causing much comment is Harry Piel's newest work, "Die Grosse Wette" (The Great Bet), which is having its premier at the Marmorhaus. The action of this film is supposed to take place in the year 2,000 and Mr. Piel has endeavored to give a representation of the world as it will be at that period. Needless to say astonishing and intricate technical tricks, including an airline cab-service, an exceedingly cleverly constructed millionaire's palace with all twenty-first century conveniences, a library whose books step out of place by merely pressing upon a button, were used as means toward showing life in the next century. An interesting plot revolving about an American millionaire who bets his fortune upon his ability to live three days with a tricky automatic figure forms the substance of the story throughout which many amazing things happen. Criticisms over the film are divided, but in general the work has been favorably received, inasmuch as it is a change from the ordinary love drama and also points the way toward a new school in films. The leading parts lie in the hands of Mizzi Wirth and Ludwig Hartmann, who executed their respective roles with great understanding. Especially commendable are the settings which Mr. Piel has arranged in this film.

Director Joe May, who is responsible for a number of successful film works, among which might be mentioned the Joe Deebs detective series, has now produced a work which in quality surpasses even that of his previous films. "Die Sünde der Helga Arndt" (Helga Arndt's Sin) is having a prolonged run at the Tauentzien Palast. The winsome Mia May, who appears in the title role, gives a wonderfully vivid representation of the beautiful woman who cannot break with the past. The film is predestined to be a lasting success.

The Mozart Lichtspiele presents Richard Oswald's "Die Silberne Kugel" (The Silver Ball), a detective story with Erich Kaiser-Titz in the main role as Detective Engelbert Fox, who does full justice to a very flattering part. Praise is also due to Erich Schoenfelder, who, through his unfailing humor, added materially to the film's success.

The main attraction at the Kammerlichtspiele is "Der Eremit" (The Hermit), the story of an unhappy marriage.

The development of the drama and the solving of the problem of the play are worked out in a very interesting manner, while the excellent playing of two children caused much satisfactory comment.

Following the Gulaschkanone (the goulash cannon, as the German field kitchen has been affectionately christened), and the Bildungskanone (the field library), there will soon appear a "Flimmerkanone." At the incitation of Baroness Fries-Skene of Triest a rolling cinema will be provided for the benefit of the soldiers on the Isonzo front. The cinema, which will be presented to the Southwest army by the Women's War Benefits Committee of Triest, consists of three wagons which contain all necessary apparatus for a complete cinema, including an orchestral arrangement. The wagons will be sent this week to Triest and from there to the war zone, so that the Isonzo troops will have their first show within a few days. Owing to the cinema's mobility soldiers in every part of the army will be able to enjoy the entertainments.

The first number of the newest trade journal, "Der Film," has made its appearance and is in every respect in keeping with the progressive strides which the cinematograph has made. The journal is the official organ of the Society for the Protection of the general interests of the Cinematograph and Allied Trades.

Mr. Mandl of the Messter Film Company, Berlin, is at present in Vienna, where final arrangements are being made together with the Austrian film concerns, Philipp and Pressburger, and the Sascha-Film, for the building of a modern film laboratory. Mr. Messter, who is at present in the field, is also shortly expected in Vienna.

The Munich police have taken steps against the gross, sensational film posters and other advertisements which offend the refined aesthetic in word or picture. The exhibiting of such posters will be prohibited. The Department trusts that cinema owners will not find this ruling harsh as the German poster artist is capable of producing worthy things if a demand for such is created.

Miss Olga Desmond has returned from an Austrian-Hungarian tour, where she appeared in many of the principal cinemas and theaters, and will soon begin work upon the newest Desmond film. Miss Desmond's last film, "Puppenspielers Lene," to which Professor von Woikowsky-Biedau wrote the music to the ballet in the third act, bids to share the popularity achieved by the first Olga Desmond film, "Nocturno." Among other Berlin film favorites who are now enjoying successful tours are Anna Mueller-Lincke, Franz Schmelter, Dorrit Weixler and Manny Ziener.

BESSIE EYTON'S BEAUTIFUL GOWNS.

Bessie Eyton plays a princess in a mythical kingdom in the Selig comedy, "A Strange Adventure," in which production she is co-star with Jack Pickford and she will wear two gowns which are certain to set feminine hearts aflutter. Both were designed by herself and are exceptionally beautiful. The first is of silver net shirred over a foundation of cloth of silver, with a bodice composed entirely of rhinestones and pearls set in an intricate Oriental pattern; a cloud of silver tulle is draped about the shoulders and Miss Eyton has christened it "Shimmering Mist." The other is of fine black net embroidered in blue and green sequins, over a foundation of cloth of gold. The ends of two hundred peacock feathers are used as a fringe six inches wide about the bottom and a tunic of peacock feathers hangs from the waist line, forming an over-drape, which is oddly effective. The short bodice is of blue and green sequins, the sleeves are of the embroidered net and a quaint train of peacock blue velvet is draped from the shoulders. Color photography alone could convey the wonderful beauty of this unusual gown. Miss Eyton calls the creation "Peacock's Vanity" and one could not imagine a more appropriate name.

The Art of the Moving Picture

Vachel Lindsay's Book Interesting—Is Not Always Practical Survey of the Art.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

VACHEL LINDSAY is a poet and artist, and it is perhaps but natural that his new work on the picture of motion should judge the infant art by the yardstick of the atelier. In this Mr. Lindsay is a most welcome relief from the scores of essayists who persist in treating the silent drama as the illegitimate offspring of the drama stage and comparing it with the latter to its disadvantage. Mr. Lindsay recognizes that there is more of plastic than dramatic art in pictured motion, and, indeed, he decries the results attained by certain producers who yield "neither good moving picture nor good stage play;" which is precisely what so many film productions are. The real pleasure in reading Mr. Lindsay is found in these occasional flashes of estimate so accurate as to suggest measurement by micrometer, but, on the other hand, the very next phrase may be a suggestion so radical as almost to nullify the authority of the statement just made.

Undoubtedly Mr. Lindsay knows the field of which he writes far more intimately and completely than those before him who have sought to pose as commentators and instructors. He knows and loves the motion picture. He writes from exact and intimate knowledge and when the subject does not run counter to his own peculiar views he speaks with an incisiveness that we recall in the work of no other commentator not directly connected with the business. It is precisely this quality that makes one regret that Mr. Lindsay seeks to hold so closely to his idealism. Granted that it is the idealist and the dreamer to whom we must look for new expression of an art still in the making, Mr. Lindsay, for the greater part, is too revolutionary for a pathbreaker to better things. He decries the terms of the stage, but urges instead the expression of painting and sculpture. It is wholly true that painting and sculpture are more intimately connected with the pictured expression of fancy than the drama stage, where dialogue generally rises superior to visual production —or should—but in urging the new standard he seeks to bring about too radical and too abrupt a change.

As a critic and commentator, Mr. Lindsay speaks with weight and discernment, but as an innovator he too strenuously urges art as a substitute for drama and finds in the art museums the proper schoolroom for the player and producer. Assuredly in the time to come art will come more and more into the photographic studio, but Mr. Lindsay seeks to make the change too abruptly. This is a business recruited largely, if not wholly, from the ranks of the theatrical profession, and he speaks in a tongue foreign to the majority of those whom he would reach. He himself admits that to his surprise he finds that the examples of photoplay and photoplay acting he has cited seem all to revert to Griffith and the players he has trained. He might have added, with equal truth, that this is not because Griffith is so great, but because there are so few, as yet, who are even good. Few of our present day producers will take the trouble even to attempt to understand Mr. Lindsay's arguments. Fewer still will be able to grasp his meaning. He speaks in terms of art and architecture. They may perhaps, sense his chapters on Scripture in Motion and Painting in Motion, but Architecture in Motion will not appeal and other chapters will be still more strange than Greek.

It seems almost a pity that a man who can appraise so exactly the current film productions should have sought to air both his knowledge and his ideals in the same volume, obscuring sound sense with fantastic suggestion. Could he be induced to write another book dealing wholly with the few merits and many faults of present day production, he would give to the photoplay world a work of rare excellence, for he knows better than most the virtues and defects and a dissection of both in plain language, unhampered by comment and suggestion too radical to find acceptance or even understanding, would be of greater value at the moment and perhaps pave the way for a second volume in which he could then advance his theories. He cannot find ready acceptance when he contends that the true accompaniment to the picture should be not music, but the subdued hum of conversation. It seems strange that he should advocate the encouragement of talking during the run of a picture by managerial devices, yet this is no more of a jarring note than many other suggestions that rub elbows with sound sense and keen judgment. Mr. Lindsay is interesting, but at times most irritating because he belittles his own judgment with flights of fancy that question the merit of the whole. Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Llewllyn's Preference.

EVIDENTLY John W. Llewllyn has lost none of his enterprise since he dropped out of West Point, Ga. He is located now at Fitzgerald in the same State. Down at the bottom of the page you will see a cut that shows his idea of a preferred position advertisement. If you run your own house organ you can make it up as you please, but this is the top of the first page of a three times a week newspaper and the first instance we know of a newspaper selling space across the top of the page. The layout is good for a strip advertisement anywhere in the paper, but should be held together with six or twelve point rule if run in the body of the sheet. Mr. Llewllyn used the enlarged foot prints on the sidewalk for the Man Trail and writes that he has something new for A Bunch of Keys. So clever a stunt man should subscribe to the V-L-S-E Pals. It only costs a quarter a year and even a poor idea is worth that much—and the Pals' ideas are not poor.

From the Northland.

Lately we told about Tom North's automatic telegram that you had only to sign and send. He builds up on this by sending in the V-L-S-E Pals a blank ready addressed to himself and at the bottom a note about the Hearst-Vitagraph and adds, "Use this as a day letter or night letter form for your order for the Hearst-Vitagraph News Pictorial or for any other inquiry regarding rates and services—message to be at our expense." When you think of the business that has been lost to some exchanges through their picayune attitude about telegrams, you can understand why the V-L-S-E program goes ahead. Mr. Irwin surely is some picker when it comes to exchange managers and none of them beats T. N.

Here is another scheme that is good clear through. For the benefit of exhibitors the reviews of the V-L-S-E subjects are tabulated, three papers being catalogued. Instead of looking through a lot of back numbers, the exhibitor knows just which paper to look for. Pals is trying to get second-class entry on a paid subscription list and we're willing to go on the stand and testify that the Pals has a real value to exhibitors as great as its value to the house that issues it. This catalogue of reviews is one of the best little labor savers yet.

Program Stuff.

Here is some good program stuff that is taken from the monthly of the New Family theatre, Adrian, Mich.

A partner in any business has a voice in its conduct.

Very often, at the close of a performance, as the audience is passing out through the foyer, we overhear one person say to another: "Now there was a good picture. If I could see a picture on that order I'd come here all the time." Why not tell that to us? Your friend or your neighbor may like to share your views and your verdicts, but he or she will never make an effort to bring your style of picture to the theatre. If those little hints of yours were only left at the box office WE would make a determined effort to secure another picture similar to the one you liked, and WE would keep you informed as to its coming. And again, we overhear such expressions as "Not very good," "I didn't think much of that," or "I'd rather see Miss or Mr. So and So," and similarly expressed opinions. Why not tell us? Why not, when passing the box on your way out say," I do not like that kind of a picture," or if you do like it say "That was a good play; when will you have another?"

And here is another good line that you can work over into your own programs:

UNEXPECTED GUESTS

Often times "drop in" on you. They are friends of yours and want to be entertained. The best solution to this portion is the New Family Theater. Seats reserved for theater parties upon request.

The New Family and the Majestic, Cleveland, by the way, are the only monthly programs that we know of. Are there any others? It takes a lot of booking ahead to be able to get out this form, and you have to be reasonably certain that there will be comparatively few changes. If there are any other monthlies, we should like to see them.

Saying Something.

The Philadelphia exchange of the Paramount, the Famous Players Exchange, is doing some missionary work in the house bulletin. Here is something from a late issue:

Advertising puts new life into the performance at your theater. Besides increasing the public demand for a staple product, it stirs up your organization, putting enthusiasm into your employees, so that each one is a "booster."

Enthusiasm pumped into your employees many times means the success of your enterprise. When your patrons come in to a performance the man on the door greets them with a confident smile; the usher does the same; the operator seems to take greater care in the projection; the musicians seem to put their souls into their playing, and so on. You feel proud of your theater, and you have a right. The public soon begin to to feel this tide of "gladness." The right kind of contagious advertising will bring the business.

Perhaps you've never heard your blase usher talk—away from the house. Some of them like to pose as "hard audience" and affect a lofty contempt for pictures merely to impress their listeners with a sense of their importance. They think it is big to be tired of pictures—to have seen so many that nothing has power to please. They may behave around the theater, but with a crowd of their friends they will find no good in the coming programs and the friends pass the word along. Get after your own people. Make them realize that while they may work for you only a part of the day, you are entitled to command their loyalty in and out of the theater.

Change the Type.

The Davison theater, Beaver Dam, Wis., sends in a house program and asks for suggestions. It is a card folder about 3 by 5½, a deep salmon printed in black. The combination is too hard. It probably will be a difficult matter to get any ink that will look well on the stock, so it would be better to change the color of the stock. A white card, done in black, is apt to look bleak. A fairly light blue printed in deep blue or a deep but brilliant green will look better, or a green stock done in green ink will work well. If there is stock on hand that must be used up, a red or brown should work well, brown better than the red if the shade is right, but it should be strong photographic brown.

For another thing the printer has stuck the page too full of large type. It is ugly type at that. The house name is in Gothic, black, hard-angled and forbidding. A fancy but clear face should be used, possibly one of the inlines rather than an outline. This is a type with a white line in the center instead of black lines about a white space. The word "Theater," just below, should be cut out and instead a light face "The" in about an eight point caps placed above the house name. We do not like the idea of the line cut of the house. In these half-tone days a line cut of a building looks archaic. It should either be replaced by a half-tone or removed. If it is held in, there should be some white space top and bottom.

This can easily be gained if the printer is made to set the lower part of the page in smaller faces. It is not necessary to use an eighteen or twenty-four point face for the word "Program." This should be set in eight or ten point to read:

Program for the Week of February 7 to 12.

The other lines should be reset in smaller and prettier face. If he has nothing else he should throw a match in the benzine can and buy new type with the insurance money.

The inside pages are just as bleak and ugly. You hate to look at them. In the first place, a two point rule is used to panel the days. Where there is no other matter on the page, a one point will be lighter and less suggestive of a funeral notice, particularly on so small a page. The heavier rule is to be used when you have to fight to keep the outside advertising from falling into the program space. Then you can use six point, if you have to, but where you have the page to yourself, such rule is out of place. The largest and blackest line is not the play title but the date. The date can go in a smaller italic letter and then the extra two points can be given the title. Get them interested in the play and they will note the date quickly enough.

All of this can be done with precisely the same copy now supplied. It is merely a matter of composition.

The back page shows a house fault. It is headed "Notes of Interest to our Patrons" and carries a series of announcements such as

The Girl and the Game
Every Tuesday
Paramount Features
Mondays and Thursdays

There are nine of these, each carefully segregated. Here the use of a light rule gives a better effect, but a running story will be better yet Instead of the above let the story run:

> Each Tuesday we show an episode of "The Girl and the Game," the famous railroad story by Cy Warman now running in the leading daily papers of America. Miss Helen Holmes is the daring star.
> Mondays and Thursdays are Paramount feature days and this means the best the Photoplay field affords.

This takes less space than the isolated announcement and will be more readily assimilated. Set the stuff in not larger than eight point, make it chatty and it will be read with interest and not only hold but make business, if the stuff is changed each week. It would be even better to take just one talking point each week and elaborate on that.

No real improvement will show until the stock is changed, but the type would spell the best stock obtainable. It is not even good enough for an auction bill.

With Children's Matinees.

The Parkway, Baltimore, sends in its house programs which show that the theater is in line with the present movement for children's matinees. The house issues the program only every second week, changing but twice a week. Two forms are sent in. One dated January 10th offers an exceptionally pretty layout. There are two panels to the page and at the upper left hand corner of each is set a portrait cut. The rest of the panel is formed of double rules. If they repeat this make up we should be glad to get a copy on white paper. This is blue on blue and will not make a decent cut. The stock is too good in one way and not good in another. It is a heavy coated paper, but it breaks prickly under handling and will not last the two weeks. The other program is on thinner but tougher stock and is better suited to the purpose. The layout is not so good on the inside pages and the front is an experiment in rule work that is odd, but effective only because it is odd. It represents a lot of work and has been joined with unusual care.

Both programs have the back page set as a miniature newspaper. We should like to reproduce this, too, if we can get good cut copy. There is a formal head and two columns of six point matter breaking to a cross page announcement about half way down. They list full information as to prices, hours of performance and telephone. It is well gotten up in every way but the blue program is vastly, better, typographically, than the other.

Educational.

Get people coming to your house and if you run the right sort of shows, they will keep on coming. The great point is to get the stranger into your auditorium. Show him that you have something worth while and in no time at all he will cease to be a stranger. Lately the Alhambra, Elwood, Ind., sent out this card:

> TO OUR PATRONS:
> Believing that you do not fully realize the kind of productions we are offering the public, and believing that you can more fully comprehend the merits of such photo plays as the "Sins of Society," "Salvation Neil," "Carmen," "The Warning," "Barbara Frietchie," "The Labyrinth" "The Rack," "Excuse Me" and "Camille" which we have shown in the last month. We invite you to accept this card with our compliments which will admit you on Monday evening, Feb. 21, 1916, when Metro will present Marguerite Snow in "Rosemary."
> THE ALHAMBRA AMUSEMENT CO.

There follows a list of coming attractions, the whole being on a card 6¼ by 3½. A card only six inches wide would have been much better proportioned. The printer has done his work rather badly, merely setting some type with no attempt at making a display. This is a mistake. Such a bid for business should be made as attractive as possible, for the appearance of the card itself is by many regarded as an indication of the sort of house that sends the card out. You would not scowl at a friend when you ask him to dinner. You extend the invitation with a smile. It is even more important to make a good first impression upon a stranger prospect. It would be better to change the greeting if you make use of this idea. It is to be supposed that your patrons know how good your programs are. There should exist no necessity for telling them. The appeal should be directed to non-patrons, and the greeting should be changed to suit.

Takes Half Pages.

The Regent theater, Pittsburgh, one of the Rowland and Clark string, is using half-page advertisements in the locality paper in East Liberty section. They get an attractive layout but in the present instance the use of a black background cut in the center and a type too small for the other titles plays up the middle section at the expense of the other programs. This cut does little more than suggest the layout, but it can be seen that the title lines of the outside section do not stand up well. These could have been set in the same face had they been played up with a border with a little white space above and below. As it is, the black cut fades down the other titles and renders them inconspicuous. Apart from this printer's lapse the arrangement is unusually good. One good line is shown in the right hand "ear." This reads to the effect that a visitor to the house said that he felt as though he could breathe in the auditorium and they replied that he could because they built it that way. This hammers home the ventilating system as no announcement that the air is changed every two minutes ever could.

A Noisy Birth.

The Orpheum, Aberdeen, S. D., has been having "The Birth of A Nation" and A. W. Walker got out a pink edition of the Orpheum Herald to help along. The Normal School attended one performance in a body and there was a $1,000 advance sale which is doing something for a motion picture. Mr. Walker also "sasses back" on a recent suggestion that he avoid commenting upon the dangerous condition of a rival theater, taking the position that theatergoers cannot be too careful. That part may be all right, but it is bad medicine to attack a business rival. It never pays. More than one house has been put on the map through attacks.

A Thirdly.

Just the other week we wondered how many monthly house programs there were and before the wonder was printed H. J. Clauer, of the Dreamland, Galena, Ill., comes in with a four-month program of Paramount and Metro pictures. This, it would seem, is entitled to the long distance record. The booklet is three and one-half by six inches, eight pages and cover, two shades of grey printed in blue and printed instead of being overprinted. Mr. Clauer says he gets these out "from time to time," so we presume that he does not issue three times a year but comes out more often with the issue, but with the long run program. The subjects are given but one line each and no month takes more than two-thirds of one of the pages, the rest being given up to house stuff, and it is mighty good house stuff. The first item given below is a capital argument for a small town house. It gives strikingly one of the chief appeals of the pictures. Other stuff also makes good clip material. We are sorry that Mr. Clauer never came in before. Look this over: > wonders how Mr. and Mrs. Jones manage it. For, although Mr. Jones is President of the Jonesville Bank and Chief of the (2) Jonesville Police, he is no Croesus. And, while Mrs. Jones is of ancient lineage, she has no financial background but her father's Jonesville Agricultural Seminary. Compared with other residents they are merely well-to-do.

> But the Joneses are undisputed leaders of Jonesville Society. Mrs. Jones' dinners, teas, dances and bridge parties know no equals. And her clothes are the despair of the feminine population.

Mr. Jones, too, is dressed beyond reproach. The male citizens ape him sedulously. At least they try to. But everything he owns—his clothes, his motors his dogs his cigarettes—all are more distinguished than his friends can buy.

The Joneses seldom go to New York or any other large clearing-house of cultivation. And yet they are completely in touch with all that is going on. How do they manage it.

ABSURDLY SIMPLE

They visit Dreamland three times each week; they see there the latest things—the newest fashions for men and women of taste, and instead of going elsewhere to buy things they let their home merchants do their buying for him.

Dreamland doesn't preach; Dreamland doesn't teach; but it provides you with a generous share of good wholesome ican drama, clean humor and well drawn, well printed picture photoplays.

Before the pictures came, people got their ideas of life mainly from what they read. The demand for something better produced better newspapers, better magazines. The same demand is now heard for better pictures. The logic of this demand is the basis of Paramount and Metro quality programs.

The booklet is good in every way, for they even have a good printer. But when Mr. Clauer writes that for four years he has been getting good things out of the paper and that this is the first time he has put anything back, we feel like suing him for that back debt. If you can do better than usual work, send it along and help those who need help.

Listen To This.

A. W. Ballenger, of the Dean, York, Neb., has not been in as often as he used to come, but as usual he brings something when he does come. This time it is the first issue of a house program, but he offers a brand new angle in prices that it will pay others to study closely. It is not only good logic, but it has worked well in practice. He says:

Am enclosing herewith issue one of our new paper. Tell us what you think of it. It is young and needs chastisement.

Number two is going to look better, and we hope to get three out a little better than its predecessors.

Note in the prices for the shows that the kiddies are kept at 5 cents. There is mention of it on page 2, column 2, and we find that it is a winner.

Parents do not object to paying the advance for themselves on Feature Nights, but do kick like hades on a dime for the children.

But, since putting in the 5 cent price for children, it has improved our attendance.

As we have the capacity, we can handle all the children that come, and it tends to bring the older ones out, if they can afford to bring the children.

There has been an increase of about three hundred per cent. in the number of children which come, which in itself more than pays, while the increase in adults has been very satisfactory.

My reason for calling attention to this matter is that it may help some fellow exhibitor. Several of the boys in this state who have heard of it are more than pleased with the idea.

Now that Mr. Ballenger has raised the question and has given the answer, it is easy to see that this is so, but it is probably something that will occur to few others who may be suffering from the same trouble without knowing the cause. The program announcement referred to is merely a plain announcement that the prices for children under twelve will always be five cents irrespective of the price charged for regular admission. There is a good line in an article on the increased price for some bills. He says, "A manufacturer cannot make a washing machine as cheaply as he can a washtub, can he?" If you are raising prices, take that as the text for an article.

The sheet is a small four-pager nicely arranged. The heading is in type a shade too small for the size of the sheet, but this is better than type too large. The back page is given to the formal program and Mr. Ballenger uses a half box for his days, like this:

TUESDAY
FEBRUARY 8

This is more easily handled than a box and if set into the margin it serves as well. It would not be good in the body of the text.

We will appreciate being placed on the regular mailing list, for we think that we can get a lot of good material. Mr. Ballenger used to be a welcome contributor once upon a time.

Getting Better.

A. H. Cobb, Jr., of the Temple theater, Hartsville, S. C., sends in a program fixed up from the suggestions made by this department as well as their printer can do it. The printer is rather shy of small display type and this handicaps the arrangement, but Mr. Cobb seems to have done about as well as he can do with his facilities and it is a neat and orderly program. One thing he might still do is to delete the word "program" at the top of the two program pages and divide this space between the three days of each page to get some white lines. It is not necessary to label it a program. The fact is self-evident. Mr. Cobb adds he will not "butt in" for some time. We hope he changes his mind and comes in regularly.

Too Much Type.

The Y theater, Cleveland, Ohio, sends in an eight page house program, white stock printed on red and with most pages far too full of type. It is not apt to do very good work for the house. It may interest persons already regular patrons, but it is not calculated to attract new business. The color scheme is too raw for one thing, but the chief faults are the overloaded pages and crowded program space. The house gets a comparatively small space and this is lost in the closely set advertising. something can be done by framing the program space in six point rule and using smaller type sizes, but it would be better to throw out some of the advertising even if it does represent actual money. And red ink should never be used on white paper for a program. A good black is best with blue for a second choice. The management should have a talk with the printer and tell him a few things. If he doesn't know it is a poor job, the work should be taken elsewhere. An earlier issue in black looks much better and here the effect of the overcrowding is less noticeable because in the first issue there were fewer advertisements and the space was broken across with jokes above and below the program space. In both programs the announcement is too brusque.

One, for example, runs:

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in The Broken Coin (11th. Episode). Billie Ritchie in Knocks and Opportunities. Robert Leonard in The Silent Member and others.

No effort apparently is made to give the anouncement attractiveness. That's what is offered. You can use your own judgment. A little touching up would give the suggestion of attractiveness that might pull business.

Uses Big Space.

The Opera House, Madera, Cal., uses page and half-page advertisements in the daily paper. This is going pretty strong, but it pays where the space rates permit the spread. They use the Paramount service and make a nice use of the Paramount portrait cuts for border work. They lay out the type nicely and the compositor worked in with them, for they get plenty of announcement while avoiding the appearance of overcrowding.

A Note from Natalie.

Steve Talbot, over at the Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, sends a card that reads:

Dear Friend: Go and see the Deemon Rum gets his just deserts at the Chestnut Street opera house, now. It'll do you good. Natalie.

We hope that Steve means nothing personal in his remarks. The Jack Roses have bloomed and are gone and—well Steve did it very nicely and the handwriting on the face of the card matches the cut work on the back and Steve used a black ink both cases to get a match. It's an effective card—if he didn't have the Jack Roses in mind.

Getting After Churches.

The Motion Picture Exhibition Company, of Newark, N. J., offers an effective advertisement to ministers in a blotter, the top of which carries an article from the New York Times and then carries on the argument from a more direct approach. Most ministers write their sermons, most use blotters and most want well filled churches. The combination is excellent.

And by the way, did you ever try to get your local ministers interested? Even if you run Sundays yourself, you can afford to get that sort of opposition for the sake of the rest of the week.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Undervalued.

EVEN if you are a sneak thief you must have a respect for your business and be anxious to be a good sneak thief, expert and adroit. You must desire to be a master in any line of work you essay, and yet so many who write photoplays seem to despise the art. This applies particularly to men who might write good plays if only they could realize that any old thing will do. One of the poorest synopses that came in the German Money scripts was from a dramatic editor. If he ever say such a thing on the stage he would go to the office and write two columns of solid roast on the production, but he was not writing a drama, just a photoplay comedy," and he made it too wishy impossible to be accepted.

If dramatic critics can offend, perhaps others have an excuse, but there never is an excuse for slighting either your vocation or your avocation. Whatever you do try to do better than merely well. Do your very best.

Polishing.

Do not waste too much elbow grease polishing up your stuff. Get it out in first class form, but instead of wasting a couple of weeks going over it and changing a word here and there and perhaps adding or subtracting a scene, set down to business and see just what you can do to make the plot better. Polish that rather than the form. It will pay you better and bring quicker return.

When you write a story at first, you are too apt to feel that you are committed to the development. Forget that development and the written story for a month and you may find that Jack would be Jill.

Technical Terms.

It is no business of yours whatever how an effect is produced. You do not have to tell the director how to make a ghost. He knows how. You merely tell him that you want to show something. Tell him what it is you want to show in the finished appearance. He can read and understand that. If you want to have a scene showing an apparition it is not necessary to tell him to use double exposure. He knew that before you started writing plays in all probability. You tell him that at a certain point "the figure of Claire appears in the doorway." He'll make it stop camera or dissolve to suit himself. You just tell him that the figure is there.

If we could only persuade new writers to lay off this technical stuff we could save both them and the directors a lot of trouble. Real, regular writers say "dissolve" only when it saves words and only when they know what a dissolve is. Until you have lived in a studio be content to call for effects without trying to explain them to the director.

Struggle.

Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, in his introduction to Charlton Andrews The Technique of Play Writing (The Writer's Library), voices a world-old theme when he writes: "A walk over makes a poor fight in a play as well as a baseball game." In other words, things cannot be made too easy for your hero. He must fight to win and the better the fighting, the more appreciated the winning is.

Typewriters.

One author writes that he has spent in excess of $55 having his scripts typed and now he has decided to learn to do the work himself. It has cost him more than the sum named, for no man can see the faults of a long-hand script.

Bromides.

An inquirer asks if there is any prohibition against plays dealing with aphasia, as one company writes her that they were not permitted to make such plays. There is nothing to which the censors will find objection in plays dealing with loss of memory. This is not obscene or immoral or anything else that will cause pain to the worthy Mr. Bretinger and his ilk, but there is such a thing as common sense that shows in flashes in the studio and no sane editor is going to pay out real spendable money for bromides.

It all resolves itself into a case of merit. An author wants to work at his trade. He has no ideas but he thinks he needs the money. That is no real reason for trying to write without something to write about, but he sits at the machine and thinks. It is almost a certainty that in such a frame of mind he will hit upon no novel idea; no new thought. It must be something unusual, he knows. He must do a lot of strange things and then find a reason for them. He splits fifty-fifty between it-was-a-dream and the aphasia alibi. This was all right years ago when lost memory was not so common, but the man who can take the theme today and make something out of it that is worthy of purchase is little less and sometimes something more than a genius.

With several hundred aphasia stories already produced, and several thousand more written, but never sold, it is not remarkable that there should be no market for the same old stuff.

Do not try to sell the old stuff. It is just wasting time to try and land the obvious. Any studio writer can do a dozen better aphasia stories than the average free lance, but he would rather resign than be fired when he is ready to quit, and so he does not.

Envelopes.

The other morning three envelopes in the same mail were all stamped "received in bad condition." In each instance they were white. It is seldom or never that a manila or kraft come in torn. There is a reason for this. White envelopes, except those that cost prohibitive prices, are made of wood pulp and this pulp is bleached to make it white. The bleaching agent is not thoroughly washed out and the stock rots. It cannot then stand even moderate handling without breaking. The white envelope may look nicer, but it does not look professional for professionals know that the cheaper envelopes are also better and use good manila.

Questions of Price.

One of the nicest questions the author is required to face when sales first begin is the matter of prices. Perhaps the author has concentrated energies in an effort to sell a particular studio. At last a sale is made with the usual bunk about the story being taken for the idea alone and "the price is small but—" stuff that some otherwise self-respecting companies resort to. The author fears that if the offer is refused the sale will be lost, and yet ten dollars a reel seems absurdly small for a five-reel story, and he hesitates to refuse and perhaps incur the ill will of the studio.

It is a cheap and nasty form of graft, generally practised by some editor who earns his own fancy salary by cutting down others, and it is hoped that the time will soon come when even the conceited directors will be ignored in favor of the companies that pay well and promptly, but meantime the question is one that each author must solve for himself. Three times in the past week this question has been brought in, from which it will be seen that the practice is widespread, since comparatively few inquiries are made in proportion to the number of times the question arises.

In the fiction end those companies command the best stories that make the policy of treating the author well. They do not always pay quite as much as another, but they pay promptly, which sometimes counts for more than a slightly higher price plus delay. Some day a film company will make prompt decision and either send the story back or forward a check within a week, and when the fact becomes known that company will have the pick of the free lance market. Fair treatment and prompt cash payments were the secrets of the Munsey success.

Not Yet.

Now and then some correspondent asks an intelligent question. One the other day suggests that others may be wondering. The inquirer says:

> I have been told that there is little or no market for fairy stories, but with the children's matinees now a feature, would there not be a market for stories appealing largely if not entirely to children?

The reply is "not yet." The children's matinee is a special performance, generally on a Saturday morning. It is a program composed of some educational stuff, some clean comedy and perhaps a drama not too intricate to be grasped.

It is mostly what is known as "commercial" stuff; old film that rents for about a dollar a reel a day. The cost for a five reel show might not be even five dollars. Now a single reel must earn at least one hundred dollars for the exchange before it can begin to show a profit. If it must take two years to do this, the turnover is too small, and yet at the present time these special shows are given but once a week and not every day. Naturally it will not pay to make special releases or even regular releases planned more especially for this purpose, but it is to be hoped that in time the theatres for children will find their place in the scheme of things and open a new market. At present there is enough old stuff in presentable shape to supply the still small demand.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 130.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is the most effective thing with which to smother a film fire? What would you do first in case of fire? What would be the first four things to do? Suppose the fire got into the upper or lower magazine, what would you do? What is the main objection of the operating room door opening directly into the main auditorium?

Roll of Honor on Question No. 123.

Question No. 123 brought out a somewhat formidable array of very good answers, the following being entitled to a place on the Roll of Honor: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Tom Clemmons, Beaumont, Tex.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Alberta; M. Nosti, Tampa, Florida; C. R. Terhune, Franklin, Ind.; Walter Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; Arthur F. Rix, Chicago, Ill.; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Tex.; Arthur H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Ont.; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Mo.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; F. Howard Marx, Ashland, Wisconsin; H. W. Sanders, Spokane, Washington; Claude E. Lindstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; T. Richards, Blaine, Washington; Chas. Brenning, San Antonio, Texas; Leon Brantley, Nacogdoches, Texas, and T. C. Shipley, Lincoln, Nebraska.

The selection of a reply for publication was a very difficult matter. There were quite a number of the Roll of Honor replies which were very complete indeed. I think, however, everything considered, that Brother Sanders' answer best serves the purpose of publication.

Reply to Question No. 123.

By H. W. Sanders, Spokane, Washington.

The Question:

What is a mercury arc rectifier? What is its purpose and how does it operate? What is the source of the light emanating from its bulb? Is the current it supplies true D. C.? Does it take A. C. direct from the line into its tube?

The Answer:

The mercury arc rectifier is a device for converting or rectifying alternating current to direct current. It consists of an auto-transformer, known as the "main reactance," above which is mounted a panel carrying a choke coil, called the "regulating reactance;" also mounted on the panel are the starting anode resistance, shaking magnet, automatic cut-out and a sealed glass tube containing a small quantity of mercury, and having two graphite electrodes, the term "anode" being usually applied to them, and a mercury electrode, the term "cathode" applying to it, also a mercury starting anode. These electrodes are sealed in the glass tube and the air exhausted as completely as possible, leaving very nearly a perfect vacuum. This tube rests in a holder capable of being rocked or tilted by the shaking magnet arm. The necessary wire connections complete the advice.

The purpose of this machine is to produce a continuous current from an alternating current supply for charging storage batteries, electroplating, operating arc lamps, and for all purposes where a comparatively small direct current is essential or desirable.

The operation of the mercury rectifier is explained by reference to the above wiring diagram. The alternating and direct current switches are closed and the carbons brought together (for arc lamps for moving picture work). The A. C. then flows through the regulating reactance, starting resistance, shaking magnet, cut-out wiring and completes the circuit through the load (arc) and main reactance. On account of the starting resistance, this current is too weak to operate the cut-out magnet, but operates the shaking magnet, tilting the bulb, allowing the mercury to flow from the starting anode to the cathode; the current then flows through the mercury instead of through the tilting magnet, which is thereby so weakened that the bulb falls back to its upright position, breaking the stream of mercury between the two electrodes. The heat of the arc thus formed immediately vaporizes some of the mercury, the metallic vapor reduces the resistance of the path between the two electrodes, starting the arc, which is immediately picked up by the main anodes. The current now being strong enough, operates the cut-out magnet, cutting the starting resistance and tilting magnet out of circuit while the device is working. The alternating current then flows into each anode alternatively; impulses of one polarity flow through one of the anodes and impulses of the opposite polarity through the other anode, passing current through the cathode to the arc lamp, this being the positive wire, the negative returning to the neutral point of the main reactance. This current flows only in one direction through the arc lamp.

The device depends for its operation on the electrical check valve action of the tube. After the mercury has been vaporized, as described, in starting, the metallic vapor is an electrical conductor and will allow the current to pass from either of the solid anodes to the mercury cathode, but the mercury offers a high resistance at its surface and acts as a check valve and will not allow the current to pass from it to either of the solid electrodes; thus the current must flow from the anodes to the cathode.

As long as the current flow is not interrupted a comparatively low voltage will maintain the arc. It has been determined that even with a 10,000-cycle alternating current which gives 20,000 reversals per second (a frequency far beyond any used in commercial work) the reversals are not quick enough to maintain the arc in the bulb. For that reason the regulating reactance, or choke coil (which it really is), is inserted in the circuit. The action of this coil is to set up a counter electro-motive force which opposes the impressed E. M. F. and causes the current to lag so that the half waves overlap one another, and the current at no time falls to zero, but consists of a series of slight impulses. The amount of variation in these impulses is controlled by the inductance of the choke coil, varying the amount of windings in the coil, varies the amount of current at the arc lamp. The more windings that are cut out the greater will be the current strength.

The tube gives off a soft greenish light, as the mercury vapor is heated to incandescence by the passage of the current through it.

The current from the rectifier, as before stated, is a pulsating direct current; that is, the current always flows in the same direction but changes slightly in value and amount, but never falls to zero.

The rectifier does not take the A. C. direct from the line into its bulb, strictly speaking, but through the auto-transformer (main reactance) and the choke coil (regulating reactance); comparatively little of the A. C. flows from T' to T" of the main reactance or vice versa on account of the high impedence of the coil.

Mercury Converters being free from rotating parts, require less attention, and more over in small sizes, in which they are usually made, they are more efficient than motor-generators or rotary converters of corresponding capacities. But unlike the motor generator or rotary converter, the rectifier will not stand overloading, even for short periods.

Fifty Ampere rectifiers are now made for moving picture work, but tubes for greater currents are seldom built because the larger the current output, the larger must be the bulb to allow sufficient condensing surface, and larger tubes are expensive and difficult to handle.

The greater the current strength, the more mercury there will be vaporized, and if too much vapor is crowded into a small tube, it will smother the arc. The vapor condenses on the walls of the tube and runs down to the bottom, and if the tube is not large enough to afford sufficient condensing surface, the vapor will soon become so dense that the arc goes out.

Including the losses in the transformer, reactance (choke) coil and the tube, the efficiency of the mercury arc rectifier for moving picture work is about 75 per cent.

A Complaint.

Nacogdoches, Texas, complains of the condition of films which are on circuit, and which he says are received from the Park theater, Jacksonville, Texas. He says that in the Pathe serial, "Who Pays," three reels, there were twenty-five misframes and a ten foot section of the first reel patched bottom side up.

If this is correct it seems to me that the manager of the Park theater ought to get real busy with his operator, find out where the trouble lies and remedy it—quick. If the Park theater is receiving the films in that condition, then for the love of Mike what kind of a show is he putting on. Certainly no one can put on even a half way decent show with films in that condition.

Mind you I am not accusing the Park theater of anything, but simply setting the matter forth as it has reached me. There is so much complaint about films on circuit being received in poor condition that I am going to begin naming those accused of being offenders, and see if we can't get action on the matter.

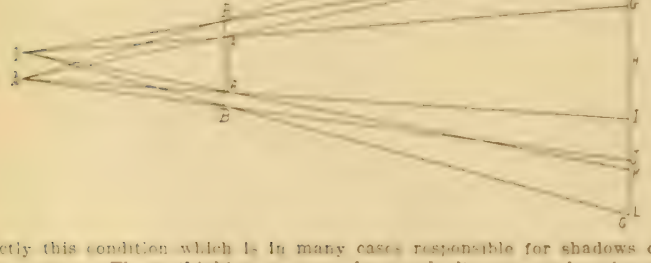
The "Optics of the Observation Port."

J. McGuire, Summerville, Texas, says:

> I have been engaged in an argument with my manager over what I dub the "optics of the observation port." I have the second edition of the Handbook, and fully appreciate what you say therein, and what you have said through the medium of the department with regard to the matter of the width of the observation port, but cannot quite bring my manager to the point of understanding that the observation port ought to be 12 inches wide instead of 6. Will you kindly explain the matter as clearly as possible in the department, and at your earliest convenience.

Yes, I will do that little thing, my brother, though it seems as if the proposition is so almost childishly simple that no extended explanation should be necessary. In the drawing, which is altogether out of proportion and not made to scale, but merely designed to make the idea clear, 1 and 2 represent the operator's eyes, 2½ to 3 inches apart, A-A represents a narrow observation port and B-B one somewhat wider, though in this particular instance it is still not quite wide enough. Following the lines it will be seen that, taking the small port A-A, eye No. 1 has a view of the screen from G to K, while eye No. 2 has a view from I to E, so that the combined view of both eyes covers only the space E to K, leaving E to D and K to L entirely out of the range of vision. Switching now to large port B-B, eye No. 1 sees from F to L, and eye No. 2 has a view reaching from J to D, thus covering the entire screen, but let it be here observed that whereas eye No. 2 sees the screen from E to D, and eye No. 1 sees it from K to L, eye No. 1 does not see the space D-E, nor does eye No. 2 see space K-L, so that the vision from E to K will be greater than the view of the rest of the screen.

Please understand that this is not designed to set forth a real condition, it is merely intended to illustrate the principle of the thing, and show your manager, and other managers also, the principles involved. The manager may say in reply to this: "Well, all right, let the operator move up closer to the port and he can see the whole screen." And that is exactly the trouble. The operator can see the whole screen through a knot hole if he plays one eye to it; he can see the whole screen through an opening 6 inches square if he stands with his eyes right up against the hole, but that is not where the operator belongs and, moreover, as I have time and again pointed out, it is exactly this condition which is in many cases responsible for shadows on the screen. The unthinking manager has made it more or less inconvenient for the operator to see the screen, therefore a good portion of the time he just simply don't see it, and in consequense shadows appear. Under these conditions I do not see how we can blame the operator very much, or for that matter at all.



In closing I will repeat my oft made statement that the observation port ought to be at least, and preferably 12, inches wide, and be adjustable in height as shown in the Handbook. Anything less than this makes for inefficiency and shadows on the screen.

Status of the Industry.

R. L. Riggs, Hastings, Nebraska, after bombarding the Moving Picture World with bouquets, says:

> When will the new Handbook for operators be out? I sure want a copy, and know in advance it will be just fine. What other books or literature have you, or do you know of any that will be of interest to moving picture men in all lines, such as operators, theater managers, promoters, producers, etc.? I am accumulating everything of value along this line as fast as it appears. Do you consider that the moving picture business is still in its infancy, at its zenith, or ready to decline? It certainly has made wonderful strides during the past five years, and to the casual observer it appears as though just getting its breath for a new start.

See last page of this department for the announcement of the Handbook, which is now ready. As to other books, why the woods are full of them, but those which have any considerable value are scarce. In addition to the Hawkin's Electrical Guide (nine volumes), I can heartily recommend Brother Sargent's works to those who are interested in theater advertising or photoplay writing. His work on theater advertising is very, very good, and while I am not so very well acquainted with his Technique of the Photoplay, I believe it is, thus far, the best thing in print. These books are both for sale by the Moving Picture World. That is about as far as I can go in the book line. There are, of course, many works which are of more or less value, but as a general proposition I have found it to be "less" rather than more, but you will find "Optic Projection," by Henry Phelps and Simon Henry Gage, to be well worth its price. It is published by the Comstock Publishing Company, Ithaca, N. Y. Price, $3.00.

As to the moving picture industry, why thus far I have been a pretty good prophet, though "propheting" is a reasonably dangerous business—dangerous to the reputation. Nevertheless, I am willing to risk mine at least once more. In my opinion the moving picture industry has passed its infancy stage, and has passed its zenith in so far as the number of moving picture theaters be concerned, but has not reached its highest level so far as excellence of production and excellence of presentation be concerned, nor has it, I think, yet reached its highest plane of favor with the public. I also am of the opinion that in educational and commercial lines it is still comparatively speaking in swaddling clothes. I am firmly of the opinion that within the next ten years the moving picture is going to wrap its tendrils very tightly and firmly around the educational institutions of this and other countries, and that it will be utilized by our instructors in many ways yet unthought of; I also believe that the time is not far distant when big commercial institutions, city governments and civic associations of various kinds will make use of the moving picture to such an extent that you would deem me a dreamer if I set forth my ideas. On the other hand, I believe that, except in the very small towns, the "store room" theater is doomed, as is also the theater of small seating capacity. I believe that the city of, say 20,000, will have one or possibly two moving picture theaters seating 1,000 or perhaps 1,500 people, and that the smaller cities will have just one theater, with a seating capacity equal to the demand of the town. I base this latter opinion on the fact which is being recognized more and more, viz.: the theater of large seating capacity can give very much more for the money than can the smaller theater.

To my mind the biggest danger now confronting the industry is the huge multiplicity of releases, which are consuming possible photoplay plots to an extent that is entirely out of reason, and, it seems to me, to an extent that is going to make really good plots mighty scarce in the not at all distant future.

Strand Projection Excellent.

Mr. B. A. Rolfe, now managing director of the famous Strand Theater, has been paying particularly careful attention to the improvement of projection in that house, and after making such improvements as seemed necessary sent the editor an invitation to visit the theater and "look things over." Without the knowledge of either Manager Rolfe, or the operator, we did so, being careful to arrive at the beginning of the show, a matinee, and remain through the whole performance.

It gives me very genuine pleasure to be able to say that during the entire show I had no fault of any kind whatsoever to find in the projection. Friend Rolfe, in his invitation, asked me to come to his office and advise him of any criticism I might have to make. I went back and met Mr. Rolfe, a most pleasant gentleman, and found that his views on matters pertaining to projection were sound and well considered. I took the opportunity of calling his attention to the utter inadequacy of the operating room of the Strand, and explained to him how a new and thoroughly adequate room could be erected without in any way disturbing or interfering with the performance. I told him that his operators were giving good service, but that they were and always had worked under a heavy and entirely unnecessary handicap. Mr. Rolfe recognized the justice of the contention and promised me he would take under very serious consideration the building of a new room, and I sincerely trust his decision in this matter will be favorable.

The Strand has a national reputation, due in large measure to the Moving Picture World. It stands at the head of the list of elaborately beautiful moving picture theaters. I am very genuinely pleased to be able to say good things about its projection. My compliments to Manager Rolfe. He is, it seems to me, pre-eminently the right man in the right place. If the Strand will now replace its present operating room (it strains courtesy to call it that) with one of more ample proportions there will be nothing left for me to criticise.

Indianapolis, Ind.

It was the warm handclasp and smiling face of Brother E. C. Scobey, secretary-treasurer Local Union 194, I. A., last seen at Seattle, Wash., almost three years ago, which extended the "welcome to our city." Scobey quickly piloted Your Scribe to where the rest of the Glad-to-Have-You-With-Us committee awaited the result of his, Scobey's, onceover of the passengers, and we were introduced to Brother J. O. Benner, business agent Local Union No. 194, I. A., E. P. Hunter, manager Two Johns theater, representing, for the occasion, together with the next-to-be-named gentleman, the Indianapolis Exhibitors' League, and John B. Hubert, almost the last act of whose life was to welcome the editor, and assist in putting into practical form the hospitality of the League, for almost before the shades of night had fallen the loved form (for it was beloved, both by his fellow-exhibitors and the operators) of John Hubert was but cold clay, his great heart was forever stilled and his soul returned whence it came. Mr. Hubert died of heart failure while driving homeward from the dinner six of us enjoyed at the Hotel Severin later in the day.

During the afternoon Friend Hubert, accompanied by the aforenamed gentlemen, showed us over Indianapolis and its suburbs in his car, and a really charming city it is, too. After our ride a number of theaters were visited and we met several Indianapolis managers and operators; also inspected a number of operating rooms, ranging from "nothing extra" to fair. In none of them did I find even so much as a wash bowl, much less toilet conveniences. Ventilation was quite good in them all. Observation ports were above the average, and, except in one case, of ample width, but one fault existed in them all—too much light. In every single room we found from two to four incandescent lamps burning, though in one case the operator had the grace to use amber tinted globes—better than white, but still bad. In every instance, too, when I spoke of the matter the operator made haste to explain that he "only had them burning while he threaded." Far be it from me to say, aver, hint, or insinuate, that the boys prevaricated, but I will remark upon the coincidence of so many operators in so many different theaters having just barely finished threading when I arrived; undoubtedly the men all told the truth, but perhaps the truth had, just at that moment, been through a railroad wreck, and become slightly bent, battered, dented and warped—which was not, of course, their fault.

Paint those walls black, gentlemen, and PUT OUT THOSE LIGHTS. IT IS THE ONLY WAY YOU CAN, OR WILL SECURE THE BEST POSSIBLE RESULTS ON YOUR SCREEN.

The darker your operating room the better you can see your screen, and detect faint shadows thereon. In no case did I find the operator seated at his machine, AS HE SHOULD BE every moment the picture is on the screen. Provide a chair, is my advice, Mr. Manager, and require your operator to sit down at his machine and STAY THERE. If he is seated there will be decidedly less tendency to roam around the room while George, the motor, runs the show, with resultant shadows on the screen. Now don't misunderstand me. The work of the Indianapolis men, as exemplified by what I saw, will compare very favorably with that of other cities, and is considerably better than some. It was, in fact, very good so far as illumination be concerned and the speed was excellent, there was no racing in evidence, at least while I was there. But, gentlemen, there is always room for improvment.

At one theater, owned by my friend, Frank Rembusch, of Mirror Screen fame, we found rear projection on a ground glass screen. The effect was excellent, though there was slight but not objectionable tendency to brighter illumination at the point where the eye was in line with the lens; this is, however, always the case with rear projection, particularly when the distance of projection is relatively short. But the glass screen is the best there is for rear projection, and the result thereon is distinctly good. While I was talking to Mr. Rembusch's manager in the operating room we noticed a sudden increase of light in the room and, looking at the door, discovered it to emanate from the dazzling smile Frank J. Rembusch pulls on his friends when he is pleased. For he's a jolly good fellow, is F. J. R.—one who can and will scrap like a battleship and when the fight is over, whether triumphant or licked, smile, shake hands and forget it all, as the Indianapolis operators have cause to know.

The "Strand" of Indianapolis is a really beautiful house, of which Indianapolis picturedom is distinctly proud. Its lobby is remarkably pretty and its interior very nice indeed.

At the Hotel Severin a party consisting of Frank J. Rembusch, John Hubert, E. P. Hunter, E. C. Scobey, J. O. Benner, and the Yours Lovingly spent a delightful hour discussing items selected from the cuisine of that excellent inn. At 11 P. M. we were escorted to the theater where were assembled perhaps a dozen managers, and practically every operator in the city, plus two members of the Chicago Local Union 110, who are with "The Birth of a Nation," then running in Indianapolis. These gentlemen had, I was told, expended considerable useless effort (a habit a certain portion of the membership of 110 seems to have) in wielding a hammer on the editor, incidentally declaring to all and sundry that we were "not a member of the I. A." They must have felt reasonably foolish when Brother Scobey, in introducing us, displayed our working card in Local Union No. 306. Go as far as you like, gentlemen. Your capers certainly don't and can't injure me in the least degree, and does supply me with considerable amusement. Some day the Chicago men will come to their senses, perhaps, and when that time comes we will be glad to forget the childish peevishness displayed by those of the local who have displayed rancor because I have refused, do refuse, and will continue to refuse to stand for the tactics of a leadership of that local.

It was on my way to address the meeting that I heard the sad news of Mr. Hubert's departure into the mists of eternity, and the shock made it extremely difficult to concentrate my mind on my subject. However, after it was over I was told that some real good had been accomplished. I was surprised at the size of the gathering as I came at a time when Indianapolis picture men were concentrating their every effort upon preparation for a big state convention of exhibitors to be held in that city the following week.

Dayton, Ohio.

From Indianapolis to Dayton was but a matter of two hours on a fast train. At the Dayton depot I found Brother C. B. Morganthaler, secretary Local Union 248, and another brother, whose name, unfortunately, got lost in the shuffle, for which we duly apologize; anyhow he was a good fellow, and showed us every kindness. During the day it was pencil pushing for mine, except for a trip to the National Cash Register Plant to inspect the projection equipment of that establishment, which will be described, somewhat in detail, in a separate article.

In the evening, in company with several of the members of the local, I visited a few Dayton houses, at least one of which deserves more than passing mention—the New Auditorium on Fourth street. The New Auditorium is a "duplex" theater. There are two 500 seat auditoriums, one above the other, the operating room of the lower being under the stage of the upper. The lower theater begins the day, and when the first two reels are finished they are sent upstairs and the show is started in the upper auditorium, thereafter the show continues for the day with the lower theater two laps ahead of the upper. There are three operators employed. The operating rooms are of good size, but there were the inevitable incandescnt lamps burning; also the walls were too light in color, all of which makes for imperfect work on the screen, as well as eye strain for the operator. This was the case in every operating room we visited in Dayton. Why is it that operators will be so very foolish? Ordinary common sense should, it seems to me, tell them that light walls, and incandescent lamps burning while the picture is being projected is W-R-O-N-G, from any and every point of view. The New Auditorium runs six reels for ten cents. The projectors are Power's Six A's. Projection is in charge of S. Howell, P. Willoughby and W. Stoker. The screens are heavily tilted, which is at least partly unnecessary and looks bad. The lobby of the New Auditorium is very spacious, is decorated in pale blue and is fitted up with wicker chairs, stand lamps and cozy corners—a beautiful, commodious rest room. The house is owned by the Auditorium Amusement Company, of which that wideawake, pleasant gentleman, Gill Burrows, is manager. We had an extended talk with Neighbor Burrows; also met Mr. Elmer Rauh, president and treasurer of the company. The picture at the New Auditorium is very good, but nearly all Dayton screens showed occasional signs of faint shadow at the bottom, which is to be expected when the operating room is light, especially if that condition be supplemented by small or badly placed observation ports.

Taken as a whole, however, the work in such houses as I saw was, under the conditions, very good. But in all of the theaters there was too much stray light near the screen and the side wall lights were very much in evidence, which latter is bad. Side wall lights serve absolutely no purpose which cannot be much better served by the ceiling lights. Cut out the side lights; also all ceiling lights in the front half of the auditorium, and double the ceiling lights in the rear fixtures, is my advice.

Dayton managers, or some of them rather, are, or have, with industry worthy of a better cause been engaged in the pastime of attempting to saw each other's economic heads off—trying to commit assassination upon each other—to put each other out of business by the extremely simple process of "running more reels than he runs." To such utterly idiotic, insane lengths has this been carried that one house actually, for a time, ran fourteen reels for five cents. In saying "ran" them, I speak advisedly, since it would require approximately four hours to run that number of reels at anything like proper speed, and most certainly even the most insane reel hog could not run a four hour show for five cents. The answer is speed 'em up—shoot 'em through.

It is to be sincerely hoped that this particular form of worse-than-foolishness will be stopped, and stopped quickly. What Dayton needs, above all things, is an effective, live-wire exhibitors' league.

In the evening, at 11 o'clock, the editor talked to the operators and some of the managers for one and a half hours on projection.

There are, by the way, some queer people in this jolly old world of ours. One manager on being asked to attend the meeting said: "Naw! They can't nobody tell me nothin' about th' picture business!" Gee, I wish I was that wise. It's positively wonderful what some people know—and with what consummate skill they manage to conceal it.

Springfield, Ohio.

Beyond visiting the factory and examining into the merits of the Foos Gas, Gasoline, and Kerosene Engine I sat tight at the hotel and rested—Heaven knows it was needed. Oh yes, I did drop in at the Majestic theater for a couple of minutes and met Manager L. Chackevas and operator Wilbur Frey. I found a good size concrete operating room, with almost white walls, floor and ceiling, and the incandescent lamps going full blast. Operator Frey was at his machine, with his eyes glued to the six-inch-square observation port (?). I asked the manager why he had made such an utterly absurd port in an otherwise excellently constructed room, to which he made reply: "There's the one responsible," pointing to Operator Frey. "He was the architect of the room, and he wanted it that way." Now will some one tell me why an operator will deliberately make his own work unnecessarily difficult? Presumably Friend Frey made these little, utterly insufficient, inefficient ports because he had always worked with that kind, and, instead of using his brains to reason the matter out, followed custom, and thus made his work difficult.

When I entered the room his face was right up against the port—it had to be if he was to see his picture at all.

At 11.30 I adressed a meeting on the subject of Projection. For the first time since leaving New York the meeting was unsatisfactory in point of attendance. Only one manager was present, and not even all (though most) of the operators. Yet it was very evident that there was every need for the Springfield men to listen to just such a talk. A few questions proved conclusively that the men have done no studying at all—knew absolutely nothing about the technical side of their profession; also they were so indifferent that some came late, and a few did not trouble to come at all. Two managers sent word that they were "too tired to come." I will venture the assertion that had it been a matter of getting some especially desirable feature they would, if necessary, have stayed up all night, yet the "feature" would only benefit them for one or two days, whereas what they might have heard that night would have benefited them and their business for all time to come.

Springfield is afflicted with the "speed' em up" evil, I am told. Its operators receive from $11 to $15 per week, and its maximum admission is ten cents. There is one installation of antiquated projection machines in a vaudeville house, but the moving picture theaters all have later model machines. There is also a tendency to locate the operating room away back at the top of a high gallery, and thus render high class results on the screen impossible.

Columbus, Ohio.

The editor was quickly identified by the committee of Local Union No. 386, consisting of Brothers Charles Watson, Past President, G. F. Dedrick, Business Agent and O. H. Cornwell Secretary. I don't know what it is about me—whether I look guilty or merely suspicious but reception committees at the various cities seem to not have the slightest difficulty in selection me from the crowd of passengers.

In Columbus I think I struck, at the Chittenden Hotel, about the limit in temporary unhappy homes. After a chat with the committee, I called up my good Amberlux Lens Friend, William Booker Warner, who dropped the burdens and tremendous cares of business to come to our inn. no, that's a mistake; it isn't "mine" and I wouldn't own it on a bet—and convey to us some faint idea of how enormously pleased he was to "have you in our midst." Incidentally, William, Old Top, has just about the cutest baby doll of a buzz cart it has been my fortune to ride in up to date. We took a ride later in the afternoon and really it was all I could do to resist the temptation to take that darned baby Buick away from him and light out for New York in it even though it was snowing and the weather utterly beastly.

Well during the afternoon the committee piloted me to the lair of the Ohio Censor Board which is famous or notorious (according to how one views the matter), en masse but quite delightful folks personally. I had an extended talk with Mr. Wilson and Maude Mary Miller, who constitute two-thirds of the board. We exchanged views on the subject of censorship, and I presented them, free of charge, with a very carefully censored personal portion of certain of their official acts, particularly as to the rejection of "The Birth of a Nation," which, I have been informed by Columbus citizens, the Governor of Ohio caused to be thrown out in order to cater to the "blackbird vote." But this last is only hearsay and should not be given too much credence, beyond remarking that it is just what a politician would be very likely to do, if he could accomplish it.

At the Knickerbocker theater I met Manager J. W. Swain. Ed Dickerson is operator and Eddie boy had occasional slight shadow at the bottom of the picture.

At the Grand theater I was introduced to Mr. J. Luft, manager. Oscar Workman was operator, and Oscar, Old Top, had occasional slight shadows at the bottom of the picture.

The manager of the Hartman theater was out of the city, but we met Charles Kling treasurer of the company. The Hartman is a Klaw & Erlanger legitimate theater, running pictures temporarily to bridge a gap in bookings. The temporary operating room in charge of Brother R. A. Elkins, of Huntington, West Virginia, Local Union No. 320, had a 10 inch vent flue connected to the exhaust system of the house, this being required by law. If you asked a New York manager to thus ventilate a temporary operating room he would most likely either fall in a fit or develop rabies, but the can't-be-done stunt don't go in Ohio, so they just—do it. The regular operator of the Hartman, Brother Charles Pratt, was off duty. He has trouble with his eyes. Let us hope recovery is complete and rapid. Friend Elkins, dear heart, had occasional slight shadows at the bottom of the picture.

At one o'clock I side stepped the committee and retired to the depths of my two-fifty-per-day unhappy home to sleep off a bad headache, but found that, judging by the sound a goodly sized troupe of men were in the next room actively engaged in an attempt to operate a rock crusher and buzz-saw with a herd of grizzly bears. Investigation, however, proved it to be merely paper hangers amputating the wall's paper garment, preparatory to redecorating. I would just coax my aching head to behave, when Z-z-z-z-z zowie ker slam would go the battery of scrapers. An appeal to the office did no manner of good, so I gave it up for a bad job. At four Brother Warner brought that perfect dream of a gasoline cart and we motored until dinner time, and then visited the new, palatial Athletic Club and, after inspecting its various mysteries, satisfied the inner man.

In the evening it was my privilege, through the courtesy of Max Stearn, President Exhibitors' League and manager of the Majestic theater, to inspect the Majestic very thoroughly, and save for two major and one minor criticisms I have nothing but praise for the splendid equipment of that house. First let us dispose of the criticisms, so that the disagreeable will be out of the way, and we may have only pleasant things to contemplate: First: the operating room is of excellent construction, commodious in size and well ventilated, but it is placed at the top of the balcony, with resultant steep pitch in the projection. This of course prevents securing the best possible results on the screen, though aside from the inevitable distortion, the picture was very good, and the definition excellent. Second: the walls and ceiling of the operating room were entirely too light in color, and there was a blaze of light from four to five 16 c. p. incandescents, and a blaze of wild light from the machines reflecting from the front wall, particularly around the observation ports, all of which make it utterly impossible for the operator to see faint shadows on the screen, as well as setting up excessive and entirely unnecessary eye strain for the operator. Friend Stearn promised me he would paint the walls black, and if the operators, Forest Wilson and Clayton Weber, have any regard for their eyes, or any desire to deliver the best results on the screen, they will cut out these incandescent lights P. D. Q. and keep them cut out. Third: the observation ports, while excellent as compared to many I have seen, still might better have been full 12 inches wide by a little higher. And now for the good! The operating room is, as I said, commodious in size and very well ventilated indeed, though a pipe from the top of the lamphouse to the open air would improve matters, and could very easily be installed. There is a sink with running water and iron lockers of goodly size for each man. The projectors are Power's Six B. Just back of the projectors is a switchboard of goodly size. On the wall are Pyrene Guns. Current is taken through a Hallberg D. C. to D. C. economizer, but there are auxiliary rheostats, located near the ceiling, for use in case of emergency, with double-throw switch connections to instantly change from economizer to resistance, or vice versa. The operating room was scrupulously clean, and bore evidence that this was not merely a temporary condition. The operators do not belong to the I. A. and, at risk of incurring Manager Stearn's displeasure I will say that in this they are foolish. Mr. Stearn belongs to the Exhibitors' Union; in fact is president of it. Surely his example ought to be a good one for his operators to follow. If Mr. Stearn himself believes in unions, and if he did not he surely would not belong to one (the League is nothing but a union, formed to protect the exhibitors' and managers' interest) he certainly must approve of his operators joining one and must, away down in his heart of hearts, consider him as a bit of a chump for not belonging to the organization which is formed to protect his interests, just as the League protects the interests of Brother Stearn.

The Majestic is not only a handsome house, but a remarkably well equipped one in all departments. Mr. Stearn is evidently a man who understands the value of doing things well. Down under the stage, which is equipped with gridiron so that regular attractions may be put on at any time it is desired, is a vacuum cleaner which sucks the dirt out instead of sending it flying everywhere a la the broom. There is a most complete steam heating plant, so arranged that when the pressure of steam reaches five pounds the ventilation fan, a big one, is automatically started and pulls in air through a maze of heating coils. In summer the air is passed through a water spray, which cools and cleans it. Neighbor Stearn tells me the spray washer is worth its price merely in the advertising it supplies when exhibited to patrons. And right here this quill shover has a real bright idea. Why not place that spray in view at the front, so that patrons may, through plate glass, watch the air being purified? By colored light effects it could be made very attractive. The water is circulated through the spray again and again by an electric pump. After passing through the spray it falls into a small tank whence an electrically driven pump sucks it and forces it back through the spray.

The screen is supplied with a velour drape which is automatically swung outward at the beginning of each play, and in at its end, merely by the piano player touching a push button which operates the motor. The operator signals the piano player just before the beginning and end of each play. There is a charmingly decorated ladies' rest room, with maid in attendance, hot and cold water, telephone, and even a canary bird to supply music. Taken altogether the Majestic is a thoroughly up-to-date house, managed by a man who, aside from his attitude toward unions (other than his own) is a thoroughly up-to-date manager, and I am sorry to be obliged to criticise or disagree with a man of that kind on even one point.

At 11.30 P. M. the operators, or some of them, foregathered at Union Hall, where we gave them an hour's talk on projection, and right here, at the risk of offending my good friends, I am obliged to, for the good of their souls, criticise the membership of the Columbus local. From the letters and wires received from the Secretary I was led to suppose the Columbus men were planning to get some real good out of our visit, but that was far from the fact. So far as I know the total energy expended consisted in sending a committee to meet the train, and sending invitations to managers. Outside of this, so far as I know, there was nothing done except a perfectly reckless expenditure of seventy-five cents for lunch, which I imagine probably came out of the aforesaid committee's personal funds. Let me tell you, gentlemen and brothers, once and for all, that YOU CAN'T ACCOMPLISH RESULTS THAT WAY. I gave you, and I gave you freely, a day's time, which was worth fully twenty times the entire expense you went to. As a result of your mistaken policy not one single manager was present (you might have known they would not under the conditions obtaining in Columbus, come to the Union Hall, to start with) but few, if any, non-union men and not even the entire membership of your union, were present. How different from your course was that of some other unions, especially Utica, N. Y., where they did things up right, and as a result got out every manager in the city, as well as some from other towns, and every operator, too. Real good was accomplished in Utica. Some of the other unions took almost equally vigorous action, but some did little or nothing, and the benefit they derived was correspondingly small.

I am setting all this forth not to hurt your feelings—far from it, but to try to show you the utter foolishness of such a course. If you do a thing at all, my brothers, do it WELL. It is energetic action and hard work which gets results. For a few dollars of expense, and a little hard work the Columbus local might have gotten results worth hundreds of dollars, and I would have felt that the expense I was put to through stopping there was justified. Perhaps that much is true as it is, but certainly the local by no means reaped the benefit it might have reaped, which same holds equally true of Springfield, Ohio. All other unions have been pretty well alive to the possibilities of our visit and have been, so I am told, extremely well satisfied with results. Here is a letter from one local, Springfield, Illinois. President John A. Caldwell, Local Union 323, writes:

> Friend Richardson: If you ever come to Springfield again (I hope you will) you will get in trouble, for the next morning after your lecture some of the operators were calling me before I had breakfast, and were down to my house for advice; also I find the managers in the same frame of mind, so you see what you have done. Say man, if I can only keep them at it, there will be a change here, and it is what I have long been fighting for. Now, Richardson, I might write a dozen pages, but one word will cover the whole dozen and that is "Thanks." I hope you are having a pleasant trip. At any time that I personally, or Local 323 as a body can do anything for you, command us.

Springfield Local Union 323 did not get that kind of result merely by sending a committee to the depot to welcome the editor, however. Columbus and Springfield (Ohio) will please understand that this is not intended merely to hurt their feelings, but to wake them up and impress upon them, for the future, the importance of vigorous action when opportunities such as this occur.

Coshocton, Ohio.

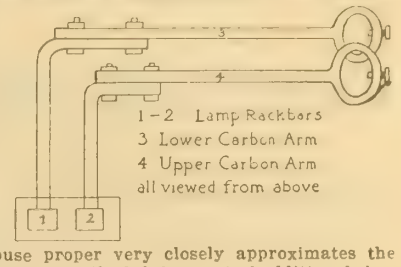
Two of the stage hands did duty as reception committee at the depot, as all operators were working and there are no extra men for relief. The stage hands and operators have been together in one local, but finally concluded to, and have just secured a divorce, with alimony of good will for both sides, and the operators are now sailing the sea of unionism in a brand new boat which is all their own, and of which they seem inordinately proud. The department bids them Godspeed and bon voyage with heartiest good will.

After dinner I dropped in at the "Cinderella" theater, paying my dime like a little man, so that not a soul knew "Richardson was there." The picture was decidedly brilliant, and except for a time or two when the operator lost his arc in changing over from A. C. (used to heat up carbons) to D. C. the screen was evenly illuminated and the work excellent, except for the item of too much speed, which, I am told, was not the operator's fault. Of course there was the Saturday evening crowd and people waiting, and under these conditions the temptation for the manager of the small theater to "speed 'em up" is almost too great to be withstood; still, unless the manager does resist the allurement of those waiting dimes he will not only work great injustice on the industry, injure the films, thus injuring the show of all brother exhibitors who must run them thereafter, and render abortive the best efforts of the producer, but will actually perpetrate a sort of petty swindle on his own patrons. The speeding at the Cinderella was not as bad as I have seen, oh so many times, in other theaters, but it was sufficient to very decidedly mar the effect and to cheat me, a patron, of proper enjoyment of the show, and therefore, in somewhat lesser degree, it cheated others, though I knew there was something wrong, and what that something was, whereas they doubtless merely wondered only why people, horses and things moved with such astonishing and utterly absurd speed. Then, too, there was another minor annoyance, viz.: beside and within perhaps two feet of the screen was a clock face, with an incandescent lamp smearing light around a circle of fully two, if not three, feet, while on the opposite side was an exit sign about 10 x 12 inches, also containing an incandescent of entirely unnecessary c. p., which showed brightly through the red glass and white letters, to the annoyance of the eye. I spoke to the manager about this as I went out, but his reply was that "it didn't hurt the picture." True, the picture itself was in nowise injured, since these lights did not strike the screen, BUT IT HURTS OR STRAINS THE EYES, Brother Manager, and that is worse still. And it is so entirely useless. Put in a two or four candle power globe in both places, and cover the front of the shade with a metal plate having a hole in it just barely large enough to allow of the light covering the circle of the clock face; then paint that red glass black, and stain those white exit letters red, and you will accomplish the exact purpose you seek, and accomplish it without annoyance to the eyes of the audience. Remember that the less visibility there is to every thing except the picture the more pleasing the general effect will be. All this is not set forth with view of hurting the feelings of the manager of the Cinderella—by no means. I dwell upon this instance for the benefit of other managers who are doing the same thing. Any light of any kind whatsoever located near the picture is BAD, regardless of whether its rays strike the picture or not. It strikes the eyes of the audience, and that is sufficient to condemn it.

The Cinderella would also improve matters very materially by cutting out the two front ceiling fixture lights entirely, while the picture is on, and placing more light in those at the rear. There are no side wall lights, and that is distinctly good.

The operator ran advertising slides and the Union Slide, and every slide was clean, which was decidedly and distinctly to his credit. The projectors are Simplex, sixteen months old, and Brother E. S. Williams, the operator, informs me that the repair bill has been very low. The operating room was of brick, the observation ports not bad, ...ough smaller than they should be, but the walls were white and there were three incandescent lamps going full blast—which is very, very bad indeed. Current is taken through a Fort Wayne motor-generator set.

The Utahna theater is, I am told, named after an Indian maiden, and the young lady should have had greater consideration for posterity, because it requires considerable explanation and spell-it-outedness before the stranger can be certain he is not taking undue liberties with a perfectly respectable cognomen. Mr. C. G. Chacos is manager of the Utahna, and a most pleasant gentleman he is, too. F. Marshalle and Russell Berlin are the operators. The projection equipment is remarkable. The lamphouses, lamps and motor drive, as well as the machine tables are the invention of T. G. Chacos, a Coshocton operator. The lamphouse proper very closely approximates the Power's SixA lamphouse in size, but at the left is a sort of addition, being almost as large as the lamphouse itself. There is no partition between the two. The lamp proper is modeled after the Edison Model B lamp, and is in the aforesaid extension, but the carbon jaws are about eight inches long and, while attached to the lamp where the carbon clamp would ordinarily be, extend at right angles to the lamp, over into the lamphouse proper, as per sketch. The advantage claimed is that the wires and lamp mechanism are removed from the heat of the arc. The lamphouse is mounted on iron rollers, or small wheels which run in channel iron grooves, so that it may be shoved over to the stereopticon lens, but there is no practical method provided for moving the lamphouse backward and forward. The motor drive is quite effective, but contains no method for regulating the speed, that item being taken care of by a variable speed motor. The whole thing is "home grown" except the mechanisms, which are Power's Six. The operating room is of brick, the walls 12 inches thick and the observation (?) ports less than five inches square, and cut straight through the wall (with no flare) at that. With one'e face right up against the wall, one cannot see the whole picture at one time. There are shadows and other faults on the screen of the Utahna—of course there are. Why would there not be? It is not Brother Marshalle's fault. He has no earthly chance in the world to produce good work. And in addition to this the walls of the operating room are not black, and there were incandescent lights burning. And THE MAGNIFICENT FILMS OF OUR PRODUCERS ARE AT THE MERCY OF SUCH IMPOSSIBLE CONDITIONS AS THIS. One big producing company sent an exhibitor around the country—it seems to me, from what I have seen on this trip, they might better have sent a projection engineer. In the auditorium the picture was not bordered with black, and a clock light plastered a blaze of light six feet wide on the wall beside the screen, though the rays were shaded from the screen itself—let us be thankful for small favors.



This is a severe arraignment of the Utahna theater, yes, but it is thoroughly deserved. There is no excuse for such conditions, because theater managers and operators have been told many, many, many times to (a) border their picture in black; (b) have no incandescent lamps near the screen; (c) have observation ports 12 inches wide by as high as local law allows, up to 24 inches; (d) have the inside of the operating room painted black, and (e) have no incandescents burning in the operating room while the show is on. But what earthly use is there in preaching proper conditions to men who pay absolutely no attention? The Utahna is using alternating current, and not overly much of it, so you may imagine the effect on the screen. It was poor enough the day I was there, when the operator knew I was in the house—Heaven knows what it is at other times. And it is all so utterly useless. An hour's time would cut those ports to proper dimensions—or maybe it would take two hours. A pound or two of lampblack mixed in boiled linseed oil would coat those brick walls, and a conveniently located switch would enable the operator to extinguish every operating room incandescent, and he then could and doubtless would produce good results on the screen; also bordering the picture in black and shading that clock light so that only the face of the clock would be illuminated would be a comparatively small matter, and worth a hundred times its cost.

In the evening we addressed the managers and operators, all of whom were present, and believe much good was accomplished. At least they all said so, and one manager remarked at the end of the talk, in the hearing of all present: "Well, I certainly have learned more about my own business than I ever knew before."

After the talk we all adjourned to very neatly arranged tables in Coshocton's most swell food emporium, where the Operators' Union, President Marshalle presiding, did the honors and invited its guests to "order the whole blooming works" if they felt like it.

Notes on Film Development.

After the film has been wound on to the developing rack, immerse for a few minutes in a soaking tank of pure water as film which is plunged at once into the developing solution is apt to have air bubbles lodge on it, causing large round transparent spots on the film. Bubbles are particularly liable to collect on the film where it turns over the rack and a large camel's hair brush should be constantly kept on hand by the developing tank so that the top of the rack can be gone over with the soft brush immediately after immersing in the developing solution. The developing solution should come well over the top of the rack, otherwise the shallow layer of developer at the top which is always more oxidized than that deeper in the tank is apt to cause staining and uneven development. Continue development until sufficient density is obtained, which can be judged by raising the rack for an instant before the red light, taking care not to hold it against the red light longer than necessary, as even the safest red light will produce fog on long exposure. A small pilot red light at the end of a flexible rubber-covered cord is invaluable for minutely examining local points on the film, but it must be well tested for safety and only used when absolutely necessary, and then for as short a time as possible.

If the film has been correctly exposed the high lights of the film will soon appear in the developer, then the half-tone and then finally the shadows, and if sufficiently developed the resulting negative will have all the desired printing qualities, viz: sufficient density with full detail and the parts of the film where the light has not acted perfectly clear.

If the film was over-exposed the whole image will appear simultaneously as soon as the action of the developer takes place, and the negative will be flat and lacking in contrast.

Lack of contrast may be helped by carrying the development as far as possible without making the negative too dense to print.

Bromide of potassium has a restraining effect on the shadows and helps to keep down the fog.

An under-exposed film develops very slowly without detail in the shadows and will not yield as good a negative as one that is correctly timed. Do not carry an under-timed negative too far in the hopes of "bringing it out." An under-timed film has not had enough light in the shadows to affect the emulsion and no amount of development will bring out detail that is not there, and the high lights will meantime become so dense that when the negative is printed the high lights will be too dense to print through and you will have the familiar "soot and white wash" effect of black shadows with no detail and blank whites with no detail.

After developing is completed rinse the film well and place in the fixing bath for the purpose of dissolving the bromide of silver which has not been acted upon by the light and the developer. After all of the silver haloid appears to be dissolved and the milkiness has disappeared from the back of the film, leave it in the bath for at least ten minutes longer to insure permanency and freedom from stain.

Films that are left in good fresh acid fixing and hardening bath for at least half an hour will not show reticulation in the wash water even in warm weather, they will wash thoroughly in a fraction of the time required for insufficiently fixed negatives, and dry quickly and with practically no increase in density as long as the fixing bath is in good condition.

If the dark room is cold the developer should be kept warmed to the correct temperature by adding fresh portions of warmed developer and stirring at such intervals as may be indicated by the frequent use of an accurate thermometer. Increasing the concentration of the developer also has the same effect as warming, but is not to be recommended except for dark rooms only a few degrees from normal temperature.

A concentrated developer works fast and with much density.

A diluted developer works slowly but with finer detail and works best for short exposures.

If the developer is too strong or too warm it will produce chemical fog, which may be restrained to a certain extent by bromide of potassium.

If too much diluted it produces stain by the prolonged immersion required and is apt to produce peculiar streaks and markings.

Weak negatives with clear shadows are due to under development or too weak developer.

Weak negatives with plenty of detail in the shadows are due to over exposure or too flat lighting of subject or too weak developer.

Strong negatives with too much contrast are due to under exposure and over development or to too long developer containing too much alkali. Add more water and reduce the amount of alkali as an excess of alkali tends to block the high lights.

Too much intensity is the result of too warm or too strong developer of too prolonged development. Negatives dried in warm, sultry air become more dense on drying than when dried in a cool drafty place.

Frilling, reticulation, softening of the emulsion, emulsion leaving the celluloid or distortion of spots on the film are caused by too high a temperature. When this occurs, cool the developer with ice and increase the proportion of hardener in the hypo bath and allow the films to stand for a half hour or longer in the acid fixer.

In hot climates where ice is not available, formaldehyde added to the soaking water followed by a soaking in a 1 to 40 formaldehyde and water solution after washing, prevent melting of the emulsion, but the irritation produced by the odor of formaldehyde on all of the mucous membranes is extremely unpleasant. It is almost indispensable, however, in tropical climates and on warm sultry days in summer where plenty of ice is not available.

Pocket Edition of the Mutual Weekly.

What is probably the first number of the first periodical ever published which is devoted exclusively to the art of cinematography, was received by this department from the editor, Pell Mitchell, of the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y. It is called the "Pocket Edition of the Mutual Weekly," a large four column sheet of very interesting matter devoted principally to things of interest to news cameramen. Its purpose is shown in an introduction by the editor in which he says:

> This little periodical has a purpose. We found this fact to be true many months ago. Then after some consultation and letter-writing and securing of opinions, an idea was formed and now The Pocket Edition of the Mutual Weekly is the concrete result. It is not the child of any one brain—all of you have had to do with its conception and it is equally yours. Its success depends upon what use YOU make of it. Use it as a mental market place. Swap ideas with your brothers of the crank. If you will make it a medium for improving your work, its purpose will have been fulfilled.

This little sheet is certainly a step in the right direction and has already excited considerable interest among cameramen. It is to be hoped that it may soon be issued on a regular publishing date, and that as it goes on it will increase in size and usefulness.

Mr. Mitchell has written a letter to this department saying that he will be glad to send a free copy of each issue to any cameraman who will send his name and address. Send your request to Pell Mitchell, Editor Weekly Dept., Gaumont Company, Congress Ave., Flushing, N. Y.

Motion Pictures on Paper.

Ever since motion pictures were first made upon the transparent celluloid medium, a multitude of chemists and inventors have sought a substitute which would be cheaper and more pliable and yet more resistant to wear than the celluloid film.

There has recently appeared a machine under the trade name of Kinak which projects pictures from an opaque paper ribbon using the same standard size and perforation as moving picture films, but which, instead of projecting by transmitted light, turns the picture by means of a concentrated reflected light upon the screen.

This will open an enormous field for home picture machines, as the high price of celluloid has hitherto made it almost prohibitive for private individuals to stand the expense of maintaining a library of transparent films.

It is claimed that the new paper films can be sold at a profit at one cent a foot and that the machine is absolutely fireproof and can be operated from any incandescent light circuit. The lighting source is not an open arc flame but a series of small nitrogen lamp bulbs. It is also placed on the market as an advertising device since one model has an automatic rewind so that the projecting mechanism, film reels and lighting source are encased in a camera-like box and the motion pictures are thrown upon a transparent screen at the opposite end of a shadow box about three feet away. The spectators see these pictures by watching the front end of the shadow box.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by Clarence E. Sinn and S. M. Berg

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS concerning any phase of the work of the orchestral leader in a photoplay theater may be addressed to the Moving Picture World and the answers of Mr. Berg will appear in a Question and Answer Department, which will be a regular feature of our Music Page.

Musical Setting for "The Unwritten Law."

Released by the California Motion Picture Corporation.
Suggestion Prepared by S. M. Berg.
By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the picture and to assist in overcoming the chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of California films the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "The Unwritten Law" were prepared by Mr. Berg, who is associated with the Photoplay Department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of this picture is based on a speed of fifteen minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will assist the leader in anticipating the various cues which may consist of printed sub-titles (marked T) or by a description of action (marked D). For instance: 1¾ T "One year later" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 10 D "Cabaret scene" is a description of action.

Wilson and his wife Kate start out in life happily. Successful as a district attorney he is nominated for governor. He refuses the support of Larry McCarthy, saloon owner and political boss, and incurs his enmity, with the result that he loses at the polls. Though previously a total abstainer, he staked everything on his political ambitions, and when crushed he resorts to drink. He is aided on the downward path by McCarthy, who is infatuated with Kate, though he has a liaison with Estelle, a cabaret singer. Kate has now become the breadwinner, but owing to a fire caused by Wilson's negligence they become totally destitute and accept McCarthy's charity. Then Wilson leaves his wife and McCarthy persuades her to sue for divorce and accept his protection. Before the marriage, however, he tires of her and decides to return to Estelle. Kate's mind becomes unbalanced and in a struggle she kills McCarthy. Wilson returns just as this happens and he is charged with the murder. By hypnotic influence Kate's mind is restored just in time to clear him. The picture closes with the reunion of the now reformed husband and his wife.

Particular care must be taken in handling this picture. The whole character is intensely dramatic. Note particularly: Ball-room scenes from 16 to 24—music should be fortissimo and piano according to action; Agitato for fire scene from 40 to 86; Agitato from 57 to 59; Dramatic allegro from 77¾ to 82; Allegro agitato from 94¾ to 99; Drummer's effects; Telegraph ticker 17¼ and 19¼; Fire effects 40 to 45; Smashing of glass 57 to 59; Shot 96¾.

The THEME selected is "Canzonnetta"—d'Ambrosio.

Time schedule: seven reels (6,600 feet), 100 minutes.

Undeveloped Resources.

By S. M. Berg.

In the February 12th issue of the Moving Picture World the writer discoursed as follows: "Just as the great artists interpret the story of the ballet by their dancing so will the motion picture in the near future explain to the masses the beautiful allegories and dramatic situations bound up in the symphonic poems. It is only the favored few possessed of a thorough knowledge of music that have realized the wealth of story embodied. But in the near future it is most certain judging from the constant ebb of standards toward the ideal that motion pictures will portray the symphonic poem and there will be thrown open to all the knowledge of musical interpretation enjoyed now by the cultured few."

To those directors and producers who desire a new country to explore, rich in fantastic story with musical settings full of beauty that no composer of modern days can conceive—dig deep into the mine of symphonic stories.

As a fitting example, the writer presents

BERLIOZ'S FANTASTIC SYMPHONY.

This Berlioz symphony does not have the love motive though it has a leading melody of association. The following is the preface of titles:

1. Reveries; Passions. (Largo; Allegro agitato ed appassionato assai.)
2. A Ball. (Valse. Allegro, non troppo.)
3. In the Country. (Adagio)
4. March to the Scaffold. (Allegretto non troppo.)
5. Witches' Sabbath. Dies Irae; Witches' Round Dance. (Larghetto; Allegro assai; Allegro.)

Most significant is the foreword that precedes a full account of an episode in the life of an artist, which is the burden of the symphony.

The following programme must be distributed whenever the symphony is performed dramatically, and followed by the monodrama "Lelio" that ends and completes the story. In this case the whole orchestra is disposed on the stage behind the lowered curtain.

If the symphony alone is played, this arrangement is not needed; in fact, the programme may even be dispensed with, the titles of the five movements alone being retained. The composer hopes that the symphony may offer in itself a musical interest independent of all dramatic intent.

The composer shows here exactly the right perception, in so far as his symphony tells its own story, in pure musical process. To test the Berlioz symphony in this high purpose, we must, in hearing the work, ask the one question: Does the music tell the story, or merely heighten the effect? Therefore, the full account of small incident, in our "episode," must fairly be reserved to the end, there to test the message of the music.

A dreamy melody begins, largo, followed by more feverish strains and a more fervent burst of the first tune, in full melodic career, with free play of lesser phrases. The whispered close is broken by bright chords, Allegro agitato appassionata assai, that heralds a song of sweeping beauty. It is not a mere theme, though its essence is most centred in the first phrase. The middle verse stresses the passion: the whole needs no words for the clear stamp of a lyric of love. On the first phrase in low strings rises a fiery dialogue of profound beauty, against a new answer in high wood. Then the sovereign beauty of the song reigns alone. Later a second climax is reared in fevered response of lower strains of first phrase, topped by a higher course of the passionate motive, ending in crowning verse of the pure melody. The close comes religiosamente in softest solemn of united chords. The first strain has not recurred.

Sounds of glad expectancy soon usher the clear notes of expressive waltz, that flows in its repeated course, with intermittent vaguer play. But in the midst the love-lyric sings a verse right through the gayety of dance, and once more, before the bright close, alone in softest confidence.

Bucolic reeds betray the scene, of mournful (English) horn and cheering oboe, echoing a chance tune in lonely duet. The quaint simplicity, the impromptu song of the Ranz des vaches, all mark the rustic spot. The oboe, too, has moved his distant notes to clearer foreground. And now, in gathering of all the accompanying sounds, low strings sing the main rustic theme. But it is not all a placid pastoral. A tremulous pulse pervades. A passionate phrase now strikes in romantic depths of strings. Suddenly answers on high—the soothing love-song. The bitter, jealous theme wars with its own solace. Peace comes with a return of the first style.

The march to the scaffold hardly needs the title, with the solemn doom of funeral tramp, the fatal ring of death-song, with the sad terror of overwhelming chorus, that gives a more poignant sense to the single gentlest strain of impassioned love, just before the end that has somehow a sudden rift of hope.

The last scene is, once more, clearly pointed by the title Witches' Sabbath, that begins a stormy revel in mad medley of restless discord and vague cries. First of defined strains is the old love-motive, now piping dimly distant in merry mockery, over the dull dance of low drums. Now bursts a tempest of warring cries. Then the full course of love-song dances as before, where the cheer is blighted by the uncanny trip of basses and the nearing rage of mad cries. Symbols of doom abound in the clang of bells and ring of fateful Dies Irae, that is itself distorted in mocking rhythm. The Witches' Round Dance starts a grim orgy; later the pitiless chant mingles with the dance to crown the hopeless terror that ends the dream.

For a dream it is. The story that has been told us is of a young artist seated outside the village Inn overcome with liquor who sees his sweetheart, on her way to the Fete, turn from him in disgust on account of his drunken condition. Drinking deeper, in his dreams he follows her to the dance. After scenes of dancing and love-making his passionate desires are resented and in a struggle he kills her. Apprehended for the murder he is tried and convicted and marched to the scaffold. Then his soul in Purgatory with Satan's imps in their [illegible], his sweetheart's prayer [illegible] his soul's redemption and his awakening and realization that it was only a dream. The pure beauty of the melodies in the hue and contrast of their humors justly spin their thread of symbolic story.

Such is the wealth of material awaiting the magic of motion picture interpretation.

Essanays for April

An Unusually Snappy List of Releases Exclusive of Features Is Announced.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, announces an unusually snappy list of short subjects for April. These are exclusive of the V-L-S-E multiple-reel features and come in one, two and three-reel acts. Essanay's Wednesday releases consist of two Canimated Nooz Pictorials, Animated Cartoons by the famous newspaper cartoonist, Wallace A. Carlson, including caricatures of men in the limelight and news events of importance, and two artistic photoplay drawings by the celebrated artist, Vernon Howe Bailey. One of these gives all the interesting points of Rome, with which Mr. Bailey is thoroughly familiar. The other is the sketch of Boston, with all its historic buildings and scenes.

Both the cartoons and the picture drawings are each five hundred feet in length and contain five hundred feet of exceptionally good scenic pictures of the picturesque spots in the United States and Canada.

Among its two-reel releases, "Millstones" is one of the strongest. It is a story of the underworld of evil characters with a grain of good in them. The story is brightened by the sweetness of a girl's love. The play features Darwin Karr and Nell Craig.

Owing to the strong demand for some of Essanay's earlier releases, the company has decided to reissue two two-reelers. These are "Under Royal Patronage" and "The Elder Brother." Both of these feature Francis X. Bushman.

Among the five-reel releases for this month "The Spider's Web" is one of the best. This is a magazine story written by Clarence L. Cullen and features Bryant Washburn, Elizabeth Burbridge, John Junior and John Lorenz. This is a story of a youth who is made the slave of the drug habit, having been lured to try the drug by a jealous rival. He finally makes good, however, throws off the habit, wins the girl and a place in the affairs of the world.

Other excellent three-reel releases include "The Last Adventure," featuring Lillian Drew and E. H. Calvert; "The Frame-Up" and "A Woman's Naked Soul."

Its multiple-reel features are exceptionally strong, including William Gillette, the noted speaking stage star in "Sherlock Holmes," the play written by himself and the character to which he has given undying fame.

After South American Trade

President L. L. Hiller of Claridge Films, Inc., Will Sail for Buenos Ayres to Establish a Branch for His Company.

L. L. HILLER, president of the Claridge Films, Inc., is planning to leave within two weeks for South America with a view to establishing a branch of his company in the South American metropolis, Buenos Ayres. Many inquiries for rights to the Claridge Films productions have come to their office and instead of having the films handled through the customary channels, Mr. Hiller thinks it best to look over the ground with a view toward establishing a South American office for the Claridge films.

Although she planned on leaving several weeks ago, Mrs. Agnes Egan Cobb, general manager of the Claridge Films, just left Monday, March 13 on her trip as far west as St. Louis. Because of the many western and foreign buyers in town, Mrs. Cobb has been delayed in starting from time to time. She will visit the various exchanges who have bought the rights of the Claridge Films first two releases for their territories, Robert T. Haines in "The Heart of New York," and the William Courtleigh production "The Birth of Character." The Claridge Company reports unprecedented results in these features, and within a few days the third release of Claridge Films will be announced.

SCHWALBE BUYS TERRITORY FOR "ONE DAY."

The Electric Theater Supply Company of Philadelphia, through H. Schwalbe have purchased from B. S. Moss the rights to exhibit "One Day" in eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Southern New Jersey, Virginia and the District of Columbia. A record price is said to have been paid for the rights.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE.

Liberty of "Movies" No Light Matter.

UNDER the heading above this article, the Chicago Examiner had the following editorial in the issue of March 16, which combatted the stand taken by Editor Arthur Brisbane in his speech on moving pictures on March 12 before the Motion Picture Board of Trade in New York City:

"It is unfortunate that a newspaper man speaking at the Motion Picture Board of Trade dinner should have shown so little appreciation of the rights, privileges and opportunities of the moving picture business, of his own business and of the public.

"This newspaper man, speaking at the Hotel Astor in New York last Sunday night, declared that the motion picture plays are based upon the stupidity and lack of intellectual development of the human race and that censorship is not worth bothering about, one way or the other.

"The Examiner feels, as it has said many times, that a fundamental right of free publication is assailed by every successful attempt to impose a censorship upon motion pictures. Nor do we regard an assault upon the freedom of pictorial publication as any light or trivial matter.

"We believe, and we believe very earnestly, that the freedom of the printed press will not long be secure from attack if the freedom of the pictorial press is not stoutly defended against censorship.

"It does not make a particle of difference whether the 'movies' are educational or merely entertaining, whether they present Hamlet or Charlie Chaplin, whether they only bore an audience with dreary stuff that is supposed to create an intellectual atmosphere, or whether they make a lot of persons laugh and forget their toil and cares—still the 'movies' are exactly what we have styled them—the pictorial press.

"Now, the one essential point to bear in mind is that it makes no difference whether we believe a newspaper to be a cheap and shallow medium of sentimental slush and worked-over rags and tags of superficial information and copybook maxims, or whether we consider it a product of thought and real scholarship. Still that newspaper is entitled to the right of free publication, uncensored by anybody, and answerable only to the laws which prohibit libel and impropriety.

"And that is exactly the rightful position of the moving picture press, and every one of us should unite in maintaining that position with all possible effort.

"The proposed Federal moving picture censorship, like all state moving picture censorships, is an assault upon the constitutional guarantee of the liberty of printing and publication.

"It is a serious and dangerous assault and should be manfully and strenuously resisted by every printed publication in the country and by every citizen who believes in free speech and the other guaranties of republican government."

Chicago Political Equality League Would Prohibit Parents Taking Their Children to Evening Picture Shows.

The Chicago Political Equality League capped the climax of a campaign against moving pictures at a meeting of the moving picture committee of the League in the Auditorium Hotel on Saturday, March 11. At this meeting one of the members, Mrs. M. M. Mangasarian, proposed that an ordinance be passed by the City Council prohibiting parents or guardians from taking children to moving picture shows after nine o'clock p. m.!

Second Deputy Superintendent of Police M. L. C. Funkhouser luckily was present when the ordinance question was broached, and the lady mentioned appealed to him. "We cannot do that," the deputy replied. "Parents have the right to decide such things. All we can do is to regulate the character of the films. We have no right to tell parents what time they may take their children."

Mrs. George S. Haskell, another member of the committee, then read a list of photoplays which had been condemned by the committee during the last two months, in which little good and much that was bad were found. Among those designated as especially "rotten" (this word was used in the report) were "Sealed Lips" and "The Ghosts," the latter being pronounced the worst of all. Next to "The Ghosts" in moral badness was "The Reward of Chivalry," and "A Fool There Was" was voted distinctly immoral.

Mrs. Blanchard, chairwoman of the committee, asked for a measure enforcing the placing of pink permits in the lobbies of all picture theaters, and Deputy Funkhouser promised that this would be done.

Second Deputy Funkhouser Under Fire.

Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police, and head of the Morals Division of the Police Department of Chicago, has been charged with "flat disobedience" of Mayor Thompson's orders by Chief of Police Healey in the matter of the exhibition of cut-outs from films censored under his supervision.

"The Mayor gave me a verbal order about six weeks ago to stop the exhibition of cut-outs," says Chief Healey. "I at once repeated the order to Major Funkhouser. Recently I heard he was still giving such exhibitions, and when I asked him about it he said he had given such an exhibition in the City Hall. That constitutes flat disobedience of orders. Major Funkhouser's explanation was that he understood the order to apply only to exhibitions in connection with his speeches before clubs and lodges."

In defining his position in the matter Mayor Thompson says: "Here is the principle on which we are operating. The censors declare there are certain parts of films not fit to be shown in Chicago. If they are not fit to be shown publicly, they are not fit to be shown at all."

The rumpus has been caused by the private exhibition of cut-outs, in the rooms of the Censorship Board, before nine members of the Anti-Cruelty Society and Alderman Krause of the Twenty-first Ward, about a week ago, at the time of writing.

Second Deputy Funkhouser, when approached on the matter, said: "The charges are unknown so far as I am concerned. If it concerns moving pictures, I will defend myself at the proper time and place."

No charges, as far as known, have yet been filed against the second deputy, but Chief Healey is making an investigation and has asked him for a report.

Regarding his use of cut-outs before the Mayor's order was issued, the second deputy has said: "I have shown the picture cut-outs in my talks on censorship and in gatherings interested in moral welfare. I regarded them as of great educational value, in that they illustrated to the persons who were permitted to see them the necessity for film censorship. They were, of course, exhibited for no other purpose than the educational one."

If Chief Healey's investigation (which is approved by the Mayor) results in the filing of charges, a verdict of guilty would result in the dismissal of the second deputy. If charges are preferred, a vigorous protest will be made by all the women's clubs and women's reform societies of the city, as it is feared that the charges may mean the return of rampant vice and the reopening of the "red light" district.

Major Funkhouser has been in office since 1911, when the Police Department was reorganized. His salary is $5,000 per year.

Several years ago, in my Chicago letter, I referred at various times to the eminent unfairness of Second Deputy Funkhouser in his use of these film cut-outs. The plan of piecing together these cut-outs, so as to form a reel length or several reels length, and then show them on the screen as a connected whole was really diabolical in its conception, without one scintilla of fair dealing towards the film producer or the moving picture itself.

Ten feet of film only, in one case, may be cut from a subject that has a length ranging from 1,000 to 5,000 feet. Yet this ten feet of cut-out is made to represent (by Major Funkhouser's method) the remaining 990 or 4,990 feet that are good. And so on through as many cut-outs as may be used by the Major in one of his cut-out subjects.

Supposing that the reader, myself, Major Funkhouser and others could have our faults visualized on the screen, with no redeeming qualities introduced to soften their glaring harshness, would it be just or right to judge each individual character by the faults only? Would it even be fair to anyone of us to show our faults in such a manner, in order to demonstrate the need of the regulation of human conduct?

Would not such action be a travesty of justice—the burlesquing of our weaknesses—at the expense of the few virtues we might possess?

No; the second deputy has not only been unfair in his use of the cut-outs; whether intentional or not, his action has betrayed a vindictive spirit towards the moving picture.

The whole trade should thank Mayor William Hale Thompson for putting a stop to the outrage.

A Possible Way Out for the Harper Theater, Chicago, and the Sixteen Other Theaters Involved.

Max Schwartz, general manager of the Chicago Cinematograph Co., which owns the Harper theater, Fifty-third street and Harper avenue; the Halfield theater, Fifty-fifth and Halsted streets, and the Beach theater, Harper avenue and Hyde Park Boulevard, called at the office one day last week. Mr. Schwartz stated that nothing new had entered into the tangle in which the Harper theater is involved, but that active work is under way that will probably lead to the reopening of the house before many weeks have passed.

Mr. Schwartz told me that the Harper theater owners have a signed petition, now on file at his office, showing that not 9,000 but 14,000 residents in the Hyde Park neighborhood had signed for the reopening of the house, said petition being made personally to Mayor William Hale Thompson. He reiterated that the membership of the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, with the exception of a few, are all in favor of the reopening of the Harper, and that all the trustees, with the exception of three, have also signed this petition.

Alderman Dempsey, at the Council meeting held Monday, March 13, after hearing argument against the ordinance, the legality of which was questioned by none, moved that Mayor Thompson be asked to issue a permit for the reopening of the Harper theater. This was objected to by other Aldermen, on the ground that so long as the ordinance remained in the code it should be enforced. The matter will be further discussed at the next meeting of the Council, Monday, March 20.

It is understood that the Aldermen are now considering an amendment of the ordinance which will permit those houses already constructed (and which are in violation of the code) to remain open, and that all new theaters henceforth constructed must conform with the ordinance. It is believed that this will be done in order to prevent the wiping out of the sixteen theater properties now under ban, in addition to the Harper theater.

Over 200,000 citizens have already signed a petition to the Council to amend the ordinance, so as to save the Harper and the other sixteen theaters from being forced out of business.

Mr Schwartz reported that the Halfield and the Beach theaters are doing excellent business. At the Halfield, straight General Film and Triangle programs are used, and at the Beach, Paramount, Triangle and Metro. The Halfield admissions are 5 and 10 cents, the lower price being charged on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, and the higher for the balance of the week. At the Beach, admissions are 15 cents straight.

Chicago Film Brevities.

I was much amused by a story told me by Mrs. Bert Feltes regarding the make-up of the membership of the Political Equality League of Chicago. It was during a recess at the recent state convention of the exhibitors of Illinois, Mrs. Feltes being an ardent member of the state league. Mrs. Feltes at one time had been a member of the former league, but she was so dissatisfied with its inefficiency that she resigned. She cited as an example the case of one lady member who had been appointed on the Committee on Alleys of the city. This lady made a report on the condition of the alley near her own home, but never went beyond that in her investigations. She and her neighbors dumped their garbage in the said alley, not knowing that this was a breach of a city ordinance, which had been specially passed to provide against such action. What can be expected from the members of the Political Equality League in their attempted supervision and censorship of moving pictures! Mrs. Feltes is owner and manager of the Park theater on the South Side.

George K. Spoor acted as host to the members of the Advertising Association of Chicago on St. Patrick's Day. Over 80 automobiles carried the party from the clubrooms on Clark street to the Green Mill Gardens on the North Side, where luncheon was served, Mr. Spoor being host. The line of march was headed by Chief of Police Healey and a squad of mounted policemen. Moving pictures of the procession were taken at the start and on its passage through Sheridan road. The party, after luncheon, proceeded to the Essanay plant, where they were conducted throughout the large buildings. Before leaving, they were invited to see themselves in the moving pictures taken, and the film was presented to the association.

The amusement Supply Company, of Chicago, will move into its new quarters in Suite 300-302, in the Mallers Building, where better and quicker service will be given to patrons. Watterson R. Rothacker has contracted for the exclusive services of Vincent V. Colby, the famous animal artist. Mr. Colby is the well-known originator of the "Colby Dog" post cards, which were published in sixteen designs and had a record-breaking sale of more than twelve million. He has traveled extensively in his artistic studies and has been on every continent in the world except Australia. Mr. Colby will produce special half-tone animated advertising cartoons for the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, and is working out a series of unique entertainment cartoons for general release, details of which will be announced to the trade at an early date. Mr. Colby is recognized as an authority on gelatine photogravure.

Harry Weiss, manager of Metro's Chicago office, accompanied by his assistant, Mr. Weinschenker, attended the recent State convention of Indiana exhibitors, held in Indianapolis. He informs me that he won first prize for the exhibit given there by exchanges, and that his was the only exchange outside of the State of Indiana that was represented. He made the return trip by auto, covering about 482 miles in three days. While in Indianapolis his auto was struck by a street car and wrecked, he and Mr. Weinschenker narrowly escaping serious injury, the accident being due to a misunderstanding of signals by the motorman of the street car. Mr. Weiss used some of his telling film salestalk on the claim agent of the street car company, with the result that he was not only given a new car but also a cash bonus for loss of time and inconvenience.

Charles I. Ramsdell has been appointed amusement manager of the Acme Amusement Co., of Lincoln, Neb. He succeeds M. L. Garman, who has retired. Mr. Ramsdell is well known in film circles throughout the Middle West, and spent several years of his early life in Lincoln. He has had about nine years' experience in the amusement business, his first position being that of operator of the Rex theatre, at Wymore, Neb., in 1907. He afterwards entered the film business in Lincoln, where he remained for some time and then settled in Omaha, where he represented the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. When this exchange was purchased by the General Film Co. Mr. Ramsdell was retained as manager of the Omaha exchange until he was promoted to the management of the Kansas City exchange. He next took charge of the Omaha and Des Moines offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, but was obliged to resign, owing to ill health. A vacation in Colorado fully restored him, and he returned to Lincoln a few weeks ago to fill the position already referred to. Mr. Ramsdell's numerous friends wish him all success in his present position.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

PROPOSED ORDINANCE MAY FALL THROUGH.

City Council in Deadlock Over Single Film Commissioner—May Abolish Censorship.

FOR several weeks now our local legislators have been wrangling over the new motion picture ordinance as recommended by the Public Welfare Committee and which, as stated previously in these columns, proposed a single film commissioner in place of the old Censor Board.

In order to break the present deadlock in the Council our city fathers may decide to drop the ordinance altogether and give the City of Los Angeles an opportunity to show how it would behave without a local censorship. Such a pleasing possibility was made public last week by Councilwoman Estelle Lawton Lindsey, head of the Public Welfare Committee.

Mrs. Lindsey states that she is sure of five votes to support her in a movement to repeal the existing ordinance and to abolish the existing board of censors, leaving the situation open for police regulation under the penal laws of the state. She says she is sure of the support of Councilmen Brain, Conwell, Langdon, Topham and Wright, making the six votes necessary to enact the ordinance if it becomes necessary to insist upon such a vote being taken.

Mrs. Lindsey takes the stand that it would be better to wipe out the present method of local censorship, if it is finally determined that the single commissioner idea cannot be established, as originally recommended by her committee.

At the public hearing Tuesday last week on the tentative ordinance, providing for the appointment of a single censor commissioner, Councilman Wright took a firm stand in favor of abolishing all local censorship. Councilmen Brain, Conwell and Mrs. Lindsey spoke in favor of the single commissioner idea, but indicated that they might be persuaded to abolish all local censorship if necessary.

It became apparent that the Council was deadlocked because of the varying opinions as to a single commissioner.

In order to pass the proposed ordinance providing for a commissioner, seven votes will be necessary, because the ordinance provides for the expenditure of public funds in fixing the commissioner's salary.

On Wednesday afternoon members of the public welfare committee, including Chairman Lindsey conferred with the City Attorney on this proposed measure. After the conference Mrs. Lindsey said:

"At the present time I don't see where we are going to get seven votes to pass the proposed ordinance providing for a single commissioner. But it will take only six votes to pass an ordinance repealing the existing ordinance and abolishing the local board of censors.

"If there is no way to break the deadlock, I am ready to vote to abolish the present system of censoring in Los Angeles, and I am confident Councilmen Brain, Conwell, Langdon, Topham and Wright are with me in this. Then, probably, the others will come around to the single commissioner idea, which my committee recommended. There seems to me to be plenty of law whereby we may get after those who show improper pictures, just as we are able to get after other things. I stand by our committee's recommendations as to a single commissioner, but if we can't get that, then I am for the abolition of the whole business."

Final action of the Council will probably be taken Thursday this week.

As it may interest many of our readers, we herewith publish the full text of this much debated ordinance:

ORDNANCE NO. ——

(New Series.)

An ordinance regulating public exhibitions of moving and motion pictures, and creating the office of Commissioner of Films and Pictures, and fixing a penalty for the violation thereof.

THE MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF LOS ANGELES DO ORDAIN AS FOLLOWS:

Section 1. FREIGHT RATE WAR.

Western Film Men Incensed. Board of Trade Starts Fight on High Rates.

Initial steps toward a nation-wide campaign to bring about readjustment of freight rates on moving picture equipment and supplies, were made at the regular twice a month meeting of the California committee of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. Committees were named and members appointed to look after this and other important matters.

The freight matter means more to the jobbers and accessory men. During the past five years the tariff on picture machinery and accessories has been increased from $1.95 per hundred to $7.40, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. Articles billed as picture machinery, even electric motors for projection machines, it is said, are charged at the maximum rate if sent to picture dealers, but if billed to an electrical or other concern are charged at the minimum rate.

Those who attended this meeting of the Board besides the original California representatives of the organization, who are Mabel Condon, chairman, Kenneth A. O'Hara, J. C. Jessen, Clarke Irvine, included, Bennie Zeidman, Carlyle Robinson, M. G. Jonas, Kenneth McGaffey, William E. Wing and Miss Doris Schroeder, all are now members of the Board.

At the next meeting local officers are to be elected and the reports of the committee heard. It is expected that some interesting matters will be brought up for consideration in connection with the several large studios here. The work of the board has been laid out and there may be some excitement before the spring is over.

WAS DARWIN RIGHT?

If the Scientist Could See Actors at Jungle Film Studio He Might Be Greatly Elated.

The Edwards and Ronin Jungle Film Company, in Los Angeles, has a small collection of most intelligent apes. The players are headed by Napoleon the Great and by Sally, who is some leading woman, too.

Besides being an actor, Nap, as he is familiarly called by his employers, friends and director, is an able bodied seaman. During the last trip that he made abroad with Little Hip and Lew Bristol, the trainer, all were admitted to the order of Neptunus Rex.

Napoleon and Sally "In Dutch."

Nap and Hip are the only two animals known to belong to this marine order, and in the dressing room of the chimpanzee at the E. & R. Jungle studio hangs the certificate of membership. Every vessel that crosses the equator admits its passengers to the order, and these semi-humans were aboard the Ventura when they crossed the line. Today Nap is the only animal member for Little Hip died after arrival in Australia.

These two animals were very much attached to each other, and so strong was their friendship that the vaudeville bookings were cancelled for two weeks, owing to the fact that Napoleon refused to work. Whether it was grief over the loss of his playmate, or whether he could not get used to working alone could not be determined, but the fact is that when the act opened in a new house, he went through his stunts in his usual blase manner. He has the sang froid of a matinee idol, and his whole appearance when working is "Well, I suppose you need the money, so I'll do what I can for you," and he does it, too.

A TIP TO SCENARIOISTS.

Here Is What the Universal Actually Desires, According to Editor H. G. Stafford.

"We are crazy for stories. Only today have I been searching the universe for a five-reel feature for J. Warren Kerrigan. Every director is anxious to receive stories," is what "Doc" H. G. Stafford, editor of scenarios at Universal City told us the other day, and he meant it, too. But there is only one wish he expresses with much emphasis. That is "Please do not submit any stories in continuity form; no working scripts are wanted. All the writer has to do is to send in a detailed synopsis. The Universal has a staff of writers who know the needs of the directors and players, and it is for them to grind out the story scene by scene.

Vice President and General Manager H. O. Davis at the big Laemmle plant said, "We do not want to wade through pages and pages of continuity, reading ourselves blind, spending hours and hours to find the story. We want it in a few hundred words. If we want the story we purchase immediately and have our own writers put in the action."

The editor, who is a most amiable chap, smiled and pointed to a stack of opened scripts. "There is a fine week's work. I have to wade into that every morning, and by night I have culled them down to only a few which are sent out to the directors for final acceptance. Then we have to rehash the stories and write them to suit the company that selects them. If scenario writers over the country only knew what we wanted, they would save time, paper, labor, postage and improve chances of quick sale. I could do probably a week's work in a day, and accomplish the purpose much better. My earnest request is that stories be sent in only in synopsis form, with, perhaps a few explanations of what the writer desires put into the action. Visualize the story without the lengthy scene action."

We might add that in most every other western studio where a scenario bureau is in existence, the editor desires only synopsis scripts."

Santa Fe, N. M., papers advise that the National Bible Play Society, a million dollar corporation, has recently been organized, and acquired the Las Vegas Hot Springs property of one thousand acres formerly owned by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway.

The property contains the Montezuma hotel, a hostelry known the country over, a smaller hotel, a number of residences, a farm, a park, and the highly mineralized and efficacious hot springs—37 in number.

The National Bible Play Society will produce Bible motion pictures, filming such stories as "Ruth and Naomi," "The Good Samaritan," "Esther," "Jacob," "David," "The Prodigal Son," "In the Wilderness," etc. Each picture will be supervised and censored by an inter-denominational board of ministers who will pass on all phases of the story and production before it is released.

The circulation of these films will be chiefly among the churches, Y. M. C. A.'s and like organizations.

One of the unique and unusual phases of the society's plans, we are informed, is the fact that forty per cent. of the net profits will go to charity. This money will be expended in the erection of orphanages, hospitals and homes, on the society property. The society will also operate the Las Vegas Hot Springs as a resort and vacation spot particularly for church people, Chautauquas, conventions, re-educate, inspire and enliven the stay of those who spend the summer at Las Vegas.

The National Bible Play Society is non-sectarian and inter-denominational.

Four hundred men, women and children lodged complaints with the state labor commissioner here this week against a local moving picture company.

According to the complaints filed by H. W. Thayer and others, they were sent out to the picture camp by the municipal employment agency. Thayer said they were to receive $1 per day and lunch.

"When we got our tickets they took us to Chatsworth via the Southern Pacific and there we were told we must strip, be painted yellow and don the clothing of aborigines.

"Many of us objected to doing this for less than $3."

H. A. Cable, assistant deputy state labor commissioner, and Harry S. Donoho, superintendent of the State city employment bureau, arranged a conference between the picture company officials and the complainants at the labor bureau.

Strolling around the Fine Arts with Bennie Zeidman one afternoon this week, we had the pleasure to watch the filming of some scenes in "The Little Apache." There was a most realistic interior of a Parisian cafe, such as the writer has seen many a time in Quartier Latin or Montmartre. Bobby Harron and charming Mae Marsh were among the dancers on the crowded floor and seated at the tables were many types such as we never see outside of Paris.

Scene from "The Little Apache" (Fine Arts).

Some very elaborate sets have been built especially for this production. Three complete streets are exact replicas from Montmartre. These sets were built under the supervision of director Lloyd Ingraham and a French expert. Mobs of three and four hundred people took part in some of the scenes and every attention was given to details in order to secure a true Parisian atmosphere.

One of the busiest studios in Hollywood is the Christie plant where Producer Al Christie and his brother, Charles, are turning out Nestor fun pictures. This week the veteran Nestor director is completing a comedy written by L. J. Hubene. It is called "Betty's Big Capture," and has for its portrayers Betty Compson, in the name part; Lee Moran as Potts the inimitable detective, and Eddie Lyons as the young police reporter. There are many amusing situations in the piece for when Betty is appointed to the town police force she shows up poor Potts and the reporter, capturing the desperado herself singlehanded.

Last week Fred L. Miller, who owns and operates one of the largest and most popular Los Angeles theaters, which bears his name, entertained a number of press and photoplay people at his house when he gave a preview of the latest Fox masterpicture "The Bondman." William Farnum, who stars in this production, was present and received the congratulations of his numerous friends. Mr. Miller will present this great film in a short time. At present he is packing them in with "Gold and the Woman," featuring Theda Bara.

Frank Keenan, who resumed work at Inceville some time ago, is now busy making a picture that somewhat resembles "The Coward," that excellent production made by Thomas H. Ince, which was a strong feature on the first Triangle program. Charles Ray is the son, and in that part he is good. Louise Glaum is the girl and Gertrude Claire is the mother, which completes an admirable cast.

The other day on Broadway a big coupe stopped in front of our building and who should step out but that big giant Jack McGowan, producer of railroad serials. Inside was dainty Helen Holmes, the famous girl who does the hazardous stunts. They told about having just completed the last few scenes for the fifteenth and last installment of "The Girl and the Game." They had just returned from a week's trip to the desert and were glad to be back in civilized territory once more.

Director James Young, at the Lasky studio, is busy on a big production with the newest Lasky star, Mae Murray. Miss Murray received her machine from New York last week by freight, and the first thing she did was to go home, smash in the garage door, bend a bumper and crumple a fender. Mr. Young says if she can't take better care of herself she had better ride to and from the studio in leather limousine. (Shoes).

Last week was featured at the Christie studio by the tremendous automobile purchases. Five cars were brought by members of the company that turns out Nestor comedies. One automobile salesman has been sleeping in the studio for a week, until he sold Lee Moran a fine new six cylindered bus. Al Cawood, who cranks a camera, was another motor man. Horace Davey, one of the directors, also annexed a gas wagon, and Harry Rattenberry, who does characters, fell for a four-forty roadster. The last man to fall was Charles Christie, brother of Al, who is now riding around in a big car.

Want Federal Tax Abolished

California Exhibitors Petition Congress to Take Tax Off Places of Amusement.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Alameda County, Local No. 2 of the California state organization, has commenced a campaign which will doubtless be taken up by branches of the National League throughout the entire country. A petition to Congress, asking that the Federal tax on places of amusement be abolished, has been drawn up and this is to be circulated among the exhibitors of California at an early date for the purpose of securing signatures. The petition, which sets forth the arguments for such an action on the part of the national body, is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

Gentlemen: The undersigned owners and proprietors of moving picture theaters and other public exhibitions and shows having a permanent location within the State of California respectfully petition Congress for relief from any proposed taxation of the properties of theaters, museums and concert halls, or any renewal or continuance of the taxation upon such persons as provided by the terms of Section 3 of an act entitled: "An Act to Increase the Internal Revenue and for other Purposes," approved October 22, 1914, and respectfully represent:

First. That moving pictures are a universal means of education and diversion and in the public interest should be encouraged. That the condition of the business of exhibiting moving pictures is greatly hampered by the tax referred to and its standards restricted.

Second. That the occupations suffering the burden of such acts are the particular objects of local, state and municipal taxation and as such already have imposed upon them taxes in the full amount which can reasonably be borne; that local taxation can better meet the requirements of just apportionment of the burden than a system of federal taxation which must be uniform, regardless of varying conditions in different sections of the country.

Third. The taxation in proportion to seating capacity works an injustice as shown by comparison with the tax on income levied on practically all of such occupations by the provisions of the United States Corporation Excise Tax Law of 1909.

Fourth. That the provisions of an occupation tax as applied to your petitioners were, and would be in effect, though not in law, double taxation because of the existing excise tax, and a repression of legitimate enterprises.

WHEREFORE, your petitioners pray that consideration be given to this petition in the framing of any proposed act affecting taxation with relation to theatres, museums, concert halls, places of public exhibitions and shows, or the proprietors thereof, and that they be exempted from the provisions of any such act.

Beyfuss Returns to Coast

Says That He is Well Pleased With His Efforts to Market His Picture by State Rights.

ALEXANDER BEYFUSS, vice president and general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, has returned to San Francisco after a month's stay in New York looking after his company's initial release of its better-than-program pictures. Before taking his departure, Mr. Beyfuss concluded the sale of the various territorial rights throughout the United States for "The Unwritten Law," in which Beatriz Michelena is starred, and gave out the following statement:

"We are convinced that the state rights method of distributing is the big and absolutely the only way for our policy, that of producing five or six pictures a year superior to those released by the programs. In this connection we note with interest a resolution adopted at the Fourth Annual Convention of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in session at Albany a week ago, as follows: 'That the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is opposed to the program system now enforced by a majority of the producers, and we favor a system of open booking.'

"We want to impress once more that we have had no quarrel with the programs, but merely wish to go on record that the state rights or open distributing policy is the only way for a concern like ours, with a policy of producing but a few exceptionally good pictures a year, and that we could not release our product on the program basis and exist.

"We are more than satisfied with the results attending the first release by state rights of our better-than-program pictures," said Mr. Beyfuss in conclusion. "The policy of the California Motion Picture Corporation is definitely and positively mapped out for the next three years. We may produce but fifteen pictures during that period, but we want to emphasize the fact that it will be our aim to have each one stand on its own merits, our directors feeling assured that with such a policy our trade mark will stand out as formidably in the motion picture business as do well known trade marks in the mercantile and other fields of industrial pursuit."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of March 20 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Lost Bridegroom" at the Strand.

JOHN BARRYMORE was seen at the Strand theater last week in a new comedy drama, "The Lost Bridegroom," in which he appeared as an innocent crook. Bertie Joyce, the role assumed by Barrymore, is a young society chap who is struck on the head by thugs while returning from his bachelor dinner on the eve of his marriage to Dorothy Hardin. His memory completely obliterated by the blow, Joyce wanders down to the river front, falls asleep on a wharf and tumbles into the river. When he scrambles out he is taken in hand by a band of crooks and becomes a gentleman burglar. In the supporting cast are Katherine Harris, Ida Darling, June Dale, Hardie Kirkland, Edward Sturgis, Jack Dillon, and Tammany Young. The Topical Review contained news pictures taken in this country and abroad, and also the latest European war pictures. The Paramount Pictograph and a feature concluded the film part of the program. The vocal soloists for the week were Bruce Weyman, Phyllis Davies and Irving Alves.

Constance Collier at the Broadway.

The program at the Broadway consisted of two features. Constance Collier, the distinguished English actress in the Paramount Picture, "The Code of Marcia Gray," an engrossing drama of modern fashionable life and finance, in which this talented artist offered some of the best work of her career, was the star of the program. The other feature was "One Day," the sensational drama, written as a sequel to Elinor Glynn's "Three Weeks." Travel scenics, short comedies and cartoons were also shown.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

William S. Hart, in a Triangle-Kay Bee production, "The Aryan;" a Keystone comedy, "Gipsy Joe;" a visual tour through picturesque corners of Italy, botanical color studies and the usual high grade musical program made up the bill at the Knickerbocker. Mr. Hart has a role in "The Aryan" similar to the one he played in "Hell's Hinges," and is supported by Herschel Mayall, Charles K. French, Bessie Love, Louise Glaum and Gertrude Claire. In "Gypsy Joe," Joe Jackson, Dora Rogers, Lew Morrison, Elizabeth De Witt, Betty Marsh, M. De la Parelle, and "Shorty" Hamilton.

E.-K.-O. SHOW "THE INVISIBLE ENEMY."

The E.-K.-O. Company, which was recently organized in Los Angeles by Miss Emma K. Oswald, has opened offices in the new building at Seventh avenue and Forty-ninth street. George Szirmay is general manager. He is preparing to exploit "The Invisible Enemy," a five-part subject treating of tuberculosis. It is Mr. Szirmay's intention to inaugurate an active campaign on the rental or state right basis. He promises exhibitors will have the active co-operation of the 2,500 branches of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. The subject will be exhibited in New York within a few days. Mr. Szirmay states "The Invisible Enemy" will be followed by a series of productions along educational and sociological lines.

Henry B. Lappe, Owner of Fine Kansas City House, Sells Share to Former Manager, Who Again Becomes Active.

WORD comes from Kansas City that Henry B. Lappe, the owner of the big Willis Wood theater, one of the finest structures in the Middle West, has sold an interest in his house to Joseph H. Gilday, who, for several years has been associated with him in the management of the theater. The announcement is as follows:

"Henry B. Lappe, owner of the Willis Wood theater, has sold twenty shares of stock to Joseph H. Gilday, who will again assume active management of the house. The remainder of the stock is retained by Mr. Lappe. The option on a portion of the stock held by Martin Brothers and Estes expired on March 3. Mr. Lappe and Mr. Gilday will continue the theater with the same policy as in the past."

Interesting Vitagraph Program

Releases for the Week of March 27 Includes Blue Ribbon Headliner and Strong Supporting List of Productions.

AN unusually interesting program has been prepared by the Vitagraph Company for release during the week of March 27. The headliner is the four-part Blue Ribbon feature, the "Two-Edged Sword." A strong supporting list of pictures consists of "Mr. Jack Inspects Paris," the latest of the "Escapades of Mr. Jack," with Frank Daniels; "Three Johns," a single reel comedy; "Freddie Foils the Floaters," another of the "Freddie" series of single part comedies; and the three-part Broadway star feature, "Out of the Quagmire," a gripping political drama complete the bill.

In "The Two Edged Sword," Edith Storey and Evart Overton find an excellent medium for the display of their wonderful talent. The story tells of Dorothy, the wife of Gordon Allen, a novelist, who is too engrossed in his work to devote much time to his wife.

Edith Storey and Evart Overton have the able assistance of Josephine Earle, Robert Gaillard, Logan Paul, Marion Henry and Mrs. Nellie Anderson. George D. Baker directed the action. It will be released on March 27.

"Mr. Jack Inspects Paris," the latest of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack," will be released on March 27. In this episode Frank Daniel poses as a generous uncle who sends his nephew Paul $5,000 to start the practice of medicine in Paris. Paul, however, is more interested in Fifi, a chorus girl, on whom he spends the money. When Uncle decides to visit Paris on short notice, complications arise, and many highly amusing incidents take place. This is an excellent comedy, perpetrated in Mr. Daniel's inimitable style.

"Three Johns" is the story of the attempts of two men, each named John, to capture a lunatic, also named John. Each thinks the other the lunatic, and while they are having each other arrested, the sheriff's wife captures the real John and the reward. The film was produced by Dave Smith, the cast including G. Kunkel, G. Holt, G. Stanley, [illegible] Beninger, Anne Schaefer and Jack Hower. It is scheduled for release on March 27.

In "Freddie Foils the Floaters," the latest "Freddie" picture, Wm. Dangman as Freddie gets a job with a newspaper. Having a personal grudge against one of the candidates for district attorney, he rounds up that candidate's repeaters or "floaters." He then succeeds in trapping them in a barn. It proves some job but he gets there just the same. Dangman is assisted in the enactment of the picture by George O'Connell and Frank Currier. The latter, besides playing an important role, also directed the picture which is slated for release on March 31.

In "Out of the Quagmire," Vitagraph has given us an exceptional drama. It deals with the attempt, by a rival faction, to cast a slur on the honor of Arsdale, the candidate for mayor, by making it appear that his wife is in love with Norton, keeper of a gambling house. This unusual drama of love and politics is well portrayed by Joseph Kilgour, Julia Swayne Gordon, Eleanor Woodruff and a strong supporting cast. Theodore Marston is responsible for the direction of this picture which will be released on April 1.

"Social Pirates" a Special

Kalem's Series By George Bronson Howard Being Handled As Special Feature By General Film.

AS THE result of many letters received from exhibitors seeking information, Kalem wishes to make it plain "The Social Pirates," the big new series by George Bronson Howard, is an addition to the regular program output of Kalem and is being handled as a "Special" by the General Film exchanges. The series brings the Kalem output to five subjects a week, the four subjects on the regular program being the Sis Hopkins Comedies, Hazards of Helen, Ham Comedies and Ethel Teare Comedies.

Scene from "The Parasite" (Kalem).

Kalem's innovation of showing two episodes of the new series to exhibitors wherever possible in advance of the taking of bookings is being followed throughout the series and as fast as prints can be prepared they are rushed to the exchanges so that exhibitors will have plenty of opportunity to "see before buying." "The Parasite" is the title of the third episode in the series, which is now being given advance showings at many of the exchanges.

In "The Parasite," Mona and Mary, the two clever "Social Pirates" continue the exciting career that made the two opening episodes so enjoyable. This time the girls choose for their prey a society loan shark and blackmailer and through a daring clever plan deal him a severe blow and at the same time aid one of his helpless victims. As with each of the episodes the story is entirely complete in the two reels.

April 10th is the release date for "The Parasite."

MARY MILES MINTER GETS OVATION IN CANADA.

Mary Miles Minter, the youngest star of the stage or screen, who is now appearing in Metro wonderplays, has returned from a tour of several of the largest cities in Canada where she was tendered a truly marvelous reception. She was received by royalty, dined and feted by college students, visited hospitals, edited the motion picture page of a big newspaper for one day, gave away thousands of autographed photographs, and received so many flowers from boy and girl admirers that it was necessary to obtain an automobile to convey them to her hotel.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

ILLINOIS STATE LEAGUE.

The Election of Officers for the Ensuing Year and the Fine Spirit and Harmony of the Meeting are Matters for Sincere Congratulation.

By James S. McQuade.

I BECAME much enthused during the proceedings of the annual convention of Illinois Branch, No. 2, M. P. E. L. of America, held Tuesday, March 4, in Room 202, Masonic Temple. The cause of my enthusiasm was the earnest spirit shown by the exhibitors present in the business transacted and in the future of their state organization and of the national organization; also the fine spirit of harmony that prevailed throughout, and the fraternal interest and goodwill that existed between Chicago exhibitors and their visiting brethren from various parts of the state.

I am proud of Chicago exhibitors because of their magnanimity in the choice of officers for the ensuing year, as the three most important officers, president, first vice-president and treasurer, have been filled by downstate men, and I am just as proud of the downstate men elected for having accepted the offices, and declaring themselves at the service of their state organization, in any way, at all times. Such a spirit, with the same prevailing harmony, cannot fail to make the Illinois League a power that will be felt in all cases affecting the welfare of the moving picture business in the state of Illinois.

George Henry, president of Chicago Local, called the convention to order at 12.45 P. M., and after a few preliminary remarks turned over the gavel to G. M. Luttrell, state president. President Luttrell congratulated those present on having lined up a good solid state organization, and felt confident that by continued hard and harmonious work the organization will soon be worthy of the great state of Illinois.

After the roll call was made, Louis H. Frank, owner of the Halsted theater, Chicago, moved that a nominating committee be appointed for the nominating of state officers. This committee was formed by Max Hyman, M. A. Choynski, C. J. Law, Wm. Bradly and Louis H. Frank.

Wm. J. Sweeney, treasurer of the Chicago local and national vice president for the state, then announced that arrangements had been made with the railroads coming into Chicago from both east and west for special rates for all exhibitors, friends and relatives who may come to the National Convention in July. He also said that he had received a letter from Jacob Binder, secretary of the Moving Picture Board of Trade, in which Mr. Binder stated that the board would do all in its power to contribute to the success of the National Convention. Mr. Sweeney also informed the assemblage that the Chicago Association of Commerce is now endeavoring to make arrangements for the use of the Coliseum (with a capacity of 10,000 people) for the National Exposition and grand ball to be given during the convention.

The report of the nominating committee was then made, and the following exhibitors were named for the various offices:

President, G. M. Luttrell, Luttrell's Majestic, Jacksonville; first vice president, Will Bradley, the Crescent, Ottawa; second vice president, Julius A. Alcock, Chicago; treasurer, W. W. Watts, the Gaiety and Vaudette, Springfield; secretary, Sidney Smith, Chicago, and national vice president, Wm. J. Sweeney, Chicago.

After the list was read it was moved, seconded and carried that the list as read be duly elected to fill the various offices. This was done by acclamation.

The next order of business was the election of the State executive committee, which resulted as follows:

C. J. Law, Pana, chairman; Harry Hyman, L. H. Frank and Robert R. Levy, all of Chicago; Dee Robinson, Peoria; W. M. Sauvage, Alton, and Ed. Kunz, Springfield.

In response to the request from the chair, Will Bradley made a short speech, during which he emphasized that the paying of dues was not enough to become a member of the organization, as each member must be ready at all times to give a reason why exhibitors should organize.

C. J. Law was the next speaker. He congratulated the convention on the fact that exhibitors were now getting in shape to do something worth while for their business, and he enjoined that all should work and pull together for the increase of membership. He said that he did not believe in sending out solicitors to get members just for the sake of what each could make in the shape of percentage. In the past the use of this method had led to misrepresentation, he said, as solicitors had represented to exhibitors, whom they were trying to enroll, that the first payment of dues was all that was required in order to become a member. In many cases no receipts had been given for the dues paid, both of which evils had made exhibitors exceedingly wary of becoming members. Mr. Law also referred to the good work done by the downstairs members of the League in the fight against the state censorship bill, which was attempted to be passed at Springfield some time ago. These members had seen Governor Dunne and had simplified matters for him by giving the facts.

W. W. Watts, the new state treasurer, next thanked the convention for the honor conferred on him. He reminded them that before coming to Chicago he had intended to be nothing more than a good working member, but that he accepted and appreciated the honor. "Without Chicago the state league cannot hope to get anywhere," said Mr. Watts, "and exhibitors throughout the state will now be convinced that there is a consolidation of exhibitors throughout the entire state." He believed that a good feature of the coming National Convention in Chicago and also of other meetings, would be the attractions offered during the sessions, as these would serve as a magnet in drawing a large attendance.

Ed Kunz, George Henry and M. A. Choynski were the next speakers in order. Mr. Choynski dwelt on organization. He realized the necessity for organization when he was a lone exhibitor years ago. "The moving picture business affects every man, woman and child in the country," said Mr. Choynski. "Some reformers first tried to kill the business and now they are trying to regulate it, and some of the latter are working only to secure offices and the salaries attached to them. Manufacturers and exhibitors are never called in when the business is being man-handled by the people outside of it." The exhibitors in the Illinois League must go out and proselyte in order to bring the luke-warm exhibitors in, he advocated.

At this juncture Wm. J. Sweeney took the floor and suggested that the annual meeting should be subject to the call of the state executive committee, the date to be fixed by them.

Alfred Hamburger then made a few remarks, stating that he believed in organization and in union, and that he was glad to note that the Illinois League was making good headway. He promised that he would be as active in the promotion of the league's interest as his business permitted, and that as a member he would be always ready to give assistance in any way that lay in his power.

Sam Katz followed, and he pointed out that up to the present time the organization had suffered greatly from the many changes in the ownership of moving picture theaters. He referred to the excellent work done in Chicago through the medium of a co-operative booking club, which had been formed as a subsidiary aid to organization. He declared that by means of this club members have been able to save a great deal of money in film rentals. This club had taken certain territory and divided the bookings so that the evils of competitive booking had been eliminated, thus establishing harmony and brotherhood among the members of the club. "This club has saved the members money and nerve-power and much worry," said Mr. Katz. "The film question is the great question for exhibitors. The state exhibitors should form one great co-operative booking club and thus save money for themselves." By means of the club, Mr. Katz said that the rental prices of a certain film producing concern had been reduced fully 50 per cent.

Mrs. Bert Feltes, owner of the Park theater, 1149 W. 51st street, Chicago, who, with Miss Anna M. Kesner, of the Lyric theater, Chicago, were the only two women exhibitors present at the convention, made a very pithy and humorous speech, the telling points of which were received with great applause and laughter. She stated that she had been in the exhibiting business for five years, but had only had entire management for one and a half years of that time. When she took full control her competitors were offering as many as 10 reels for five cents, with vaudeville acts thrown in. She refused to follow the bad lead of these competitors by the elimination of vaudeville, at which action they were much shocked. Then she cut down her programs, offering only six reels for five cents and eight reels for 10 cents, which made her opponents lift their hands in dismay and prophesy all kinds of ruin. "But I made it a go, although man management had failed to do so, and I am still doing nicely," said Mrs. Feltes. She referred humorously to the habit of people in her neighborhood of standing outside and looking at the posters, after which most of them walked away. Then she went out to these people and said, "If you want to see my show, come in and see it. You can't see it in front of the house." Some of these people after seeing her show came and complained to her that they could not find in the pictures some of the scenes that were shown on the posters!

President Luttrell then thanked the convention for the honor done him. "I am against censorship first, last and all the time," he emphasized. "Organization is the only remedy to combat the evils now confronting the exhibitor, politically and otherwise. I did not seek this position, but I promise you I will give the best that I have got. My time and money are at the disposal of the organization. We must have an increased membership, and we should not rest until every exhibitor in Illinois is one of us."

George Henry was then requested by Mr. Luttrell to take the chair, and the installation of the newly elected officers was made.

Wm. J. Sweeney then moved that the selection of delegates and alternates to the coming National Convention be left to the state executive committee, as it could not be known, without investigation, what members are entitled to that honor or how many were in good standing. The resolution was carried.

The convention then adjourned sine die.

A luncheon and entertainment was afterwards held in the crystal room, Hotel Sherman, at 9.30 P. M., which was largely attended by representatives and their ladies from all branches of the business. Fred W. Hartmann, proprietor of the Aristo theater, Chicago, who provided the vaudeville acts, was highly complimented on the success of his efforts.

Among those present were the following delegates from southern Illinois: W. W. Watts, the Gaiety and Vaudette, Springfield; Ed Kunz, the Princess and Grand, Springfield; Will Bradly, the Crescent, Ottawa; Arthur S. Simon, owner of the Rex thcater, Petersburg, which was recently burned; J. C. Law, the Palace and Gem, Pana, and the Palace, Nokomes; G. M. Luttrell, Luttrell's Majestic, Jacksonville, and M. S. Johnson, the Ideal, Cicero.

Whitmer, the Vaudette; Harry Hyman, the Avon; S. Katz, the Avon and Wallace; Miss Anna M. Kesner, the Lyric; Mrs. Bert Feltes, the Park; August Zilligen, the Drake; Adolph Powell, the Rex; C. Contest in Ithaca.

A part of the contribution from Ithaca, N. Y., to the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund will result from a novel contest inaugurated by Howard Estabrook, a noted star in the film world, who has offered a prize to Cornell students for the best one-act film scenario to be acted by him, Jean Southern and a cast of professionals from the Wharton Studio, to which will be added students of the college. Professor M. W. Sampson has taken the offer up with the college faculty. The Wharton Studios will film the scenario and its production will be given early in April.

American Pictures Popular in France

Due to Their General Excellence and the War, Our Productions Are Greatly in Demand.

VICE-CONSUL DAVIS B. LEVIS at St. Etienne, France, writes in "Commerce Reports" that the curtailment in the production of French and Italian motion pictures, owing to conditions created by the war, has caused a considerable increase in the use of American films. Although American motion pictures have always been popular with St. Etienne audiences, their regular appearance on the programs of the local photoplay house has developed from the general excellence of the pictures shown. Inquiries among exhibitors and spectators emphasize their satisfaction with the films, which are usually advertised by American lithographic posters.

Four large and several small theaters cater to the admirers of motion pictures in St. Etienne, the reels being supplied by one or the other of the two principal syndicates (Pathe, or Gaumont, of Paris) which receive the American films direct or from London agencies. The programs run a week and embody a varied selection of comedy, educational, and dramatic pictures. While at present patriotic and war pictures are naturally strong attractions, the standard plays of well-known authors adapted to the screen are also great favorites. The cowboy or Western drama has more or less had its day, but the comedy and dramatic pictures showing scenes of American cities and resorts are well known and appreciated.

Prices for the usual two-hour performance range from 12 to 30 cents. One performance is given each evening with two matinees on Sunday, while on Thursday there is a special educative program for school children. The continuous performance as given in American cities is unknown here. The theaters are comfortable, sanitary, and well conducted; they usually employ an orchestra, and are largely attended by all classes of the population.

Mary Charleson

MARY CHARLESON, the colleen of the films, has added another to the long line of successes which has marked her career since she left the "legitimate" and joined the Selig forces in Los Angeles. The latest success won by the winsome and skilful Irish maid is in the part of Mary Summers, in the Equitable's production of "Passers By," in which she was the co-star with Charles Cherry. This engagement was directly due to her splendid portrayal of the leading part in "Sealed Lips," better known in book form as "The Silence of Dean Maitland," her first Equitable picture.

Mary's wonderfully attractive face, with its excellent screening qualities, is known wherever films have been shown, for she has been featured with and starred opposite some of the most noted actors before the camera, Maurice Costello and John Bunny having shared their glories with her for more than a year in Vitagraph pictures, to say nothing of the prominence she attained in connection with the Lubin, Eclair, Reliance, Republic and other concerns. She was the leading lady of the Republic's story of "The Gathering of the Council of the Six Nations," an Indian story of the Mohawk Valley, and had a big share in the opening of the Vitagraph theater at Broadway and 44th street, playing with John Bunny and Jimmy Morrison in "The Honeymooners."

Mary Charleson.

Her appearance in "Passers By" was the occasion of a little reunion, as it was her second leading part under the direction of Stanner E. V. Taylor, the first having been back in her connection with the Reliance. Loyalty to the "Ould Sod," a love for flowers, cooking and acting, and a fervent regret that she is not two inches taller than her five feet and a little over, are some of the characteristics of the Irish star who delights in being known as "the colleen."

Pavlowa Film on State Rights

Ohio, Michigan and California Franchise Already Granted on "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company and Anna Pavlowa, co-partners in the motion picture masterpiece, "The Dumb Girl of Portici," have decided to release this stupendous production under the state rights proposition. So many requests come to the offices of the Universal asking their price for certain states, that the matter was brought before the board of directors, to which the Pavlowa representative was invited, and after some discussion and consideration of the several applications already made for state rights, it was finally decided to sell out state rights to the highest bidders.

Many bids were received without solicitation, while a great many other live exchange men and state rights bookers wrote in asking the Universal's price for their respective territories, which prompted the officials of the Universal giving consideration to the releasing of the Pavlowa-Smalley's feature on the state rights basis.

Although Pavlowa is the leading light in this picture, in which she portrays the role of Fenella, the dumb girl, it is far from a single central figure picture. The story carries no less than a dozen characters, all very important to the careful development of the play, and each person was chosen for the respective part with the greatest of care by Lois Weber, who adapted the scenario of "The Dumb Girl of Portici" from Auber's opera, "Masaniello," a story of the strife in Italy during the seventeenth century when the land was under the rule of the Spanish viceroys. Such well-known and representative motion picture players as Rupert Julian, Wadsworth Harris, Douglas Gerrard, John Holt, Edna Maison, Lois Wilson, Laura Oakley and Hart Hoxie supported Mlle. Pavlowa.

As the Universal had originally intended to release this Pavlowa feature through its own exchanges, it was at a loss at first to account for the continuous flow of letters asking for territory privileges, but when these became so numerous as to demand the personal attention of President Carl Laemmle he carefully considered the possibilities of the picture. When those exhibitors who had purchased state rights on such big Universal productions as the Annette Kellermann feature, "Neptune's Daughter," and Williamson's Submarine pictures offered sums greatly in excess of those paid for other big features, Mr. Laemmle brought the matter to the attention of the board of directors, which decided to acquiesce to the many demands made and sell state rights to the highest bidders.

Three states have already been sold, before any announcement was made that the Universal would release the picture in this manner. These were specific offers of a certain amount for the territory desired, which were accompanied by a substantial deposit in each case, so that when the directors considered the advisability of disposing of state rights, it had three offers ready for consideration, and the three were accepted. These were for the states of Ohio, Michigan and California, Messrs. McMahan and Jackson, of Cincinnati, obtaining the rights for the state of Ohio; C. L. Hertzman, of Detroit, has the rights for Michigan, while N. A. Magner, of San Francisco, will look after the California rights.

Great as was Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter" it is said "The Dumb Girl of Portici" surpasses it in artistic, as well as in dramatic action and development. Anna Pavlowa, of course, is a big factor in the attraction as the creator of the title role, and not only emphasizes her charm as mistress of the dance, but reveals new and surprising powers as an emotional actress. Nothing has been neglected in the matter of detail to make this production as interesting as it is thrilling, colorful and convincing.

Funeral of "Daddy" Manley

Old Time Screen Actor's Remains Laid at Rest by Sorrowing Friends.

SIMPLE funeral services were held on Tuesday, February 29, over the remains of Charles Manley, well-known to the screen world as "Daddy," and the body was laid to final rest in Hollywood cemetery with ceremonies of the Catholic Church.

A large number of sorrowing friends of the old-time favorite attended from Universal City and real tears were shed by his former associates as the body was laid in the grave. "Daddy" Manley had been very popular with all at the big film city, and as many as could possibly get away attended the services. The funeral arrangements were made by H. O. Davis, vice president and general manager, and Marshall Stedman, director of production at Universal City.

The pall bearers from among the old-time actor's friends were Lewis Short, Mark Fenton, Wadsworth Harris, Frank McQuarrie, Dr. Harry S. Crane, Henry L. Massie and Orrin Jackson, all of Universal City.

The Robert Leonard Company sent an enormous Master Key Floral piece as "Daddy" Manley was a leading member of that company when it presented the "Master Key" serial, and was loved by all of its members. Other floral pieces were sent by the California Film Exchange, Myrtle Gonzalez, the Nestor Comedy Company, Laura Oakley and many others.

"MUSTY SUFFER" IN JERSEY.

Manager Walter M. Hoffman of Feibert & Shea's Bijou at Orange, N. J., does not permit precedent to stand in the way of asserting himself when it comes to advertising what he thinks is the best feature at his theater. The picture accompanying this shows that he thought one reel of George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" ought to get more prominence than a five-reel "feature," and he acted accordingly. A banner is no unusual advertisement for a moving picture theater, but a banner advertising a one-reel comedy with a five-reel feature on the program is just a wee bit out of the ordinary.

"Musty Suffer" in Jersey.

$15,000 THEATER FOR BALTIC, CONN.

Plans have been drawn for the construction of a $15,000 theater for Raymond J. Jodoin in Baltic, Conn. The theater will have a seating capacity of 600 people, 400 on the first floor and 200 in the balcony. It will be made of stucco material and the entrance will be of a most attractive appearance.

There will be a large stage, but motion pictures will be the principal part of all programs. The floor of the auditorium will be of concrete and the walls will be artistically decorated. The front will be handsomely illuminated.

Three Laskys for April

Wallace Reid, Cleo Ridgely, Victor Moore, Anita King and Marie Doro Will Be Featured.

FIVE stars in three big productions are what the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces for release in April. They will be Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgley in "The Love Mask," their second joint appearance; Victor Moore supported by Anita King in an automobile thriller entitled "The Race," and Marie Doro in her first appearance as a Lasky star in a photoplay entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn."

"The Love Mask," April 6, will be the first of these releases. It is a photodrama of western life, giving Mr. Reid exceptional opportunities and exploiting Miss Ridgely in a manner best suited to her abilities. One of the scenes depicted in this play shows Miss Ridgely standing on top of a stage coach which is drawn by four frightened horses. The horses and coach dash down a hill and the camera reveals Miss Ridgely, reins in hand, bringing them into check. Wallace Reid, who made his debut with the Lasky Company as Don Jose in support of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen," was seen recently at the Strand theater with Mae Murray in "To Have and to Hold." "The Love Mask" was written by Cecil B. De Mille and Jeanie MacPherson, and is the first De Mille play not produced by the author. Frank Reicher was the director.

"The Race," which will be released April 13, was founded in part upon Miss King's lonely transcontinental automobile tour of last autumn. This journey, which was an extraordinary test upon her endurance and courage, was made in the cause of clean pictures and clean plays. She spoke before several hundred thousand persons in the course of her trip, stopping at more than three hundred theaters. In the production is a thrilling incident which nearly resulted seriously for Miss King. One of the scenes depicts the driver in a big automobile leaping a brook at the speed of sixty-five miles an hour. Engineers had carefully constructed the bridge and the landing platform, and the leap of seventy-two feet is said to establish a new record in this sort of achievement.

"The Race" is by Hector Turnbull and Clinton H. Stagg and was directed by George Melford. Victor Moore as a comedian is well known to motion picture fans by reason of his three previous Lasky successes "Snobs," "Chimmie Fadden" and "Chimmie Fadden Out West."

Following a series of success in production of the Famous Players Film Company, among them "The Morals of Marcus," "The White Pearl" and "Diplomacy," and a production by the Fine Arts Studio "The Wood Nymph," Marie Doro on April 24 will make her debut as a Lasky star in a photoplay produced by Cecil B. De Mille, entitled "The Heart of Nora Flynn." As Miss Doro has signed a contract for a long term with the Lasky company, the former Frohman star's first production will be looked forward to with exceptional interest. She recently left New York to remain for some time at the Lasky Studio at Hollywood, Cal., and the production "The Heart of Nora Flynn," will be followed by a number of other big feature photoplays. Hector Turnbull is the author of the story and Jeanie MacPherson of the scenario. The cast includes Elliott Dexter as leading man, Ernest Joy and Mabel Van Buren. All of these are familiar to motion picture audiences.

The fact that Mr. De Mille is personally directing the production gives an added interest to it. Miss Doro for some time has expressed a desire to appear in one of Mr. De Mille's productions and in a reciprocal way he has been eager to produce a photoplay in which Miss Doro is the star. The story of "The Heart of Nora Flynn" is being kept a careful secret, as the principal role which Miss Doro will play is said to be a characterization unlike anything she heretofore has done, but one for which it is believed she is particularly equipped.

NORMA NICHOLLS WITH KALEM FORCES.

Norma Nicholls, a well known comedienne in Pacific Coast circles, has been secured by Kalem to play in the "Ham" subjects. Miss Nicholls is a brunette, and combines rare beauty with a bewitching personality that should make her a worthy successor to Ethel Teare, who has reached the heights of stardom at the head of her own Kalem company.

Miss Nicholls makes her Kalem debut in "For Sweet Charity," a "Ham" one-reel subject released Tuesday, March 21. "Ham and the Hermit's Daughter" and "From Altar to Halter" are other Kalem productions in which she will soon be seen.

Leon Gaumont Visits America

Head of Societe Des Etablissements Gaumont Here to Confer With President Freuler.

DESIRING to confer with John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, and also to inspect his American properties, Leon Gaumont, head of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, Paris, France, arrived in New York March 15. Before the war it was Mr. Gaumont's custom to visit American annually. This is his first visit since the beginning of hostilities. As the Gaumont company has begun to release through the Mutual Film Corporation since Mr. Gaumont was last here, he wished to meet President Freuler and other officials of the company, with which he is now affiliated.

When importuned for an interview Mr. Gaumont replied that he preferred to make no statement until he had visited his winter studio at Jacksonville, Fla., and also had had the opportunity to acquaint himself with American conditions at first hand.

BEECROFT LEAVES HORSLEY.

Chester Beecroft, who has managed the business of David Horsley in New York for the past two years, announces his resignation to take effect at an early date. He is considering several offers, but is not ready to say just where he will land.

ADOLPH EISNER IN TOWN.

Adolph Eisner, manager of the film department of the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association, is in New York buying film for his concern. Productions will be used principally in the houses of the Western Vaudeville Circuit. His headquarters are in Chicago.

WHO'S IMPERSONATING MARGUERITE COURTOT?

Marguerite Courtot, Gaumont star, who is now playing in Jacksonville, Fla., writes to the Moving Picture World to the effect that some one in Los Angeles is using her name for the purpose of obtaining credit at various places in that city. Miss Courtot is an exemplary young woman and pays her bills, so she wishes to make the fact known as widely as possible that anyone asking credit in her name is an impostor and should be treated accordingly.

DONALD C. THOMPSON INJURED.

Arthur S. Kane is in receipt of information from Des Moines, Ia., to the effect that Donald C. Thompson, war cameraman and correspondent, while lecturing his five-part war feature, "Somewhere in France," which is being distributed by Mr. Kane, was the victim of a peculiar accident on March 9. Mr. Thompson was passing through Des Moines and while on his way to the station filled his pipe from his tobacco pouch which, when the match was applied, exploded and burned his face so severely that it is feared he will lose the sight of his left eye. Thompson was taken to the Des Moines Hospital and is receiving the best attention.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG DECLINES VAUDEVILLE OFFERS.

In order to clarify the situation as to the plans of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation a statement has been issued over the signatures of Miss Young and Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the organization, which says among other things:

"Miss Young's contract with the World Film Corporation will terminate the 15th of July, 1916. Immediately upon the conclusion of her services with that organization Miss Young will begin work in her own studio on the first production in which she is to be presented by the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. This will be released in October.

"Miss Young desires further to make it clear that she has had no intention of accepting any of the numerous and flattering vaudeville or theatrical offers which she has received."

MRS. LONG, KALEM VICE PRESIDENT.

At the election of officers and directors of the Kalem Company, held at the office of the company, 235 West 23d street, New York City, Alice M. Long, widow of the late Samuel Long, former president of Kalem Company, was elected a director and vice-president of the company.

World-Equitable Roster

Imposing List of Well-Known Players on the Staff of the Reorganized Concern.

THE roster of permanent stars, male and female, as it now stands, has been definitely settled upon by the World Film Corporation and the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, of course allowing for future activities and the consummation of negotiations now pending.

The activities of the dual program which under the new policy of two distinct and widely different subjects a week requires a great array of talent, and the announcement of the permanent players of all classification has been deferred by the heads of the companies until now. The roster of the World-Equitable is as imposing as any ever assembled and demonstrates, perhaps better than anything else would, the earnestness of the reorganized concerns in their efforts to give diversity of types and supreme quality of players in the productions.

Robert Warwick.

Robert Warwick is a permanent World Film star, with four of the biggest successes the screen has known behind him. At present, Mr. Warwick is engaged in the visualization of "Sudden Riches."

Gail Kane, who appeared to such excellent advantage in "The Labyrinth," and who recently completed her second Equitable picture, "Her God," will be seen about five times a year on the program.

Alice Brady, daughter of William A. Brady, last seen in "The Woman in 47," will characterize the World program about every three months.

Mollie King is at work on "The Call of Love," and will feature the World Film program about every four months.

Carlyle Blackwell is permanently allied with Equitable and will feature the releasing program about five times a year.

Muriel Ostriche, who created a field for herself by her work in "Mortmain," "A Daughter of the Sea" and "A Circus Romance," is the Equitable ingenue piece-de-resistance. Miss Ostriche is now working with two other noted stars, Edna Wallace Hopper and Chas. J. Ross in "Who Killed Simon Baird."

Frances Nelson.

Ethel Clayton will probably appear from six to eight weeks apart on both World and Equitable.

Arthur Ashley is the "heavy man" of the Equitable concern and is now playing opposite Alice Brady in "The Grubstaker."

Clara Kimball Young, one of the World Film Corporation's principal stars for the past eighteen months, will be seen next in "The Feast of Life." Miss Young will be seen, following "The Feast of Life," in "Cloisette," and, according to arrangements now pending, four other elaborate stories are in preparation for her.

Edwin August is permanently associated with World and Equitable, both as star and director. His work at present is confined to playing the leading role and staging "The Social Highwayman." He will probably be seen six times yearly on one or the other of the two programs.

Clara Whipple, recently seen in "The Question" and "The Daughter of the Sea," is at present appearing opposite John Mason in "The Reapers."

Frances Nelson, who is featured in "Love's Crucible," and who is now playing opposite Robert Warwick in "Human Driftwood," and who will be featured with Mr. Warwick in that production, is a long term member of the World Film roster of noted players, and will be seen from time to time.

Holbrook Blinn continues with World Film and will be seen shortly in "The Unpardonable Sin," a virile dramatic document that suits Mr. Blinn's characteristics perfectly. Mr. Blinn will characterize the World program about every ten weeks.

Edwin August.

Among the permanent players who work opposite stars and who handle the difficult roles allotted only to players of known ability are Doris Kenyon, who recently enacted the leading role in "The Pawn of Fate" opposite George Beban, and who is now handling one of the most important parts in "The Feast of Life" with Miss Young. Mary Charleson, whose work in "Sealed Lips" and "Passers By" and other Equitable plays brought her into screen prominence; June Elvidge, at present appearing under the direction of Maurice Tourneur opposite House Peters; Chester Barnett, whose work in "Trilby" established him as a rare screen juvenile; Lillian Cook and Claire Nagel—all have become definitely associated with the dual alliance.

In addition to the regular players, John Mason, Kitty Gordon, William Courtenay, Henry Kolker, Jane Grey, Edna Wallace Hopper, Charles J. Ross, Bruce McRae, Frank Sheridan, Charles Cherry and Adele Blood are all to be seen in one or more feature productions.

Aitken Returns from Coast

President of Triangle Back from a Five Weeks' Visit With Glowing Report.

H. E. AITKEN, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, has just returned from an extended visit to the Pacific Coast studios of that organization. Mr. Aitken's tour extended over a period of five weeks, during which time he made a most careful investigation into the corporation's facilities for the production of its plays. In commenting upon his survey, Mr. Aitken said:

"I believe our capacities for the preparation of the highest class motion picture play to be unsurpassed, and I have found the situation in Los Angeles most satisfactory in every respect. The three directors, Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett, are in frequent conference with a view to the improvement of plays. I found them most enthusiastic over the outlook and I feel certain that the established quality of the Triangle product will still further improve from this time on.

"At the present time I consider the whole production end of the Triangle Film Corporation is in a most satisfactory state. I do not believe that any organization is better prepared to furnish the highest class material and this I think is a conservative statement in the light of what I have witnessed in Los Angeles during my recent trip. The task of having had to supply nearly 1,500 separate and individual theaters with Triangle plays has been no small one, and when it is considered that the list is growing at a rate that makes it reasonably certain that we will be supplying 10,000 within the year, I feel that we have indeed reached a most satisfactory situation in the twenty weeks that we have been supplying Triangle films to exhibitors throughout the country."

WILLIAM N. SELIG is to be commended for his constant loyalty to the General Film Company's programs. When the feature craze started and some producers of that organization showed indications of slighting the one, two and three-reel subjects, Mr. Selig never faltered in his policy of devoting important attention to this output. Nor did he content himself with this; he frequently advocated in print that the preservation of short photoplays meant the assured success of the business, because it not only kept the smaller theaters from passing out of existence, but it met the needs of a vast number of moving picture theater patrons who become tired of seeing long-drawn-out photoplays week in and week out.

"The Devil, the Servant and the Man" has a story that might well be done in five instead of three reels, but then it would have missed the compactness that now holds interest taut all the way through, and which, besides, relieves the spectator from seeing more of the dark side of Franklyn Foster's character. The denouement comes swiftly and very happily when "the man" severs the bonds that link him with "the servant" of Satan.

Franklyn Foster (Guy Oliver), a noted surgeon, is happily married. His wife Alice (Kathlyn Williams) and their sweet baby are the joy of his life. The calls of his profession undermine even his rugged constitution, and he seeks in stimulants a remedy for brain fag and physical fatigue. His wife sees this and is worried, because the habit is growing daily.

One day when utterly worn out by performing a difficult operation, a phone message calls him to Thelma Gordon (Lillian Hayward) for "compound fracture of the leg." Worn out, he drives to the address and finds to his bitter indignation that the fracture has been suffered by the woman's pet dog. Foster's attitude arouses her enmity and this becomes venomous later when she calls at his office to pay the bill.

A few days afterward Foster is advised by Dr. Thornton, a close friend of the family, that he must spend a month in the mountains to avoid a nervous collapse. He goes there and we see him hunting amid the heavy snows that have fallen. One day, soon after his arrival, a woman stops at his lonely mountain cabin and tells him that her mistress has been overcome by the heavy snow storm. Her mistress is Thelma Gordon, and Foster carries her to the cabin, where the party is snow-bound for several days. During that time Foster becomes infatuated with the woman and it becomes more pronounced when they get back to town. Then a horrible dream brings Foster back to his right mind and to his wife and baby.

As the patient but determined wife Miss Kathlyn Williams draws a delightful picture of happy married life and also the exceedingly sad one when the dark days come. The pretty and affecting home scenes, in which the mother and baby (little Jean Fraser) take part, are just as homelike as they could possibly be. When papa, the bad man, makes mamma cry, tiny Jean is ever a comforter with her winsome embrace and clinging kiss, and that night when mamma fails to come to her cot to hear her say her prayers, Baby cannot understand it and goes to sleep with her sobs. The scene of the reunion of the husband and wife, full of happiness as it is, would not have been complete without Baby. Oh, no! When she toddles from behind the Japanese screen and presses papa's knee by way of reminding him that the Queen of the Home must have her say in the happiness that has come back, she is lifted to her throne—her papa's shoulder—from which she rules her happy subjects with love and dimpling smiles.

Mr. Oliver's characterization of Franklyn Foster is strong and rugged, just as it should be. That strange type of woman, Thelma Gordon, is ably represented by Miss Lillian Hayward. This is no common woman, it must be remembered. Her passions are firmly held in hand and her web is woven by the brain, not by the heart. Revenge for a slight is sweeter to her than aught else, and to have the haughty, famous surgeon, Franklyn Foster (who has twice humiliated her) at her feet is recompense to her injured pride.

The release date will be April 3, through the General Film Company.

mission, and the comic complications follow one another with sufficient rapidity to keep the attention fully occupied. Sis makes a terrible mess of her efforts to be of use in a family of Newlyweds, and determines to commit suicide, by falling down the dumbwaiter shaft. When she revives and hears the expressions of regret made over her, she concludes life is worth living after all and surprises the mourners by sitting up and treating them to one of her broadest smiles.

In this picture Miss Melville shows that she has profited by her experience in the preceding releases, and evinces a readiness to do her full share of the acrobatic comedy and reap the resultant laugh.

Henry Murdock, Arthur Albertson, Frank Minzey, Richard Purdon, Mary Kennedy and Olive West give Miss Melville admirable support.

Director Heffron has started the work on a Selig Red Seal Play, "Into The Primitive," which is a film dramatization of Robert Ames Bennett's novel of the same title. Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver and Harry Lonsdale are the principals.

It is a story within a story, inspired by the difficulties faced by a man who wishes to secure damages for his wife injured by defective railroad apparatus. The company fights the claim, and witnesses, being loath to testify, there appears to be small chance of legally establishing the facts. A friend of the perplexed man then relates one of his own experiences to bear out the contention that the individual has a slim chance when pitted against strong financial or political interests. In a cafe he witnessed a deliberate murder committed by the worthless son of one of the town's foremost citizens.

Step by step we follow his efforts to prove that the jealous youth entered the cafe and shot his faithless sweetheart and her new lover, and in every move he is opposed by the town officials in league with the ward boss and gang leader. They

Farrell Macdonald is to be complimented on the smooth production given this unusual picture, acted by Charles Perley, Jack Drumeir, Charles Mailes, Vera Sisson and Ivan Chrystie.

"Alias Jimmie Barton."

A nicely arranged, carefully produced two-part drama is found in "Alias Jimmie Barton," the story of two young men who temporarily change names and profit by the experience. Jose Ruben plays the character of a youth, who is sent out into the world to win a place for himself before he will be considered an acceptable husband for the daughter of a wealthy business man. And it happens that just at this time another youth, much given to expensive pleasures, is placed on his own resources by a stern father. The pair drift to the same town and are employed in a factory after a strange coincidence has caused a shift in identities. Events work out to the advantage of both young men.

Jack Mulhall gives a capable performance in the role of the dissipated youth, and for the rest the picture is well cast with Vola Smith, Gretchen Hartman and Jack Drumeir interpreting the principal characters.

"Her Great Price"

Cleverly Conceived Story Is Given Capital Production by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for Metro Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

CLEVER is just the word to describe "Her Great Price," directed by Edwin Carewe with the winsome Mabel Taliaferro as his star. First of all this is a cleverly constructed story and after that it is an invigorating romance, admirably produced, clean, entertaining and delightfully acted. For a full reel, suspense is heightened to an unusual degree; sympathies are played upon as the nobly unselfish heroine prepares to pay, and finally does pay, "her great price," and then, after the audience has been fooled into taking her misfortunes in earnest, there comes the merriest of happy endings.

Tagging a happy ending on a tragedy is not necessarily a praiseworthy accomplishment. In fact, a forced termination of the kind is certain to be unconvincing, which is but another indication of the clever workmanship in this picture. An audience most certainly will be fooled and just as certainly it will respond joyfully to the unexpected solution. Then, in making a hasty resume of the story, one may concede that it all hangs together very neatly and the author will be exonerated on the charge of attempting to cover improbabilities under the cloak of fiction. Something of the same idea has been used in the past, but more frequently it has been abused.

Agnes confides in her three Bohemian friends, "the Trinity," her troubles with publishers. There is a fatal weakness in the climax of her story. It must be rewritten. She needs more heart-interest, more sympathy and, try as she may, failure is the only reward for her efforts. At least so it seems, for one never guesses that the pretty young writer becomes her own heroine and a friendly sculptor the hero. The story is exceptional enough to sell. And more than that, one appreciates the finely, self-sacrificing spirit of the girl as acted by Miss Taliaferro, whose performance reveals a versatile talent. As a poor little girl in rags, as a normal young woman with literary ambitions, and in the severely emotional climax of the concluding reel, Miss Taliaferro scores emphatically. With a leading player of such pronounced ability, adequately supported in every situation of a uniformally well-staged picture, "Her Great Price" becomes one of the most enjoyable of recent productions.

"Gold and the Woman"

Fox Six-Reel Picture With Theda Bara—Much Very Heavy Villainy.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE peculiar work of Theda Bara dominates this six-reel offering by the Fox company, "Gold and the Woman." Exhibitors are primarily interested in the popularity of her work rather than in its quality. Her following is well known. Her ability to make hideous faces that are supposed to show a soul steeped in the deepest dyes of hell, and to show the loggy passion that stands for emotion carried to the final stress of absolute abandonment, do make a strong appeal to many, many spectators. While the picture was on at the Academy of Music I overheard one of two women near me say: "Yes, but she is good." The remark showed a prevalent opinion. This actress' work is considered "good." But there is none of Cleopatra's infinite variety in her.

The story is artificial, shows no real dramatic insight, gets nowhere; but does furnish situations full of horror and piteousness. It is interesting and not without moral value since it does certainly make sin hideous. The main part of the story shows the power of a villainess over the mind and soul of a man. Now it chances that he is the guardian of a young girl who is heir to a certain piece of property called "The Valley of the Shadow," a thousand acres with rich coal fields. It had been owned by an old Indian, and the girl's great grandfather, coveting it and unable to secure it by fair means, murdered the Indian and forged a deed to the land. The old squaw has time before she dies to curse him and his children unto the third and fourth generation. So the troubles that come to the girl are, if the story is not closely scrutinized, shown to come from the curse. In the end she marries the great grandson of the Indian after he has won a law suit and regained possession of the Valley.

Throughout the various episodes that make up this serial there has been maintained an element of interest. Each chapter has had its own quota of suspense, and undoubtedly the most attractive quality about it has been the charming manner in which Ruth Roland has handled the role of June Travis. To be sure the author, and also the director, has done a great deal, but there is an individuality about the young woman who committed crime only to help others, as presented in the Balboa serial, which seems to belong alone to the wholesome candor of personality that is one of Miss Boland's chief attributes.

The fourteenth chapter, entitled "Judgment Day," will be the finale of a splendid serial.

"The Supreme Sacrifice."

ROBERT WARWICK must be spending most of his weekends at Sing Sing. After the Premo Company's very able production of "The Devil's Toy," the picture in question, coming from the same source, is something of a disappointment, and this, despite Mr. Warwick's appearance in a role for which he has had ample training. No fault need be found with the acting of the leading player, or that of the secondary actors; but the story presented in "The Supreme Sacrifice" is far from fresh. It is, to be entirely frank, a rehash of much that has been deemed popular in previous melodramas of the same type.

And, further than that, it is unfortunately true that the incidents are strung together in a none too convincing sequence. One may reasonably question the circumstance at the very basis of the plot, without which there would be no story. We meet a young minister, a religious idealist devoted to the poor of his congregation. While at Harvard he indulged in a liaison and the woman concerned in the affair turns out to be a persistent blackmailer. Placed in this predicament it is not impossible that the Rev. Phllip Morton would prefer stealing church funds to having his past exposed; but as the story is presented his choice of the greater of two evils does not seem probable.

Conveniently removed by heart failure, his devoted friend accepts responsibility for the shortage, even to the length of passing a number of years in Sing Sing, and then more years in overcoming the stigma attached to a penitentiary term. All this, as may be gathered, makes quite conventional melodrama, best suited to the least analytical of audiences. Such realism as the picture possesses is confined to some authentic sketches of underworld life and accurate character portrayals. Mr. Warwick is a sincere actor as heretofore; Vernon Steele is appropriately cast as the minister, whereas Anna Q. Nilsson, Christine Mayo and Jessie Lewis give creditable performances. Harley Knoles and Lionel Belmore directed.

"Passers By."

"Passers By," it will be recalled, is a stage play by C. Haddon Chambers, who laid his story in England. This Equitable production, made by S. E. V. Taylor, with Charles Cherry in the character of Peter Waverton, purports to be an adaptation of the play. An exact following of the original model is not to be expected, or even desired when the needs of another medium are being met; but a preservation of the spirit and meaning of the parent work may be attained. Mr. Taylor has given us an ambitious production in regard to photographic effects—ambitious, perhaps, in other respects as well, though less successful.

In photoplay form, "Passers By" lacks point and decisive meaning. For the better part of two reels it moves slowly, and the purpose of the action is none too clear. Bereft of the interesting characterization which gave the play so much of its significance, there remains a plot of no great value—the vacillation of a man between two women, one the lost sweetheart of former years, the other a socially eligible young woman chosen to be his wife. We feel the absence of much that contributed to the play's worth in the portrayal of the quixotic nature of Peter, broadly hinted at, rather than explained, in scenes showing his strangely considerate treatment of a cab-driver and a tramp. The psychology of the play is not easily detected.

Tested by the less exacting requirements of ordinary melodrama, "Passers By" may fare better. Especially in the last reel, with the disappearance of the child and its capture by a thief, who holds it as a shield when surrounded by a posse, moments of suspense and dramatic action are realized. Director Taylor's lighting effects are unusual and frequently artistic; but too often the picture is made to appear artificial by

"Dollars and the Woman."

"DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN," a six-reel Lubin Feature, was written by Albert Payson Terhune. The photoplay is a radical departure from most screen dramas of its class, and proves conclusively that the author's knowledge of life and the art of the analytical novelist is vastly superior to his familiarity with the rules of dramatic construction as applied to the photoplay. In many respects "Dollars and the Woman" resembles a story by W. D. Howells. There is the same minute and skillful drawing of character, and the same absence of dramatic action. The clash is brought about by weakness and lack of logical thinking on the part of the characters, and not by the dastardly plotting of the deep-dyed villain. In fact, there is no villain in the story at all. Two men are in love with the same woman, but the loser accepts his defeat with manly fortitude and acts the part of a real friend to his rival and the rival's wife. The trouble in the married life of Dan Hilyer and Madge Boynton is caused by their neglecting to put their gray matter to its proper use. A little common sense—as it is erroneously called—brought to bear upon their difficulties, would have unraveled them in short order. But that is just the trouble with human beings; so few of us do employ our brains in solving the problems of existence, but allow ourselves to be swayed by foolish pride, senseless dislikes and a devotion to self that exacts a ruinous rate of interest before the account is squared.

It is the human element, the depicting of everyday life as it is, not as it is often thrown upon the screen in exaggerated and distorted outlines, that gives "Dollars and the Woman" its claim to serious consideration. From this viewpoint, Mr. Terhune's work commands high praise. Technically, it is often at fault. It is too long drawn out; at the big moment of the play the hero's conduct toward his wife makes one long to take him by the neck and throw him through the window; the characters are always making the most senseless and human mistakes—and, in short, no expert dramatist could ever have written it. In spite of all this, it is worth a dozen ordinary melodramas, and its success is assured with the men and women who think as well as feel.

To interpret properly such a drama requires the services of a carefully selected cast, actors whose physical and mental endowment is aided by thorough artistic training. Tom Moore, Ethel Clayton and Craufurd Kent fulfilled these demands. At no time during the action of the play are they found wanting in any quality necessary to the fullest expression of the author's intent. The minor characters are also excellently played. Then there is the baby. If ever an infant gladdened a director's heart and won for itself the right to be called an angel child it is the small bit of smiling bright-eyed humanity that impersonates the heir to the house of Hilyer. Wait until a theaterful of women see him on the screen!

While the members of the company are being called before the curtain and handed rhetorical bouquets, the producer of the picture should not be forgotten. Joseph Kaufman is the man to whom credit is due; also to the Lubin Company for the liberality displayed in mounting the sets.

"The Gulf Between."

If the class distinctions that are prevalent in England were applied to the photoplay, "The Gulf Between" would come under the head of "middle-class" drama. Tom Gibson, the author of the scenario, has taken a conventional plot and peopled his story with rather commonplace characters, but he has devised at least one strong situation and steadily increased the interest as he neared the crucial moment. This point once reached, he has been entirely too slow in reaching the finish, and weakened the character of his hero by allowing the young man to give way to doubts and indecision, before hurrying to the girl he professes to love, once he learns that he has misjudged her.

Fred Mason, a well-bred young chap with plenty of money, joins the U. S. Secret Service, and is ordered to run down a band of opium operators. The leader of the band has a young daughter who is ignorant of her father's criminal connection. Mason falls in love with the girl, and one of the band, who wants Helen for himself, contrives to implicate her, and Mason is forced to place her under arrest. Her father learns of this and attempts to square matters with Joe Bent, the jealous member of the band. Bent shoots him, but he does not die until he has cleared his daughter's name, although Helen tries to take all the blame upon herself. This is the big situation of the drama, and an excellent bit of melodrama it is; but the author is too long bringing the lovers together after the girl's innocence is established; and even at that, Mason has to be shown his duty by a third party.

Allan Forrest and Helen Walcott were the Mason and Helen. They were earnest and succeeded in giving satisfactory impersonations of their respective roles. Melvin Mayo, George Routh, Jim Morley, B. W. Hopkins, W. J. Spencer, Evelyn Littlepage and Adelaide Bronti completed the cast. The production was made by Edward Sloman and is entitled to commendation.

"Little Meena's Romance."

"LITTLE MEENA'S ROMANCE" is one of those finished productions that delight the critic even more than the producer can believe, and it will delight many an audience in exactly the same way, the only difference being that the critic has an added satisfaction in saying so. How gladly such refined and well-perfected productions are welcomed! The story is fascinating from the outset, though the happy beginning is due almost entirely to characterization, characterization in which Owen Moore shines as never before, the biggest surprise in a production of many surprises. Without a blemish in construction, with delicate preparation at every step and adequate realization in setting, acting and subtitles, "Little Meena's Romance" moves softly and sweetly into our hearts, keeping us busy guessing as well as perpetually entertained.

Scene from "Little Meena's Romance" (Fine Arts).

At about this stage of a review the critic usually has to inject some iron in the marmalade, but "Little Meena" does not deserve any. This role could not have been assigned to Dorothy Gish—she IS "Little Meena." We feel that there could be no other. Dorothy of the soft eyes and tiny rebellion that is only spiced submission is in a part for which she was born and raised. She is, in the story, an exquisite little apostle of non-resistance, that which resists the most with big-hearted men. The very purity and trusting simplicity of her love wins a man who is compelled to sacrifice all material considerations to wed her when he might have wronged her. The best in him, like the best in all of us, gives right recognition where there is nothing but right in the offering of woman's love.

Scene from "The Waifs" (Ince).

"The Waifs."

"The Waifs" has a theme that will be popular to the end of our days, inasmuch as our days mean constant struggle with baser impulses and weaknesses of human nature for those of us whose blood runs red. And there is nothing more fascinating for an audience composed largely of people who know the sting of poverty to follow than the varying drama of two unfortunates who rise through mutual helpfulness, when either might falter and fail alone. The theme admits of a thousand variations, and "The Waifs" is in many respects one of the best of its kind yet shown. It is especially strong in types and characterization, with moments of intense psychology, but it is marred by some inconsistencies of location. Those inconsistencies are not beyond remedy even now, for no reason exists why the action should be placed at Mentone, a famous resort in the French Riviera. Better keep out of the Riviera unless the story calls for that setting.

"Rags."

Jane Grey as "Rags" is in many respects a change from the heroine usually shown—she has such a distinctive individuality of her own and she is a welcome change at times, but the roles to which she would be suited are comparatively few. She is a rare type in a part that exactly suits her, thanks to the Ince success in selecting the right interpreters for specific work. The story is interesting and artistically treated, the subtitles things of beauty in themselves.

"Tangled Hearts"

A Bluebird Photoplay in Which Husbands, Wives and Lovers Become Sadly Confused—Cast Is Well Balanced.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THREE strikingly fine looking women, who happen to be capable actresses as well—Louise Lovely, Agnes Vernon and Marjorie Ellison—give "Tangled Hearts," a Bluebird photoplay, produced by Joseph De Grasse, its first claim to distinction. Stronger pictures with more interesting, if not more intricate plots have appeared on this program, but to compensate for any weaknesses in the story there is this most engaging triple alliance. Feminine beauty, radiantly attired, we have in abundance, and as one or another of the young women is on the screen most of the time, the picture maintains a certain attractiveness, enhanced by rich settings and superb exteriors.

The author of the scenario, Ida May Park, chose a difficult thesis, and a failure to give it an entirely convincing dramatic exposition is not surprising. Instead of extolling the virtues of friendship after the usual custom, the author aims to point out its possible dangers, as exemplified in the career of a sociable club man, who is always ready to be of service to any of his friends, even when his kindnesses mean neglect of the little attentions that might please his wife.

Enough of the relationship of this pair is shown to indicate the possibility of a break when the first cause for a serious misunderstanding arises. Provocation is offered in the very complicated mix-up caused by Seaton's effort to aid his friend, Mrs. Hammond, by consenting to adopt the unacknowledged child of whose existence her husband never dreams. Thinking to better matters, but in reality making them more involved, Seaton returns the little girl to the Hammond household, telling the husband that he (Seaton) is the father. Nearly everybody in the story, including a pretty widow and her bashful suitor, works at cross purposes, and there is no lack of domestic fireworks.

Considering the difficulties to be overcome in handling a really intricate plot, Director DeGrasse deserves credit for bringing out the purposes of the picture, for those who follow it with strict attention. Lack of attention will mean a quite hopeless confusion and a misunderstanding of the motives of the characters. While the three actresses dominate the production, as previously intimated, the performances of Lon Chaney and Haywood Mack are not wanting in force. Jay Belasco is scarcely the type for a bashful lover.

"The Supreme Temptation"

Five-Part Vitagraph Production Presented With a Large Cast Figures on the Program of the V-L-S-E.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THIS production which savors strongly of melodrama, appear some of the best of Vitagraph talent. But in spite of this fact there is weakness and confusion of construction strongly evident throughout the play. The story is morbid, and deals primarily with a theme that has been used to excess, and in fact it has not one earmark of the Vitagraph product as we know it.

The story, which in the first reel is told in a fairly straightforward way, deals with the career of young Herbert Dubois, who has been studying medicine in Paris. He falls in love with a pretty grisette and marries her unknown to his parents. A misunderstanding causes the grizette to leave her husband, who later fights a duel with a man whom he believes has insulted his wife. After graduating in medicine he returns to his home and falls in love with another girl. In the meantime his father because of financial difficulties commits suicide. Considerable time is given over to the recital of love incidents between Herbert's sister and his chum, and also to minor business that is intended in many instances to add a touch of comedy. And it may be said, some of the comedy touches are good in themselves, but are superfluous in this production, and have the appearance of being needless departures from the main thread of the story. The "Supreme Temptation" comes to Herbert when called to perform an autopsy on a young woman who is reported to have died suddenly. He discovers to his dismay that the woman is his former wife, and not dead, but merely in a cataleptic trance. He is about to end her life by a turn of his scalpel when his better nature conquers. L-KO Company Turns Out a Very Successful Comic in Three Reels, Featuring Ray Griffith and Alice Howell.

SUCCESSFUL nonsense is one of the hardest things to achieve in moving pictures, and it is not often that a company gets the side-splitting effects that are found in this three-reel offering. In purely comic creations, such as this, there is usually a threat of vulgarity running counter to the humorous effort, and the two forces are found to conflict.

This particular number is full of clean merriment from start to finish. It is low comedy without any great offense, and resembles more than anything else an animated series of comic newspaper cartoons. The characters are really "caricatures," subject to all sorts of exaggerated human impulses, burlesqueing life in every movement and yet close enough to it to bring the desired laugh. It is a clever variation of the ordinary slapstick and knockabout acting, and if anything more difficult to get over satisfactorily.

Ray Griffith appears as the son of a millionaire, whose father decides to make a man of him. He goes to work on the section and falls in love with a hashhouse lady, impersonated by Alice Howell. She is already beloved by the section foreman, a hardy individual with a black mustache and a bad disposition.

The rivalry is intense from the beginning and, seeing that fair play will not win for him, the foreman determines to have the lady's life. He and his accomplices tie her to the railroad tracks, immediately in front of a drawbridge. The hero leads a rescue party.

The closing reel is full of tense situations, in which laughter mingles with genuine thrills. The substitution of the miniature bridge and engine for the real thing is cleverly managed. The engine climbs up the bridge, just as the draw is swung open and plunges into the water below. The hero then, of course, saves the girl and the villain perishes in an appropriate manner.

The offering as a whole is one of the best of the type yet offered by this company. The photography is good throughout.

THE opening of a chestnut burr revealing as it does so the head of the celebrated actor, Burr McIntosh, is the pleasant novelty, and happy idea on the part of somebody, that has been used to open this number of the Mutual Masterpictures De Luxe. The old play, "My Partner," has that combination of romance and melodrama that will never cease to please as long as the maiden and the lover exist. The play, written originally by Bartley Campbell, seems to have suffered slightly, however, in adaptation. It will be remembered that Mary Brandon's relationship with Ned Singleton, the young partner of big Joe Saunders, required that he marry her, that he refused, and that Joe Saunders' sense of honor and love for the girl he had known since a child caused him to break his partnership with Singleton. gleton, and that Joe Saunders was arrested and tried for the murder of his partner before it was discovered that Scraggs was the murderer, and that in order to preserve Mary's good name Joe says that Mary was his wife. To the spectator who is unfamiliar with the play it is not clear why Singleton persistently refused to marry the girl he loved.

In the supporting cast are Mary Mantell, James Ryan, Marie Edith Ellis, Curtis Cooksy, Goldwin Paton and John Leech. The production contains many charming touches, and will be enjoyed as a play of the old school.

"The Brigadier Gerard"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Lewis Waller in Spirited Role of Famous Braggart.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SELDOM does a screen adaptation adhere so closely in general effect to the original atmosphere of the fiction story as happens in this fine production. Those familiar with A. Conan Doyle's dashing hero, whose capacity for boasting was only equalled by his ability to carry out his boasts, will see him faithfully shadowed on the screen in this release. Lewis Waller plays the part with rare distinction, and is surrounded by a supporting cast that does not disappoint; in fact, the work of A. E. George, Fernand Mailly and Madge Titheradge, as Napoleon, Talleyrand and the Countess, is quite on a par with that of the name part.

It is a brave, thrilling episode in the life of the hero that is here pictured. Napoleon, to whom Gerard is attached by past service and undying loyalty, is seen stationed somewhere outside of Paris. The city is in revolt and Talleyrand has turned traitor to the great leader.

Napoleon must have certain papers in possession of the Countess de Rocquelaure in Paris. He commissions Gerard to obtain them, a dangerous errand indeed. The latter, turning a deaf ear to the taunts of his fellow officers over his previous exploits, dons citizen's clothes and rides forth.

He is at the time known as Captain Gerard, and it is in this story that he wins his promotion and becomes brigadier. His love for the Countess develops naturally as he seeks to recover the papers taken from her by Talleyrand. The Countess, as portrayed by Madge Titheradge, is a most alluring personage.

The clash with Talleyrand and the affair of the cabinet make strongly dramatic scenes. The production throughout is elaborate and beautifully staged, the production evidently being made in England. The suspense in the closing scenes is excellently maintained. There is a gradual rise to a climax in the fourth reel, then a fall, as it looks as though Gerard had failed, and finally the discovery of the papers in Tallyrand's cloak and his restoration to favor in the emperor's eyes.

"Driftwood."

IN BRINGING Owen Davis's drama, "Driftwood," to the screen, the author of the scenario, Anthony Kelly and Director Marshal Rarnum revealed a full comprehension of the emotional possibilities of the story. The picture, very capably produced by the Ocean Film Corporation, is conspicuous for the emphasis placed on the intense emotions of the characters in situations of strong theatrical effectiveness. That "Driftwood" will be a popular photoplay seems practically certain, for it contains just the elements that make for popularity—a strong sex interest, a heroine who is made to suffer the consequences of an indiscreet love and tense dramatic moments, such as Mr. Davis knows so well how to devise.

Scene from "Driftwood" (Raver).

Director Farnum adopted a method of construction much in vogue with the producers of sensational melodramas, and, it should be added, a method well suited to a story of this description. To startle an audience into attention, or to drive home the intense meaning of a situation, he used close-ups with the greatest freedom and he allowed his players plenty of liberty in expressing feeling. At times there is danger of the parts being over-acted and of the close-ups losing significance because of the dulling effect of repeated "punches"; but the danger does not become a reality to mar the impression of a stirring photoplay.

Exceptionally attractive in the m tters of lighting, tinting and locations, is the opening of the first reel, introducing Helen Warner and her lover on the evening of a clandestine meeting. Also, the development of the story in this reel is worthy of comment; for in a natural, logical manner we are given an idea of the characters and led to the automobile accident which separates Lawrence and his sweetheart. Subsequent reels, if less smooth in construction, offer plenty of dramatic conflict and striking climaxes, such as that in which Helen learns that her seducer is her sister's husband, and the final scene showing how the girl is forced to overcome morbid scruples and accept Lawrence as a husband.

Vera Michelena is least successful in suggesting injured innocence and at her best when the character of Helen requires an air of sophistication, or emotional outbursts. Harry Spingler does very well as her sweetheart, whereas Charles Graham is satisfactory as a lawyer who pays more attention to his stenographers than to business.

"The Fortunate Youth."

Stories by William J. Locke have come to signify a whimsical quality and when this is absent one feels that the author is not being presented at his best. Mr. Locke's "The Fortunate Youth," as revealed in pictures by the Ocean Film Corporation, is a case in point, for there is little of the charm that distinguished "The Morals of Marcus" and "The Beloved Vagabond"; little, in fact, that suggests the spirit of the gifter English novelist.

As prepared for the screen the story becomes American in settings and characterization, although Paul Kegsworthy, "The Fortunate Youth," is followed from boyhood to manhood on a career that leaves him married to a princess and a member of the House of Parliament. Perhaps the substitution of an American for an English atmosphere is in part responsible for the loss of the Locke spirit; but granting the absence of this, we still have a story of some interest that at its best is decidedly sympathetic.

An audience is most likely to respond to the trials and sorrows of Paul in the days of sensitive youth, when he is abused by his step-father and ignored by the boys of the neighborhood. Many of these scenes are attractively presented and played with feeling by a young actor whose name is not given in the cast. Grown to maturity, Wilmurth Merkyl steps into the part of Paul, whose rise in fortune from an artist's model, to an actor, to a Parliamentarian, is astonishingly rapid. The plot is clearly developed and altogether is not more improbable than one might expect in a frankly romantic tale. A few inconsistencies and slips in direction probably will not be noticed by the casual spectator. Chief in support of Mr. Merkyl, an excellent type for the character of Paul, are Lilie Leslie and William Cohill.

"Austria at War."

Announced as bearing the endorsement of the Austrian government, these two reels, photographed under the supervision of two of the Emperor's staff officers, are of interest in showing the activity of the Austrian army on the battlefront—the movements of large bodies of troops, the wonderful feats of engineering accomplished in an incredibly short time, and even more especially, in giving close vews of the artillery in action.

There are many views of places and military operations made famous in the headlines of newspapers—Lemburg, Lupkow Pass and Turka among them—and one receives a very fair notion of the type of men constituting the Austrian and Russian armies. The Russian prisoners appear numerous enough to form the nucleus of a new army. Intelligently edited and sub-titled, these scenes will be found instructive. Photography is clearer than that in the average war film.

"The Lost Bridegroom"

John Barrymore Scores Again in Famous Players Comedy-Drama Written by Willard Mack.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE is a fine blending of comedy and dramatic elements in "The Lost Bridegroom," the Famous Players five-part subject, released on March 20. John Barrymore is the featured player. Mr. Barrymore is provided by Willard Mack with a story that gives the player many chances for injecting his inimitable "business"—and it is that personal note that raises the picture above the average. There is pathos, too, as well as comedy—and at no point is it more marked than in the scenes having to do with the boy and the puppy.

The story touches high life and low life. Use is made of the frayed smash-on-the-head-lost-memory stuff, but it is convincingly handled. Bertie Joyce, going home from the prenuptial bachelors' dinner, is set upon by thugs and robbed of his money and about everything else, too, except his trousers, shoes and undershirt. He wanders into a saloon; the niece of the owner is interested in the "nut" and it is decided to care for him pending the offering of a reward. Thieves train Bertie to open safes. It is on the first "job," the home of his fiancee, by the way, that Bertie meets stirring adventures that result in a fight and receives the awaited blow that restores the mental balance and also Bertie to his friends.

There is excellent support. The types are selected with care. There are, for instance, Jack Dillon and Tammany Young as the light-fingered and strong-armed gentry; Edward Sturgis as Slim Denny, the "dope" whose skill on combinations is waning; Hardie Kirkland as the saloonkeeper and "fence," and June Dale as Madge Kirkland. Katherine Harris is the nancee and Ida Darling the prospective mother-in-law, and both are convincing.

"The Lost Bridegroom" will be liked. The interest is established at the beginning and is maintained throughout. Mr. Barrymore always makes entertainment that is different; and this subject is no exception to the rule. James Kirkwood is the producer.

"Paths That Crossed" (Biograph).

So much has been written and said concerning the "sex problem" on the screen that unusual interest attaches to the novel treatment of this theme in "Paths That Crossed," the Biograph feature in the regular service scheduled for release on April 5. This is a strong story of retributive justice, which is visited upon a man of loose morals after his self-indulgence has brought him to a desperate pass. At the moment when success seems within his grasp, his downfall is swiftly accomplished by the culmination of circumstances attending three women whom in the past he has wronged—his wife, his unknown daughter, and the actress for whose sake he nrst transgressed.

Charles H. Mailes plays with masterly sincerity the role of the social outlaw. The character is one which might easily have been portrayed unsympathetically; Mr. Mailes makes of him a scoundrel whose redemption is yet to be hoped for, until the final circumstance proves him lost to all sense of decency—a conception that grips the interest of the spectator and holds it between absolute detestation and faith in human nature. Effective work is done in difficult roles by Claire McDowell, Vola Smith and Jose Ruben.

On the same week's program is a particularly strong Biograph re-issue directed by D. W. Griffith, entitled "Three Friends." Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall have the leading roles in this effective picture of life in a factory town.

Pallas Picture With Two Endings.

For the first time in the history of motion pictures, a photoplay with both a happy and tragic ending will be supplied to exhibitors on April 3, when Pallas Pictures will release on the Paramount Program, Lenore Ulrich in "The Heart of Paula."

In producing "The Heart of Paula," the novelty of putting out a photoplay with two endings to meet the requirements of the exhibitor according to the liking of his patrons is conceived purely by accident.

Upon completion of this picture with its two endings the decision was made all the more difficult because of the excellence of both. It was then decided to exploit the production with the original ending together with the additional film presenting the other. Thus each exhibitor may either have the opportunity of selecting the ending which he feels his patrons like the best according to the tastes of his locality, or he may exhibit both endings and leave it to his audiences to decide for themselves which they think the most appropriate.

The photoplay discloses a Mexican romance of timely interest and displays Lenore Ulrich in what is conceded to be one of the best characterizations yet undertaken. The success of this girl-star on both the screen and the speaking stage has gained her country-wide popularity, and her appearance in the forthcoming Pallas-Paramount release is being looked forward to with no little interest. Judging from advance reports "The Heart of Paula" will prove one of the greatest successes yet released under the Pallas Picture brand, its various merits offering on the whole a stirring romance effectively produced by directors and players alike. Supporting Miss Ulrich in her latest film are Forrest Stanley, Howard Davies, Herbert Standing, Jack Livingstone and Velma Lefler.

Pioneer Feature Film Busy.

The booking department of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West 46th street, is kept exceedingly busy these days, booking their latest acquisition, "The Mother Who Paid." This is a five-reel production featuring the famous tragedienne, Regina Wethergran, whose histrionic art is on the same high plane as Sarah Bernhardt. Nathan Hirsh, the president of the Pioneer, informs us that his staff of bookers is just as busy taking advanced dates on a future release entitled "The Folly of Sin." This is a five-reel production enacted by charming screen favorites, Miss Joan Peterson, Charles Wieth and George Tolway. The story is strong and fascinating and dealing with the price demanded from the devotees.

Babe Gorman, the famous child star of "The Little Orphan," is making a tremendous hit and has been booked together with the feature as the Star attraction throughout Proctor's Circuit. She has also appeared at the York theater for four consecutive days, this week. She was so well liked that she received several bunches of flowers from admirers.

"Forbidden Fruit" Passes Chicago Censors.

The Ivan Film Production "Forbidden Fruit" has been passed by the Chicago Board of Censors. The General Feature Film Company of Chicago, who distribute Ivan productions through Illinois, have been anxiously awaiting the license to exhibit this picture in Chicago, as the demand from exhibitors in the Windy City for this subject was big. In Cincinnati Safety Director Friedlander announced there would be no interference with "Forbidden Fruit," against which a complaint had been made by Rev. John Herget. Mr. Friedlander announced that the eliminations made by the State Board of Moving Picture Censors had been made.

The Portoscope Portable Projector Finds New Fields.

The Motion Picture-Scope Co. of Chicago has arranged with the San Juan (Porto Rico) Film Exchange to handle the Portoscope Projector in Porto Rico and San Domingo. Traveling exhibitors are finding the natives interested in moving pictures, and it is believed there is a good field for small projectors in that country. The Motion Picture-Scope Co. also recently completed negotiations with the Northern Pine Manufacturers' Association of Minneapolis to use the Portoscope portable projector for exhibiting film they have made, illustrating the source of supply of pine lumber in the northwestern regions, in order to overcome a prevailing impression that none of this timber is obtainable. Lecturers employed by that association will cover a large part of the country, showing the film and lecturing on the advantages of pine lumber.

Ludwig Hommel & Co. in New Home.

Hommel's—The - Everything - for-Your-Playhouse-People, 422 First avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., moved their showrooms and warehouse on March 24 to 947 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh. Hommel's popularity and patronage among the exhibitors has grown to such an enormous extent that in order to carry enough stock and a large enough variety of stock to meet the demands of his trade, he must move, else he would soon have to roof over his fire escapes and place some of his stock underneath these roofs.

Hommel's is to be congratulated on the enormous growth of his business. This increased growth is due to Hommel's square dealing and prompt service, which have built up a trade for him that is remarkable to contemplate.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

THE BUTLER (Lubin), March 13.—Edwin McKim, the writer and director of this one-reel farce, has arranged matters so that D. L. Don, who plays the butler, is a very busy man all through the picture. Mr. Don's efforts and those of the supporting company result in considerable laughter. Florence Williams, Patsy DeForest, George Egan and Charles Leonard are in the cast.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 21, 1916 (Selig), March 13—Torpedo boat Sampson launched at Quincy, Mass.; Cambridge crew at indoor practice; Grand Trunk Railway station fire, Montreal; French soldiers at Doiran, Greece; Atlantic Fleet in Guantanoma Bay; "Cubs" enroute to Tampa, Fla.; students building road, Berkeley, Cal.; 73d Battalion reviewed, Montreal, Can.; war scenes, Kraguyevatz, Serbia. This last news item is very interesting.

PUTTING THE PEP IN SLOWTOWN (Vitagraph), March 13.—This one-reel comedy was written and produced by Wally Van, who plays the star part. The complications are full of humor and the production full of the same quickening influence that Wally injected into Slowtown. A rattling good one-reeler. Zena Keefe and William Shea help in the good work.

HAM AGREES WITH SHERMAN (Kalem), March 14.—Ham and Bud are the proud fathers of a one-reel photoplay on a timely subject. They have entirely original ideas as to how war should be carried on, but their strategy will never find a place in the text books. It is an amusing bit of burlesque, except when Ham turns his attention to the slaying of minute but persistent enemies of all mankind. Porter Strong and Norma Nichols have important and well-played characters.

THE EVELESS EDEN CLUB (Kalem), March 15.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of March 18, page 1851. It has a very good plot and is capitally played by Ether Teare, Jack MacDermott and Gus Leonard.

NERVE AND GASOLINE (Vim), March 16.—Plump and Runt and a brokendown "fliver" suffering from auto-intoxication supply most of the hilarity in this one-reel farce. Those who love to laugh at the antics of clever knockabout comedians will give this picture a hearty greeting.

THE GIRL WHO DARED (No. 71 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), March 18.—The familiar story of the man who followed the lion tamer from town to town in the hopes that something would happen to him, would be more than satisfied with the stunt performed by Helen Gibson in this picture. She swings from a bridge to the tender of a moving engine, and just escapes with her life. The realism in this photoplay will make the spectators hold their breath. Miss Gibson also rides standing astride of two horses. Franklin Hall, Percy Pembroke, Clarence Burton and Robyn Adair complete the cast.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF PHILADELPHIA (Essanay), March 15.—The first five hundred feet of the reel is taken up with Mr. Bailey's artistic and interesting drawings of the principal buildings and parks of Philadelphia. The remainder of the reel shows scenes among the Navajo Indians in New Mexico. An excellent educational film.

DARE-DEVIL BILL (Lubin), March 18.—As Billie Reeves plays the title role in this one-reel comedy, it is safe to assume that his heroic conduct has no foundation in fact—and such is the case. Billie pretends that the name Dare-Devil Bill is his by right of valor, in order to frighten off his rival. The picture has many points of merit. Written by Clay M. Greene and produced by Earl Metcalfe.

A FLOCK OF SKELETONS (Kalem), March 17.—The scheme of this one-reel farce is cleverly conceived. It gives the actors the utmost freedom in introducing funny business, but keeps the plot always in sight. Rose Melville has caught the tricks of her new trade with surprising ease, and bids fair to become a female Charlie Chaplin. Richard Purdon, Olive West, Mary Kennedy, Henry Murdock, Frank Munzey and Robert Ellis are members of the cast.

FREDDY AIDS MATRIMONY (Vitagraph), March 17.—Lively action has been supplied with a liberal hand in this one-reel comedy. The story reveals Freddy as a quick-witted young gentleman who is always ready to take advantage of a situation. William Langman, Daisy De Vere, Jack O'Donnell, William Lytell, Jr., and Tod Talford constitute a competent cast. Produced by Frank Currier.

THE TOLL OF THE JUNGLE (Selig), March 18.—C. J. Buckley is the author of this one-reel Jungle-Zoo drama. It introduces the animals into the plot cleverly, has a fairly good story, and is well played by Wheeler, Oakman, Edith Johnson, Harry Lonsdale and Walter Beckwith.

General Film Company Specials.

THE REGENERATION OF JIM HALSEY (Selig), March 13—The material used by Colin Campbell in writing this three-reel photoplay does not lack in strength, but several of the situations seem rather strained. Mr. Campbell's direction also is not always up to his usual standard—notably the scene where Meg escapes from the sailors and dives overboard after the captain. The story is after the Jack London school of fiction, a sea captain who is nearly ruined by drink and a female dope fiend who effects his regeneration, being the two leading parts. They are skillfully played by Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE (No. 8, "The Perjury"—Essanay), March 13.—The testimony of Amy Lerue, which is continued in this number, tells more of Mary's theatrical experience and explains how Pollock came to back the company. Dan Page is then put on the stand and asked to describe the way in which he killed Pollock. His testimony is broke down by the prosecuting attorney and he confesses that he lied to save his daughter.

A GRIP OF GOLD (Biograph), March 14.—A nicely-developed two-part drama in which sympathy is aroused for a young woman, who becomes the unwilling accomplice of a crook. Claire McDowell plays with considerable feeling and other parts are intelligently presented by Charles Mailes, Ivan Christy and Jos Ruben. Walter V. Coyle directed.

JOYCE'S STRATEGY (Essanay), March 14.—The leading role in this two-reel drama is played by Joyce Fair. The father and mother of Joyce have separated and the little girl hits upon a plan to bring them together again. She is successful. The picture will appeal to the women and children in an audience and is an excellent specimen of what was once known as a domestic drama. Darwin Karr, Lillian Drew and Jack Paul assist in the playing.

THE REJUVENATION OF AUNT MARY (Biograph), March 15.—A three-part adaptation of the farce-comedy in which May Robson appeared on the stage for a number of years. The producers of the picture were not always successful in transferring the humor of the original production to the screen. The cast included Kate Toncray, Dell Henderson, Jack Mulhall, Gertrude Bambrick and Florence Lee.

THE GULF BETWEEN (Lubin), March 16.—A review of this three-reel photoplay is printed on another page of this issue.

UNKNOWN (Essanay), March 18.—Owen Davis at the time when he wrote a melodrama a week never conceived a more stagy villain than the "heavy" of this three-reel photoplay. There is plenty of excitement in the drama, and the director sacrificed established rule to pictorial effect by having a widow married in church, with bridal vail, orange blossoms and bridesmaids. The picture is well acted, with Marguerite Clayton, Ernest Maupain and Richard C. Travers in the cast.

MISS WARREN'S BROTHER (Vitagraph), March 18.—Mrs. Owen Bronson, the author of this three-reel drama, has evolved an interesting plot, and the acting has been intrusted to an excellent cast, which includes Joseph Kilgour, Ailene Pretty, Robert Whitworth, Charles Kent, Hentley H. Gordon and Arthur Cozine. The scenes are laid in this country and England. The production was directed by Theodore Marston.

Bluebird Photoplay.

THE FLIRT, March 26.—Five reels. A picture of Booth Tarkington's story of modern American life, directed by the Smileys and from a scenario by Lois Weber. It is an offering of unusual merit and will make a big hit. The acting and direction are first class. A longer review will be found in Moving Picture World, issue of March 25.

Fox Film Corporation.

GOLD AND THE WOMAN (March 12).—A six reel offering with Theda Bara as a double-dyed villainess. The picture has a fair value and has several excellent situations. For a longer review see elsewhere in this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

HER GREAT PRICE (Rolfe), March 27.—Unusual in plot, extremely clever in development and admirably acted, is this five-part picture starring Mabel Taliaferro, supported by Harry Mortimer, Richard Barbee, George Faunceford and William Cahill. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 63, March 16.—Interesting items of this issue are dogs being trained to catch rats in the French trenches; California girls dancing with bare feet in the snow drifts of Central Park, New York City; the mid-winter boat regatta at Miami, Fla.; Uncle Sam rushing preparedness work at the Charleston, N. C., Navy Yard, and the N. Y. "Giants" at their southern training grounds.

BUNGLING BILL'S PEEPING WAYS (Vogue), March 16.—A slapstick comedy in which the comedy consists chiefly in knocking people down. In an effort to capture "Peeping Bill," the detective and the young lady's papa get the worst of the bargain, and in a chase by the police some rather amusing incidents happen. The comedy is not of a high class, or is it particularly rich in the comedy element.

THE TWIN TRUNK MYSTERY (Cub), March 17.—Billy Armstrong is featured in this farce-comedy, which has some very amusing touches but is vulgar in spots. The plot of the story is built around a theft of diamonds and the thieves discover all too late that they have taken the wrong trunk. The funniest thing in the comedy is the carrying of the trunks upstairs by the comedian.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 27 (Gaumont), March 19.—San Francisco is the subject of this issue. The views of the beautiful western city presented therein are exceptionally attractive and well photographed. It finishes with a sunset view of the Golden Gate. On the same reel with a cartoon of Charlie Chaplin and President Freuler signing the contract which binds Chaplin to the Mutual Film Corporation.

PANSY POST, PROTEAN PLAYER (Falstaff), March 21.—A clever idea is pictured in this comedy number. An actress, out of a job, conspires with the manager of an employment agency, and appears in various costumes before women who call for help. She hires out as a colored girl, Swedish girl and Irish girl before the trick is discovered. An amusing number of its kind.

CUPID AT COHEN'S (Beauty), March 23. A pleasing comedy number, telling the story of how a Yiddish restaurant keeper manages to marry off his two daughters, by employing a marriage broker. The types are good, Carol Holloway, John Sheehan, Dixie Stuart and others appearing. The Jewish marriage has been done in pictures before, but is here handled in a fresh enjoyable way. It makes a good release.

PEDRO THE PUNK POET (Falstaff), March 23.—A burlesque number, featuring a long-haired poet who goes about reading his doggerel rhymes. He is run out of an editorial office, gets in trouble with the landlady and has a hard time generally. This hasn't much plot, but is quite pleasing in some respects.

THE BUBBLES AND THE BARBER (Beauty), March 26. An eccentric comedy number featuring Orral Humphrey as a barber with temperament. He poses as a count, after swiping a dress suit from a clothesline. This contains a fair amount of humor, but has no great novelty in plot or situations.

PAUL'S POLITICAL PULL (Falstaff), March 28.—A comedy number in which two brothers impose upon their fat younger brother. The latter endures their cruel treatment, but when the uncle says he will leave his money to the one who does the most work he contrives to win the prize. The humor is of a quiet sort and proves quite entertaining.

A TRUNK AN' TROUBLE (Beauty), March 29. John Sheehan, Carol Holloway, Jack and Quercie Rossen appear in this eccentric comedy. The henpecked husband leaves home and meets with numerous adventures of a tar-real sort before his wife discovers him. The humor is just fair.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

CURLEW CORLISS (Mustang), March 17.—This three-reel Western number is based on a story by E. M. Power, a favorite fiction writer. The types are well drawn. Art Accord playing the cowboy hero. Nita Davis, the pretty young school teacher, and John Gough, the crooked brother of the latter. There is a good deal of quiet humor running through this. The most dramatic episode is the stage coach robbery, which is well pictured. The number tells a natural, entertaining story and the various incidents are convincing throughout. The hero saves the girl's brother at the close. A pleasing number of the quiet, natural type.

OVERALLS (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), March 18.—William Stowell, Rhea Mitchell, Estelle Allen and other talented members of the American Film Co. carry this play to a fairly successful climax. The plot of the story is ordinary, and treats of the love of two young women for the same man. The villains score heavily in the interest of the play. There is considerable padding noticeable throughout the picture, but at the same time a fair amount of interest is aroused in the spectator. It is a story of out-of-doors and is of a wholesome type.

THE FIFTH ACE (Thanhouser), March 22. A two-reel number, by Clinton H. Stagg, featuring Alice Lake, Wayne Arey and others. This pictures the way a card sharp breaks into a house party and throws suspicion on the hero. The card game is well put on. Later the crook tries to get away with a valuable necklace and the hero turns tables on him. This is well-constructed and holds the interest closely throughout.

IN THE SHUFFLE (American), March 28.—This three-reel number, written by Edward Kaufman, is a particularly strong study of the seamy side of life. It is almost a model of its kind, as it dips into the underworld without resorting to sordid methods and yet carries desirable dramatic strength. The shooting scene in the last reel is excellently handled. The best pictures the regeneration of a young gambler, who also pulls the girl's brother up with him into a better life. Edward Coxen, Winifred Greenwood, George Field, John Gough and others appear. A strong offering.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

FOR THE DEFENSE (Lasky), March 13.—Fannie Ward and Jack Dean are featured in this production which is not quite as good as it might be. The story ends with a strong climax which helps toward redeeming it. There is a capable cast in support. This film was reviewed in last week's issue.

THE LOST BRIDEGROOM (Famous Players), March 20.—This subject, featuring John Barrymore, will make fine entertainment. There is a strong vein of light comedy running through it. So, too, there is pathos. An excellent cast aids Mr. Barrymore. The picture is reviewed at length in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 19, 1916 (Pathe), March 4.—In this issue we see the Boston society folk enjoying themselves on the roof, despite the weather. Some interesting photographs of Frank Moran, the prize fighter, are also shown, and General Gloom being consigned to the depths of the Pacific Ocean by the citizens of Los Angeles.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 20, 1916 (Pathe), March 8.—In this issue are shown some interesting items, among which is the funeral of the victims of the last Zeppelin raid in Paris, a demonstration of the proper care of infants held by the State Department of Health at Albany for the benefit of mothers, the burning of an abandoned contagious disease hospital at Albany, and other equally important events.

LUKE PIPES THE PIPPINS (Phunphilms), March 15.—With the exception of a much-abbreviated costume worn by one of the young ladies in the play there will be found much that is pleasing in this comedy. There seems no excuse, however, for the young lady's failing to cover her lower extremities from the middle of her thighs down to her ankles. The story of the film treats of a bunco booking agency kept by Luke. The types that frequent the place are interesting, and much of the comedy is exceedingly good.

IN SOFT IN A STUDIO (Starlight), March 22.—A production in which Heine is kidnapped by a sculptress, taken to her studio as a model, and eventually made violent love to, while Louie looks through the skylight with an expression of envy and chagrin. There are spots in this farce-comedy that are exceedingly raw, bordering on the absolutely vulgar, in spite of the fact that the ordinary audience might find it exceedingly amusing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE RED CIRCLE, NO. 13 (Balboa), March 11.—The last but one of this excellent serial is entitled "Branded As a Thief" and savors of an approaching climax. June Travis has been arrested as the "Red Circle" thief and has been released on bail. Max Lamar has told her of his love for her, and has been obliged at the same time to admit her guilt. "Smiling Sam" has breathed his last, after placing the police on the trail of June. An interesting episode.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 13 (Signal), March 20.—"A Fight for a Fortune" is the title of this chapter of the serial. Helen this time again boards a train and fights a couple of men who have stolen a valise containing valuable papers. She succeeds in getting the valise, jumps from the moving train and is followed by the men, who overtake her and are about to take possession of the valise again, when Rhinelander appears on the scene. This is one of the most thrilling episodes of the serial.

Triangle Film Corp.

THE BRIGHT LIGHTS (Keystone), Feb. 20.—Fatty and Mabel in new adventures, some very stormy ones of terrific action, including the collapse of a building in which the rescue of Mabel is undertaken by Fatty and a party of Jack Tars.

WIFE AND AUTOMOBILE TROUBLE (Keystone), March 5.—Exactly what its title describes: the adventures of a married man who bought a Flivver for his typist pursued by a jealous wife. Willie Collier amusing in the lead.

THE VILLAGE VAMPIRE (Keystone), March 12. A melodramatic travesty made interesting by well-known Keystone methods and the personality of Billie Bre-kwell in the title role.

THE MORAL FABRIC (Kay-Bee), March 19.—A story built around an important social problem and interesting in itself, but made to drag by lack of variety and contrast in the action.

THE RAIDERS (Kay-Bee), March 26.—A stock exchange story on familiar lines, that of the plotted ruin of a capitalist and his rescue by an obscure clerk and his spirited daughter, a mild revival of what has already been shown in smaller releases.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

THE MISSING LOCKET (Rex), Feb. 11.—A nice child's story, featuring Baby Early as a poor little girl. She is suspected of stealing a locket at a party, but it turns out to be only some food she wanted to take home to her crippled brother. The close has a good pathetic touch. Very pleasing.

THE DESPERADO (Lacmmle), March 22. A western number, by Calder Johnstone, featuring Rupert Julian as a bandit who saves the life of a child at the cost of his own. This is graphically presented and makes a number of strong interest.

A FRIEND, BUT A STAR BOARDER (L-KO), March 26.—A very funny low comedy number, featuring Billy Ritchie, Peggy Pearce and Gene Rogers. The star boarder stirs up trouble between Billy and his wife. Not much in plot, but full of amusing antics and ends up with a wild ride in the rain. A good number of the type.

THE JANITOR'S BUSY DAY (Nestor), March 27.—An Al E. Christie number, in which most of the Nestor company appear. The scenes are taken in a theatrical boarding, or rooming, house and contain numerous amusing incidents. A characteristic number.

THE GASOLINE HABIT (Imp), March 28.—This comedy, by Roy Clements, will bring joy to lovers of Ford jokes. Victor Potel buys a Flivver and a funeral director immediately hands him his card. The Ford slips out of his hands while he is cranking it, and flys up in a tree. Well pictured and amusing.

THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME (Rex), March 28.—A pleasing little number, by Lois Weber, picturing the experiences of a small boy who runs away from home and returns later in a penitent frame of mind. This has a sympathetic note and should appeal to old and young.

HE ALMOST ELOPED (Nestor), March 31.—A pleasing comedy number by Edwin Roy Coffin, featuring Billie Rhodes, Betty Compson, Ray Gallagher and Harry Rottenbury. Ray invades a girl's school and escapes on the toe of a policeman's boot. A typical number of the sort, with swift, amusing action and strong in feminine beauty.

A SERPENT IN THE HOUSE (Powers), April 1.—A comedy number, featuring Fritzi Brunette, Val Paul and others. A married couple take the young wife to the beach and her husband, full of jealous suspicions, follows. The maid and her lover also furnish part of the fun. This is fairly strong.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

PIRATES OF FINANCE (Universal Special), March 27.—No. 16 of the "Graft" series. In this instalment Robert Harding has a clash with political grafters and financial magnates. The campaign scenes, in which he is elected mayor, are elaborately staged and fairly dramatic. Later he saves Dorothy from an attack by gangsters. Stone, the last of the "Fifteen," escapes his clutches temporarily. A number of average strength.

AUTUMN (Red Feather), March 27.—A five-reel story of the Northwest, written and produced by O. A. C. Lund. This features Violet Mersereau, Wm. Welsh, Paul Panzer, Clara Beyers and Lieut. Percy Richards, the latter making his initial appearance in films, and a very creditable one. The story is complicated and excellently handled throughout. A Chinaman tells of incidents happening eighteen years previously, which are connected up with the present in a convincing way. The settings are picturesque and there is strength in the plot and action. The averted hanging makes a dramatic feature. A strong number.

A MODEL HUSBAND (Victor), March 29.—A two-reel number, by Sam Greiner. This starts out in an amusing way, but the quality of the comedy is marred by certain vulgarities. The plot is strong enough, picturing the exposure of a hypocritical reformer, but the handling is not of the best and toward the middle of the story the interest weakens. More sincerity and less burlesque would have made this stronger.

SCORCHED WINGS (Imp), March 31.—A three-reel number, by Raymond L. Schrock, featuring Betty Gray as an impressionable girl, just learning her power over the masculine sex. She comes near to taking the fatal step before commonsense awakens her to the meaning of true love. This is consistently, if quietly, worked out and makes quite an interesting study of blossoming womanhood. Not powerful, but entertaining and convincing. Curtis Benton, Harry Spingler, John Clark and others are in the cast.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE HUNTED WOMAN (Vitagraph), March 6.—This five-part adaptation of the novel of the same name by James Oliver Curwood, has been directed by S. Rankin Drew, with singularly fine results. Virginia Pearson plays the title role in an impressive manner. An excellent supporting cast includes Ned Finley, George Cooper, Frank Currier, Denton Vane, Chas. Wellesley, Harold Foshay, Mae Greene, Billie Billings, and S. Rankin Drew himself. The production presents a human drama that will please wherever it is shown.

THE HERO OF SUMBARINE D-2 (Vitagraph—V-L-S-E), March 13.—A stirring picture featuring Charles Richman. It is a patriotic drama, but first of all it is a drama. In the cast are Eleanor Woodruff, Anders Randolph, J. Rogers Lytton, James Morrison, Charles Wellesley, Thomas Mills and Zene Keefe. In the making of the picture the United States Government co-operated. The subject was reviewed at length in the last issue, on page 2023.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 21, 1916 (Vitagraph), March 14.—Greek army evacuating Salonika; Mardi Gras at New Orleans; trial trip of destroyer Porter, Rockland, Maine; fashions; San Diego gunners with trophy; Cleveland Boy Scouts hunt lost comrade; Secretary MacAdoo sails for South America; S. S. battleship Tennessee leaves Old Point Comfort; Chicago "Cubs" at Tampa, Fla.; U. S. Troopers invade Mexico; Brigadier General Pershing; Mexican soldiers on the March; Major General Funston; Krazy Kat, Bugologist, cartoon.

THE SUPREME TEMPTATION (Vitagraph), March 20.—A five-part picture scarcely as meritorious as the general run of Vitagraph productions. The cast is a large one, including Antonio Moreno, Chas. Kent, Dorothy Kelly, Mary Maurice, and a number of other Vitagraph players. Poor construction is one of the glaring faults of the production, while the theme is a much-hackneyed one, treating, as it does, of the youth who goes from home to study, becomes enamored of a pretty grizette, and marries her. The first reel is devoted to telling the story of the financial crash of the father of young Dubois. The rest of it tries to follow two love stories, and inserts a long chapter in the Paris career of young Dubois. The manner in which the story is presented is confusing.

THE HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 22, 1916 (Vitagraph), March 17.—Scenes of the Villa raid at Columbus; Trinity Church burns, Cincinnati, Ohio; "The Human Fly," Oakland, Cal.; Better Babies Exposition, Chicago; Phillies at St. Petersburg, Fla.; building tabernacle, Chicago; Pullen wins auto race, Los Angeles; British troops at Salonika; Fashions; Krazy Kat and Ignatz Mouse cartoon, "At the Circus."

World-Equitable.

PASSERS-BY (Equitable), March 20.—S. E. V. Taylor made this rather disappointing adaptation of the play of the same name by C. Haddon Chambers. As pointed out in a review on another page, the spirit of the original work is lacking. Charles Cherry, Marguerite Skirwin and Mary Charleson are in the cast.

Miscellaneous.

BRITAIN PREPARED (Chas. Urban), March.—Several thousand feet of film comprise this splendid collection of scenes illustrative of Britain's accomplishments in the organization of a new army, and the manufacture of munitions during the heavy siege of the present war. Views of the Grand Fleet in the North Sea, the submarine service, and the destroyers are also a part of the collection.

AMERICANISM (Will S Rising), March.—A one-reel patriotic film showing some excellent views of the naval parade at New York, close-ups of "The Mayflower," and some scenes of the jackies parading on Fifth avenue. Some of these scenes were taken from the deck of the Mandalay. The Birth of Old Glory and some impersonations of Presidents, past and present, are also a part of the film.

LESSER GIVES REASONS.

Tells Why V-L-S-E Markets "The Ne'er-Do-Well"—Will Maintain Permanent Offices in New York.

DISCUSSING his reasons for releasing "The Ne'er-Do-Well" through the V-L-S-E, Inc., Sol L. Lesser, who two months ago purchased this picture from Colonel W. N. Selig for $150,000, said: "After six weeks' campaign the offers for bookings on "The Ne'er-Do-Well" came in so fast that I was compelled to seek the assistance of a national organization for distribution. While my plan of marketing direct to the exhibitor would have been a success and brought big results, I was here afforded a quick opportunity for quick returns on my investment through the V-L-S-E, as I feel that their policies are right policies and the lasting ones.

"Then, besides, the deal takes a great deal of work from my shoulders, and releases me for other activities I now have in progress. Had I handled "The Ne'er-Do-Well" by direct booking, it would have been months before I could have turned to my other propositions.

"From the inquiries received, and the enthusiasm shown in 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' in the past two months I can unselfishly say that the productions will make a record wherever it plays, and I do not consider it second to any picture on the market to-day.

"I had opportunities to market 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' through the various programs, but during my two weeks negotiations with Mr. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, I became thoroughly conversant wtih their practical policies, and fair manner of treatment of the exhibitor, and decided with their open market policy, with their eighty live wire representatives in the field, and fifty prints in immediate action, that the exhibitor would have the opportunity of getting 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' for his theater more quickly. Then, besides, with their open booking policy every exhibitor, regardless of his connections, will have an equal opportunity of securing the attraction.

"I still have my interests in the film business, including my exchanges in California, and interests in other pictures that are playing in various territories. Besides, I have just acquired foreign rights on some big productions, which together with other propositions which I now have pending will take up most of my time."

"THE HAUNTED MANOR" ON SCREEN APRIL 3.

The Gaumont company will offer a style of photodrama that has a universal appeal for motion picture patrons when it releases "The Haunted Manor" April 3. This five-reel feature has been written especially for Gaumont by O. A. Nelson to exploit the talent of Miss Iva Shepard. She has a large following because of her success with adventuress roles, and in "The Haunted Manor" the author has given her a role which not only allows her great scope for her recognized talent but also develops for the screen a softer side of her nature.

"The Haunted Manor" is the story of an American adventuress who has infatuated an East Indian Rajah to such an extent that she is invited to live at his court.

The Gaumont company has provided an exceptional cast in support of Miss Shepard. Mr. Schenck makes a handsome leading man, and Henry W. Pemberton is fitted with a role that gives him the chance to show the oriental cunning and revengeful cruelty of the Rajah's nature in a powerful manner. Miss Gertrude Robinson takes the part of the undeserving society girl. Miss Olive Trevor, well known in New York studios as a model, does not have to act all the time for the camera, for her part is one that is familiar to her. She merely goes through the same routine as a model that marks her appearance in any studio. However, there are important parts of the story to which she contributes in a fashion demanding real acting ability.

"The Haunted Manor" will be released by Mutuaul as a Mutual Masterpiece.

Carlyle Blackwell is now permanently with the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, having signed a three-year contract with that concern.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE DIXIE WINNER" (Essanay).

This is an unusually pretty story, one that touches the heart strings and brings tears to the eyes, though it has a joyous ending. The story is written especially for Essanay's new eleven year old star, Joyce Fair, "the littlest leading lady." Ernest Maupain, as the girl's grandfather in the play, brings to the picture all his characteristic skill and finished acting. The story deals with Joyce, who is living with her mother, a young widow who is estranged from her father because she married into a family with which her own family had carried on a feud. The little girl is a lover of animals, her special pet being Satan, a thorough-bred colt. Reverses compel the young widow to sacrifice her estate and Satan goes with the rest of the property. However, the grandfather, knowing of the child's love for the animal, secretly purchased it. Later he himself meets reverses and is close to bankruptcy. He decides to stake everything on Satan in a great race. Rivals kidnap his jockey and the old judge thinks that everything is lost. When the start comes, however, Satan is on the track with a strange rider. Moreover the horse wins the race. The old grandfather rushes to the stable to find out who the rider is and discovers that it is his own grandchild. This unites him to his daughter. Among the strong features in the play is an actual race which takes place at the Hawthorne tracks just outside of Chicago. Little Joyce Fair is an expert horsewoman and raced around the track against several others, making a speed of a mile far under the two minute mark.

"MIDNIGHT FROLICS" OUTDONE BY FILM.

The magnificent scenic displays on the stage of Ziegfield's "Midnight Frolics," New York City, are fairly outdone by the sumptuous spectacle to be witnessed on the stage of the music hall that figures in "Thrown to the Lions," featuring Mary Fuller.

It is well known that Producer Ziegfield spends so much money on rich and novel stage settings that he can make no money out of his show even when playing to a capacity house. But Producer Henderson, for the Universal, has dared to go the lavish Ziegfield one better.

First, the Universal Heights' stage crew erected a music hall of the first order. On the stage of this they built an immense "hill of snow." Sleds of quaint design were next constructed; and when you view this music hall scene in the films, you will find a spectacle that outrivals those of the inventive Ziegfield. It shows wonderfully gowned beauties performing on the stage, when suddenly down the "hill of snow" come other show girls on sleds of odd design. It is an idea that any producer of stage spectacles could copy with profit.

MISS CLARK IN "MOLLY MAKE-BELIEVE."

"Molly Make-Believe," by Eleanor Hallowel Abbott, one of the most popular stories ever written, which first appeared in one of the big magazines and later became a popular gift book, is being adapted to the motion picture screen by the Famous Players Film Company with Marguerite Clark in the stellar role. It will be released on the Paramount Program in April. To those who are familiar with the story, this announcement will undoubtedly suggest two thoughts—the fact that the character of Molly is ideally suited to Miss Clark's exquisite charms and the difficulties which the conversion into motion pictures of a story which has as its basis a series of letters, must present to the producer.

In support of the star there will appear J. W. Johnston, Clarence Handysides, Mahlon Hamilton, Helen Dahl, Gertrude Norman, Master Dick Gray, and several others who are well-known on the stage. Then there is Merry, the dog "whose first name is the same as Molly's last name." Merry is admirably portrayed by Mike, who in private life, as they say of his biped contemporaries, is the boon companion of J. W. Johnston. J. Searle Dawley, who has directed Miss Clark's more recent appearances, is in charge of the production.

"FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE AND ROSIE" (L-Ko).

Wurra, wurra, and oi yo! It was a great fight—that two-round bout between A. Cross Leech, the Jewish Lion, and Mike McGinnis, the Irish Terror! It all came off toward the end of the L-KO howler, "For the Love of Mike and Rosie," and the ring in which it was staged by Pathe Lehrman, Esq., resembled Madison Square Garden in its infancy.

The fight scenes are said to be the most ludicrous ever pulled off without the use of Marquis of Queensbury rules. The fighters maul billyhell out of each other and in one closeup Mike McGinnis illustrates his famous whiffenpoof punch which, as every ringside veteran knows, is even more deadly than the wampus corkscrew, a slaughterhouse swing which, when landed on the fifth dorsal vertebra, is a sure sleep producer.

There's no use retailing the plot, for the scenario writer has made it so complicated and full of press-agent "punches" that it would take all the reading and advertising pages of The Scene from "For the Love of Mike and Rosie" (L-Ko).

Moving Picture World to detail it. This is the gist of the matter:

The Jewish Lion tries to oust Dr. O'Briensky from the affections of Rose Goldfinger. Mike McGinnis, the stockyards bruiser, is called in to double cross A. Cross Leech, said Jewish Lion, and Mike succeeds in doing so although he has some exciting adventures while trying to live up to his contract.

After re-issuing "The Heart Punch" with Jess Willard in the principal role and "For the Love of Mike and Rosie," the Universal feels that it can lie back and rest on its laurels, content in the assumption that it did all within its power to depict certain phases of the modern prize ring in their worst possible aspect. "For the Love of Mike and Rosie" is a highly moral drama.

Coming "Sis" Comedies

Plenty of Variety in Subjects Announced by Kalem for Coming Weeks.

"WHEN Things Go Wrong," "Almost a Heroine" and "Her Inspiration," are three Kalem Sis Hopkins comedies announced for early release on the General Film program. Kalem has followed its usual systematic method in these subjects with the result that productions are now lined up many weeks in advance removing the necessity of haste in the work of production.

A pleasing point in connection with the forthcoming releases just announced is the variety that has been secured in the stories while at the same time meeting the demands of exhibitors that Rose Melville be kept in the character that has made her famous.

In speaking of the strong reception accorded the Sis Hopkins subjects, William Wright, of the Kalem Company, last week declared to a Moving Picture World representative, "We are particularly pleased with the wonderful increase in bookings following the release of the early subjects. While the record number of advance bookings caused even experienced exchange men to marvel, that could be attributed to the drawing power of the famous star. The fact that the bookings have gone even higher in leaps and bounds shows that we have backed the fame with the real goods in productions."

Sis finds herself in the midst of a family quarrel in "When Things Go Wrong," released on March 24. The following subject, "Her Inspiration," finds Sis causing a whirlwind of excitement through a mix-up of her "Tootsie," a three months' old pig, with the youngster of the house. There is a supposed kidnapping which keeps Sis on a hop, skip and jump throughout the single reel.

"Her Inspiration" is the first release for the following month, scheduled for April 7. The plot is built around Sis' fondness for music, which she displays herself by a humorous playing of the harmonica and an occasional lapse into an old-fashioned stage jig.

"THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME" (Universal).

When Lois Weber and Philips Smalley produce a photoplay, whether it be a one-reel drama or a Bluebird feature, it goes without saying that it will be a masterpiece. This pair of master directors recently produced in "There's No Place Like Home" a little gem of a play which depicts in most appealing fashion the adventures of a lad who is attacked by that insidious malady, the wanderlust.

The central theme is a slender one but the Smalleys have embellished it with wonderful night photography and a sympathy of delineation which arouses one's admiration. The play admirably illustrates what can be done with a slight story.

The boy dreams of gypsy life. He sees himself seated in a forest glade before a camp fire over which a steaming kettle sizzles and sputters cheerfully. The mystery of the night envelops him. Then, to the soft strains of a guitar, a gypsy maid dances with charming abandon before him while other members of the roving band join in the wild chorus of the song she sings.

His prosaic home life and school become distasteful and finally he runs away. His adventures as a wanderer are dramatic in the extreme although tempered by high spots of comedy. The directors put one so thoroughly in sympathy with the lad that his experiences seem like a transcript from one's boyhood dream-deeds. "There's No Place Like Home" features the Antrim family. It will be released under the Rex brand on March 28.

GAUMONT ANNOUNCES FIVE-REEL RELEASE DATES.

The Gaumont Company has announced that its first April release of a Mutual Masterpicture will be April 3. On this date "The Haunted Manor" will be given to the screen. Miss Iva Shepard is starring in this production. Prominent parts are taken by Earl O. Schenck and Henry W. Pemberton. It is a story of an American adventuress who fascinates an East Indian Rajah. Miss Shepard, who appeared to advantage in a similar role in Gaumont's "The Drifter," will have the part of the adventuress.

The second Mutual Masterpicture of the month which Gaumont will release is "The Quality of Faith." The co-stars in this are Miss Gertrude Robinson and Alexander Gaden. "The Quality of Faith" will be released by Mutual April 17.

PICTURES TO TELL STORY OF FIRE PREVENTION.

Motion pictures are now to be utilized in the fight against fire. The E. I. S. Morton Picture Corporation has the new one-reel drama under way and it is promised that it will be something original in the way of an industrial picture.

The scenario, which has been written by Roy McCardell, author of "The Diamond from the Sky" and a score of other successes, tells the need of fire protection and emphasizes the frightful cost of lack of preparedness, which is annually taking a toll of 3,000 lives and $200,000,000 in property in this country.

While the subject is frankly an advertisement for the Pyrene Manufacturing Company, being called "A Pyrene Romance," it is reported to open a new field in industrial filmdom, in that it combines a plot with all the elements of human interest of the intensest sort. Were it not admittedly an advertisement, it is said that the fact might not be apparent at first sight, so skilfully has Mr. McCardell introduced the fire extinguisher. There have been many films in which fire scenes occur, and in many others these extinguishers are used just as an axe or fire-hook might be used, but in this the need for fire protection is the axle on which the romance turns.

The players, who include Frank Whitson and Ned Ray, sailed for Jacksonville, Fla., Friday, Feb. 25. The outdoor scenes will all be made in the south, the studio scenes being staged in this city later.

"THE GREAT EXPERIMENT" (Bluebird).

Violet Mersereau becomes a Bluebird star with the April 17 release of "The Great Experiment," a comedy drama based upon the psychology of crime. Rex Ingram wrote the scenario and has produced the feature with Dan Hanlon, Kittens Reicherts, Wm. J. Dyer, Lionel Arams, Howard Crampton and Mrs. J. J. Brundage supporting Miss Mersereau in the five-act play.

The intent of the story is to indicate whether or not surroundings and environment have an unalterable effect upon the criminally inclined. In the Bluebird demonstration of psychology, a little girl, raised a pickpocket, is taken into the atmosphere of a good home and careful training, for the expressed purpose of carrying out the ideas of a noted criminologist.

Half the picture is devoted to the comedy results attendant upon the girl's transition from the slums to luxury, the hoydenish pranks of the wild little street gamin providing natural humor enough to make the feature class almost as a comedy release. The "slum" side carries many pathetic incidents and there is altogether a feature that well matches the long line of previously excellent releases under the Bluebird standard.

"SUNSHINE DAD."

"Sunshine Dad" is the fitting title given to the new Griffith feature in which De Wolf Hopper will return to the Triangle screen in a few weeks. Chester Withey, who made the film version of "Don Quixote" for Hopper's motion picture debut, has collaborated with Tod Browning on what is announced as an original American comedy. Withey again plays the heavy part with the huge star and Fay Tincher and Max Davidson, principals in the Cervantes spectacle, have prominent roles. Edward Dillon directs Hopper for the second time. William De Wolf Hopper, Jr., who has just passed his first milestone, makes his debut in "Sunshine Dad." He is on the payroll and his proud parent announces that his salary will start a life-sized bank account for the infant.

Scene from "Sunshine Dad" (Fine Arts).

In "Sunshine Dad" Hopper will be seen as Adonis Evergreen. He is the principal sufferer from the complications arising from the theft of a diamond band from a Hindoo shrine. Before the situations are straightened out Evergreen's son and his sweetheart have been separated through misunderstandings for which the old bean is responsible. Leo, the Fine Arts lion, gives the principal players plenty of exercise before he is cornered by Adonis and the stolen band restored to the revenge-seeking Hindoos.

Jewel Carmen has been rewarded for patient effort by being cast for an important part in "Sunshine Dad." Eugene Pallette and Raymond Wells complete the company. The production is in line with the present demand for more comedies. The future of Douglas Fairbanks in screen comedy is apparently assured since the success of Billie Burke in "Peggy" Ince has completed a five-reeler with William Collier and has signed the star for another, and Mack Sennett has increased his companies at Keystone to fifteen. Hopper's third Fine Arts picture is to be another original American comedy.

RAVER TO HANDLE "AUSTRIA AT WAR."

While most of the warring nations have had their side of the conflict presented in motion pictures, the Austrians alone have been unrepresented in this information to the public. "Austria At War," the official pictures of the Austrian government approved by Emperor Franz Josef, are the very first to be launched on the American market showing this nation's side of the controversy.

The Raver Film Corporation is marketing this Austria war picture for the Austrian government.

Every foot of the picture was cinematographed under the personal supervision of one of his majesty's staff officers and contains many intimate views of the warfare which could not be secured otherwise.

Some of the higher officers who are mentioned every day in the war dispatches are seen in action. Views of the territory where recent big battles were fought and many other places and deeds of interest were caught by the camera.

The two reels which comprise this production are the selection of the first ten thousand feet which reached this country. This release will be followed by another subject gleaned from twenty-five thousand feet of negative which is now nearing completion in the war zone.

"THE HIDDEN LAW" (Horsley).

"The Hidden Law" is the title of the David Horsley production, in which Margaret Gibson and William Clifford make their second appearance as co-stars. It is a drama picturized in five reels and is scheduled for release March 25 as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition.

The story centers around John Carlton, a writer and genius, and a "princess of the mountains," which parts are played respectively by Mr. Clifford and Miss Gibson.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW" CAMPAIGN ON.

After a number of weeks of painstaking preliminary work, contracts have been entered into between the California Motion Picture Corporation and a group of approximately a dozen representative States Rights buyers whereby the right to exhibit "The Unwritten Law," with Beatriz Michelena, throughout the United States have been given.

During his present sojourn in New York City, General Manager Beyfuss of the California Company has had with him Archibald M. Johnson, Esq., son of the Hon. Hiram Johnson, governor of the state of California, who occupies the position of general counsel for the California Motion Picture Corporation. Mr. Johnson is connected with the San Francisco law firm of Sullivan, Sullivan & Roche. It was he who drafted the States Rights contract on which "The Unwritten Law" is being parceled out for exhibition purposes and he personally represented the California company in the signing of the contracts.

COMING VIM COMEDIES.

"Burns and Stull" in their famous "Pokes and Jabbs" series are to be seen in some startlingly original comedies. March 10, "Their Wedding Day." March 17, "A Pair of Skins." March 24, "Behind the Footlights." March 31, "Anvils and Actors." These two men are creators of limitless original situations which come out in each release. Bobby Burns began his career as an acrobatic comedian, having made a great hit in Europe and America. He is best remembered in his legitimate stage careers in "Babes in Toyland," "The Wizard of Oz" and "Ziegfeld's Follies." Walter Stull has had a long stage career from stock in Phialdelphia to management of his own company. The growing popularity of the "Pokes and Jabbs" comedies and the increasing demands for the same from exhibitors prove that Burns and Stull are in the lead as laugh-provokers of the screen.

"THE FOLLY OF SIN" (Great Northern).

The next release of the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th St., New York, is a five-part production entitled "The Folly of Sin." It is magnificently staged and wondrously enacted, the leading roles being interpreted by Miss Joan Peterson, the charming and versatile screen artiste, and Messrs Wieth and Tolway, well known actors of quality. The story is strong and sustaining and deals with the price demanded from the devotees of forbidden pleasures.

KEENAN IN "THE STEPPING STONE."

Frank Keenan's long absence from the Triangle screen is soon to come to an end. A Keenan feature is scheduled for release in April on the Triangle service and the well known actor, after a vacation of six weeks, is now hard at work on a new picture at the Ince studios. He has a long contract and "The Stepping Stone" is the first of a series of frequent releases of the Ince-supervised variety.

"The Stepping Stone" presents as Keenan's leading woman Mary Boland, who served John Drew in the same capacity for so many years. Miss Boland has the part of a wife who is used by a weak but ambitious husband as a stepping stone to wealth and position.

Scene from "The Stepping Stone" (Ince).

Robert McKim plays the part of the husband. Reginald Barker directed the picture from a scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan. It is reported that Sullivan's work is so strong that a stage adaption of the picture may be shown on Broadway next season.

"THE UNWRITTEN LAW" SHOWN IN CHICAGO.

A trade showing of "The Unwritten Law," with Beatriz Michelena, for the benefit of prospective States Rights buyers in Chicago and the Middle West, was held in the Ziegfeld theater, Chicago, Thursday, March 9. Alexander Beyfuss, general manager of the California Motion Picture Corporation, made a quick trip from New York to the Windy City for the purpose of personally supervising the affair; he left New York Wednesday afternoon and returned Friday evening.

The show at the Ziegfeld was attended by a company of about eighty professionally interested individuals, including F. O. Neilson, Joseph Friedman, W. H. Bell, H. A. Spanuth, Alfred E. Hamburger and other well-known States Rights buyers living in Chicago, representatives of all of the Chicago daily newspapers, and prospective buyers from St. Louis, Kansas City, and other points even farther west. The picture was enthusiastically received.

"DEFENSE OR TRIBUTE?" GETS OVATION.

This is probably the first time in the history of motion pictures that a town goes out of its way to accord it a public reception. Last week the Public Service Film Company's historic drama "Defense or Tribute?" started out on the road. When the picture was shown at Poli's theater, Meriden, Conn., the mayor and several other local dignitaries spoke about preparedness. The thousands of children who wanted to see the picture had to be kept in order while entering the theater by local police.

This was not by any means all that Meriden did for the picture. The leading people of the town decorated the fronts of their stores with Gala flags and other emblems, so that a stranger entering Meriden would suppose that President Wilson at least had come to talk to the people, or that the Fourth of July celebration was on.

"TRILBY'S LOVE DISASTER" (Selig).

"Trilby's Love Disaster" is a Selig western comedy, written and produced by Tom Mix, and released through General Film Service on March 25th.

How Trilby, a ranch hand, in love with Matilda, discovers that the course of true love never does run smoothly, offers many a laugh. There is action in every inch of this film, beautiful photography and scenic effects.

STREAMER ON ROAD FOR GREENE.

Charlie Streamer, the effervescent and ultra-capable representative of Greene's Feature Photo Plays, Inc., has left New York for the wilds of upper New York State and New England, on an expedition of offering to his loyal exchange men the E. & R. Jungle Comedies, "Life Without Soul," and the new five part drama in which Gertrude Bondhill, the star of "Sweet Clover," is featured, "The Awakening of Bess Morton."

The last named feature was purchased from Jos. W. Farnham, who is handling the distribution of the Bondhill films, and is the first of a series of one a month to be handled by Greene's company, and in each of which Gertrude Bondhill will be starred. The Greene's Feature Photo Plays have also contracted for Bondhill films for the territory of Northern New Jersey.

MINUSA SCREEN IN PRIVATE THEATER.

Clarence V. Howard, president of the Commonwealth Steel Company, recently placed an order with the Minusa Cine Products Company for a Minusa Gold Fibre screen for his private theater on his beautiful country estate, near Clayton, Mo.

"JERRY AND THE SMUGGLERS" (Cub).

George Ovey, whose comedy antics have earned him wide popularity among motion picture fans, is the featured player in "Jerry and the Smugglers," the Cub Comedy release on the Mutual program for March 31.

In "Jerry and the Smugglers" Ovey assumes his own character of Jerry, though for the most part of the picture he plays it in a costume foreign to him, as far as previous appearances are concerned. Ovey takes his character a very funny one, and is aided ably in carrying out the possibilities of the story by George George, Gordon McGregor and a big cast of other players.

The picture was staged under the direction of Milton Fahrney.

Frank Powell with his acting company headed by Bruce McRae and Gerda Homes of the Equitable Corporation, received permission to use the entire Cuban navy while staging "The Chain Invisible" at Havana recently. Mr. Powell says the Cuban Government has one more warship than the Swiss navy.

"THE BATTLE ROYAL" (Vim).

Young Plump is in love with Runt's sister, and Runt is having a rapid romance with the sister of Plump. Love has its difficulties, and does not heal the wounds of the distressed families. Battles are on, a trench is dug by the Runts, in which Grandma Runt is caught. In the head of the battle revenue officers arrive, making a mad search for a whiskey still being run by the Runts. A battle follows in which the Plumps and Runts turn their guns from each other to their common enemy, and slowly come together, winning a victory over the officers, and in their joy, forgetting their own difficulties; all of which makes the young lovers winners all around. Vim Comedies are released twice a week, on Thursdays and Fridays, in the General Film Service.

New Boston Fire Rules

Requirements Covering Storage in Film Exchanges and the Transportation of Films Have Been Formulated by City's Fire Prevention Commissioner—Telescope Metal Boxes—Carrying Cases—Examining Rooms.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, MASS.—Several changes have been made in the new rules and regulations made by Fire Prevention Commissioner John A. O'Keefe concerning the storage, keeping and handling of inflammable motion picture films and the construction and maintenance of moving picture theaters and exchanges in the Metropolitan District, some of which are said to be causing the local exhibitors and exchange men a great deal of trouble.

Most of these changes are in the orders which went into effect on February 1, and which cover licenses and permits, construction of buildings, heating and lighting, fire protection and certain restrictions and these changes were scheduled to become operative on March 15.

Designates Kind of Metal Box.

The most objectionable of all the new orders from the standpoint of those in the moving picture business, the provision which says that "each reel and part of reel of film shall be kept at all times in a separate metal box with tightly fitting cover when not being examined or repaired or used on a motion picture machine for the exhibition of motion pictures." Fire Prevention Commissioner O'Keefe has ruled that he will accept nothing but a "telescopic" metal box as a receptacle for films in transit and the difficulty in securing these boxes is causing the trouble.

The sheet metal boxes in which most of the films have previously been transported have been barred by the Commissioner. According to Secretary Lake, Commissioner O'Keefe decided this was the best way to cope with the situation rather than forbid the transportation of films in subways and on ferry boats. The Fire Prevention Commissioner says that the use of the ordinary metal film boxes are liable at any time to expose the film to fire hazard while in transit as the covers of these boxes do not fit tight enough.

Exchange Men Protest.

Mr. Fred E. Murphy, proprietor of the United Film Service, Harry F. Campbell, of the Fox Film Corporation, and others connected with the moving picture industry in this territory raised the point that it would be next to impossible to meet this requirement owing to the scarcity of these boxes. They pointed out that the war in Europe had placed an embargo on tin available for the sort of boxes demanded by the Fire Prevention Commissioner and it was stated at the office of the Commissioner that this particular order would not be pressed at present.

The Kind of Carrying Case Demanded.

There is another section of the new orders that goes a step farther than the Interstate Commerce Commission's rules governing the transportation of films. This order says that inflammable motion picturue films while in transit shall be enclosed in fibre, leather, or other suitable incombustible cases properly reinforced at the joints and on the corners with metal, and constructed and fastened in a manner satisfactory to the Fire Prevention Commissioner. The order further says that these cases shall not be constructed to contain more than eight reels of such film unless authorized by the Commissioner and they shall be deemed to be in transit when they are not in a room for the storage, use, examining or repairing of such films.

This order is coupled with another regulation which says, "no person shall deliver for transportation one or more films unless each film is enclosed in a separate metal box as required by Section 19 (Telescope) and in a shipping case as required by Section 20 (above), nor shall any person have in his possession one or more films unless the film or films are enclosed in cases as specified in the two preceding sections."

Secretary Lake, who has received a letter from Col. E. W. Dunn, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Explosives, is authority for the statement that the Interstate Commerce Commission also intends to issue an order that every reel of film in transit shall be enclosed in a separate container, which, if it goes into effect, will hit the moving picture industry throughout the country.

Examining Room Requirements.

Another of the new orders issued by Commissioner O'Keefe is the direct result of the disastrous fire in the film plant at Atlanta, Ga., and deals entirely with examination rooms. This order provides that the examining or repairing of films shall be carried on in a room separated from the rest of the building by fireproof partitions fitted with self-closing fire doors and stipulates that such room shall be used solely for the examination and repairing of films. The order further provides that this room shall contain 80 square feet in floor area for two operators and 60 square feet in addition for each one or two additional operators.

In addition the Commissioner has ruled that each room other than the storage room in which inflammable films are kept or handled shall be separated from the rest of the building by fireproof walls, partitions, floor and ceiling. He has also ordered that each room shall be provided with at least two self-closing doors as far apart as may be, located so that they shall serve in the best way the purpose of exits in case of fire. Commissioner O'Keefe has also demanded that each room shall be suitably ventilated to the outside air in such a manner as not to expose other property.

The Commissioner says he hopes these rules will prevent the crowding of examination rooms and minimize the danger of a repetition of the Atlanta fire in the Metropolitan District of Massachusetts. In a great many quarters, however, this regulation is believed to be unnecessary as the exchange managers and exhibitors in Boston and other parts of Massachusetts have always exercised and demanded of their employes the utmost care in the handling of films and to some minds the Commissioner's ruling on this point is a bit too strict.

Vent Pipes in Vaults.

The Commissioner has also made some changes in his rules governing the vent pipes in vaults used for the storage of films and also in regard to the installation of automatic sprinklers. The vent pipe regulation is of a minor character but the new rule concerning sprinklers reads as follows:

"Any room in such a building that is used for the storage of posters, packing boxes, or other combustile material located adjacent to or on the next floor below a storage room shall be equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers with alarm, provided, however, that no sprinkler system shall be required in a room used for the storage of posters or other combustile material located on the next floor below a storage room in a first class building, if such room is separated from the space below the storage room by a fire wall located so that the heat from the burning of the combustile material, should a fire occur, would not allow the temperature in a storage room to reach a temperature of 200 degrees F.

"All rooms which are not of first class construction and which are used for the storage of combustile material, if they are located in a building in which inflammable motion picture films are stored, kept or handled, shall be equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers with alarm."

Poster Case in Ontario

Magistrate Kingsford Refuses to Hold Exhibitor Holdstein for Showing Uncensored Poster—Finds By-Law Covering Poster Inspection Faulty—Work of Supervising Posters Not Attractive to Police.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Moving picture exhibitors won and lost one day recently when the authorities of Toronto took up two different questions affecting the presentation of films in Toronto.

Poster Case Dismissed.

W. J. Holstein, a local exhibitor, came out the victor in a police court case when Magistrate Kingsford admitted that he could not make a conviction against the theater man for showing a poster in front of his house which had not been submitted to the police officials. The judge confessed that the by-law which provided for the censoring of posters was very faulty and no charge could be pressed under the present code. "The by-law requires posters to be submitted for inspection," declared the magistrate, "but it does not say to whom, where or when. The by-law will have to be amended."

It is whispered in police circles that the police department is not anxious to take upon itself the censoring of all posters, heralds or photograph frames because they are not anxious for so much work and it is possible that the advertising matter for a photoplay may be inspected by the Ontario Board of Censors at the same time that the reels are passed upon, if the necessary legislative arrangements can be made for this plan.

The moving picture men of Toronto are in favor of having the posters viewed at the same time as the picture. The present system is impracticable, they say, because one police official, who does not know anything about the film-play in question, inspects the posters while the censor looks after the films and does not know what advertising sheets are being approved. Thus, a post r may be the reproduction of scene in film which has been ordered cut, or the film may contain a scene, the poster for which has been banned.

Gem Theater Loses Case.

The other case of interest to the local moving picture interests consisted of the reconsideration of the application of Mrs. Ellen Woolson for permission to enlarge the seating capacity of the Gem theater by the Civic Property Committee. City Architect Pearse had refused to issue a permit for the change because the increase in size would bring the house into the fireproof class. The theater is on a corner and has more than the necessary number of exits while the enlargement of the theater would mean the removal of a fire risk in the shape of a wooden partition. A sub-committee of the Property Committee brought in a recommendation that the by-law be changed to permit the erection of non-fireproof theaters with seating capacity of over 500, the present limit, providing the theaters to be erected or remodelled are situated on the corner of a block. The Property Committee refused to take action, however, with the result that all moving picture houses with over 500 seats must continue to be fireproof in every detail of construction. This decision means that the Gem theater cannot be enlarged unless the house is rebuilt to conform with the fireproof restriction.

SUNDAY SHOW PERMITS.

Ontario Exhibitors Must Comply With Certain Restrictions.

Toronto, Ont.—Although his intentions were of the best when he put on a Sunday performance to help local recruiting, Mr. Ralph Gribble, manager of the Grand theater, New Hamburg, Ont., ran foul of the Lord's Day Act because he misinterpreted the published report of the Ontario Government's decision to allow the holding of Sunday shows under the auspices of the military authorities or of a recognized patriotic associaton.

Mr. Gribble conducted the performance himself and turned over the proceeds to the local patriotic association when he should have simply permitted the authorities to make use of his house for the show. Because he did not simply loan his theater for the occasion, but carried out the arrangements himself, Rev. W. M. Rochester of Toronto, secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, sent him a warning that he had offended the law and that he, his employes and the patrons of the show were all liable for punishment. The energetic preacher also pointed out to him that he should have secured a permit for the Sunday performance from the Provincial Government.

It is understood that the ministerial body will take no action against the New Hamburg theater manager because the alleged offense was plainly the result of a misunderstanding. It was the same ministerial association, however, which attempted to put an end to Sunday performances of any kind in Ontario until the military authorities reminded the association that the country is at war.

Pathe Loses Nine Reels.

Toronto, Ont.—Notice has been received at the Toronto headquarters of the Specialty Film Import Company, Limited, distributors in Canada for Pathe releases, that nine Pathe reels were destroyed by fire when the Bonaventure Station, Montreal, was burned to the ground recently. The burned pictures included the five-reel colored feature, "The Shrine of Happiness," a Pathe picture which had not yet been exhibited in any Canadian theater; the sixth episode of "The Red Circle," and two British Gazettes. The company has been notified that the railway is liable to the extent of only $50 for the entire shipment of films.

IN IOWA.

Sunday Exhibitor Arrested.

CHARLES CITY, IA.—Despite the fact that the city council and county supervisors affirm ninety per cent. of the people want Sunday moving picture shows, the Charles City Ministerial Association keeps up its fight on the Sunday shows. It caused the second arrest of W. E. Waterhouse, manager of the Hildreth theater, on a charge of operating a moving picture show on Sunday in violation of city ordinance. The trial of this second case was unwelcome to local justices and it was transferred to Rockford, where for the second time Waterhouse was acquitted. The sheriff who was forced to make the arrest was hooted.

Strenuous objection is made by the board of supervisors to the crusade. The county is forced to pay the costs of the suit. The council has gone on record as favoring Sunday shows.

Serial for Children.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—The decision of the Woman's Club of Fort Dodge to run a serial at the special Saturday morning show for children at the Majestic theater is believed to be without precedent. "Neal of the Navy" will be run in fourteen installments.

Subscription Tickets

In Philadelphia, the Fifty-second Street Theaters Company Has Begun Offering Yearly Theater Tickets at Ten Dollars the Ticket—Belmont, Locust and Fifty-second Street Theaters Involved.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—M. Eugene Felt and F. Dooner Felt, managing directors of the Fifty-Second Street Theaters Company, proprietors of the Belmont, the Locust and the Fifty-second Street theaters, have instituted an innovation in the moving picture industry in this vicinity. They are offering to the patrons of their establishments yearly subscription tickets at an economical price, proving to lovers of good pictures their sincerity in offering the use of their theaters at a greatly reduced admission fee.

Many regular patrons of the above-mentioned houses living in the vicinity recently received through the mails a subscription blank to be filled out and returned to the management of the theaters. This blank was accompanied by an explanatory letter describing the advantages to be obtained through the use of the novel and business-like offer. For the sum of ten dollars, a ticket may be obtained which entitles the head of the family and four additional members to admittance to any of the theaters during a period of one year.

That this is an actual saving may be proven by a little mathematical reasoning, as the Locust and Belmont theaters are fifteen-cent houses and the Fifty-second street theater a ten cent house.

GREATER THAN PRINTING.

Alfred W. Abrams Considers Pictures of More Importance.

Reading, Pa.—"The motion picture is the greatest mechanical invention of the age," declared Alfred W. Abrams, chief of visual instruction of the State of New York, in an illustrated lecture, which opened the fourth session of the City Teachers' Institute in the High School for Boys, Reading, Pa. Mr Abrams spoke on the educational value of the moving picture, declaring that the invention of the animated picture was a greater event than that of printing, the telegraph or the telephone. He spoke of the great value of the picture in challenging the thought of pupils and giving them a broader knowledge of the things they see. He deplored the fact that there are many pictures in the text books and no reference made about them in the reading matter. He spoke earnestly in behalf of the installation of projecting machines in all public institutions and declared that the day is fast approaching when practically every subject of study will be accompanied by instructing moving pictures.

Starting at the bottom of the ladder, in the position of film inspector, he has steadily worked his way to the top and has been rewarded at consistent intervals for his untiring efforts.

Grand Theater at Trenton Sold.

Trenton, N. J.—News comes from Trenton that the Holding Realty Company, of which James T. Tattersall, vice president of the Trenton Theater Building Company, is president, assumed possession of the famous Grand theater, formerly the possession of Messrs. Haveson and Gilinsky. No plans for a change in the policy of the theater can be announced at the present time as the firm of Spiegle Brothers, of New York City, hold a lease upon the property and are presenting American burlesque there at the present time. It is commonly rumored in local theatrical circles, however, that when their lease expires, Spiegle Brothers will retire from the field and that the new owners will use the property for the exhibition of first class moving pictures.

Seltzer Automatic Music Co. to Build a Fireproof Building.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—A modern fireproof film building is to be erected soon at Twelfth and Liberty streets, Pittsburgh, by the Seltzer Automatic Music Co. This concern is the agency in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, eastern Ohio and Western New York for the J. P. Seeburg Co., and since its establishment here three years ago has supplied 80 per cent. of the Pittsburgh moving picture theaters with pipe organs and orchestrions. The new building will be 25x100 feet, seven stories high and will cost $60,000. The first three floors will be occupied by the music concern, while the fourth, fifth and sixth will be occupied by exchanges. MONSTER MASS MEETING.

Call Has Been Issued by Screen Club in Campaign Against Censorship.

Plans are being rapidly completed for the monster mass meeting against censorship, to be held in this city Sunday afternoon, April 2, under the auspices of the Pittsburgh Screen Club. A call has been issued to all exhibitors, exchangemen and others connected with the industry in this part of the state, and to the public through every possible medium, to attend. The gathering will be the first important stroke in the Screen Clubs's campaign against the intolerable conditions of censorship as they exist in the State of Pennsylvania, and against the proposed new amendments to the censorship laws of the state. Some of the most prominent men in the industry have consented to come here for the meeting. Negotiations are now under way for one of the largest theaters in the city to accommodate what is expected to be the biggest crowd ever brought together in the interests of the moving picture in this section. While the list of speakers is not complete at this writing, the following will deliver the principal addresses: Mr. Joseph W. Binder, secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Mr. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E; Mr. W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, and Mr. William A. Johnson, editor of the Motion Picture News.

OIL CITY'S LYRIC OPENS.

Manager Max Stahl Reopens a Beautiful Theater.

Oil City, Pa.—The new Lyric theater, Oil City, Pa., was formally opened to the public on Thursday evening, March 16, amid most favorable surroundings. One could not have been but impressed by the wonderful changes made in the theater. Entirely renovated throughout and equipped with the most modern appliances obtainable, the theater presented a wonderful sight. Both the exterior and interior decorations are such as to create the most favorable comment and the excellent lighting system which has been installed can compare with some of the largest houses in the State of Pennsylvania. A novel feature of the theater is the rest room which has been provided for the ladies. It is up-to-date in every respect and is certain to become popular.

Manager Max Stahl is certainly to be complimented upon the manner in which the opening exercises were conducted. A show, the like of which was never before exhibited in Oil City, was presented for the patrons and many new friends were made for the theater. He announces having contracted for releases from the World Film, Mutual and Equitable. Mr. Stahl is certainly a live wire and should experience considerable success with his latest undertaking.

Anti-Censorship Slides.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Exhibitors throughout western Pennsylvania are running anti-censorship slides prepared and issued by the campaign committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club. The slides serve a double purpose—to exonerate the exhibitor in the matter of breaks in the continuity of the story in a film and to place the blame where it belongs. They can be secured at the Club headquarters, 406 Cameraphone building, up to April 1, and after that date at the new headquarters, Lyceum building, Pittsburgh.

IN WASHINGTON.

Manager Bunn's Men Stand Second.

C. W. Bunn, manager of the local World Film office, is extremely gratified at the standing of his office in the "office prize contest" now being operated by the company. The World Film Corporation is now conducting a big sales campaign and to each office acquiring a contract for its service a certain number of points is accredited. Last week the local office stood second on the list. This is very creditable in that this territory is very small when compared with some of the others, and it means a lot of real hard work, and there are in all twenty-six offices. But Mr. Bunn is not the only one who is "charmed" with the results, for his office has also the honor of having a salesman, Henry E. Friedman, who stands second on the list of sixty salesmen, all having an eye on the capital prize. Botn of these men are extremely popular in this section and they are receiving the co-operation of the exhibitors, who sincerely hope that before the contest terminates their names will head the list.

Growth in Washington

Savoy Theater to Be Enlarged—Interesting Financial Report of Theater's Past Year—Business Is Speculative, Though at Present Prosperous—Harry Crandall Interested in New House.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N.E., Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Coupled with the report that a new company has been formed to erect a $100,000 motion picture theater on the site of the present Lyric theater, on Fourteenth street, Northwest, comes the announcement of improvements to be made to the Savoy theater, at Fourteenth street and Columbia road, for the management of that house states that plans have been approved by the District authorities for its enlargement "during the coming summer in order to provide additional and better accommodations for its patrons, and to make it possible to show the highest class photoplays at all times under the best possible conditions and at the lowest possible prices.

Add 540 Seats in Savoy Theater.

"We intend to add 240 more seats on the main floor of the theater and 300 mezzanine seats. These mezzanine seats will be something unique and unusual in a motion picture theater, and will add largely to the beauty of the house as well as the comfort of our patrons. The rear end of the theater will be extended and a large stage with beautiful decorations will be added. These additional improvements will not be made out of the profits of the company, but by adding additional capital, and will be in keeping with the present appearance of our theater, and as economical as possible. The lobby will be widened so as to give us a frontage of seventy-five feet on Fourteenth street.

"The enlargement of our theater is not to be made on account of our inability to accommodate all of our patrons, but is desirable in order to make our patrons more comfortable, and to accommodate all of them, even if they should all come at the same hour. The additional seats will give us a capacity of about 1,400, which is the same as the capacity of our open air park.

Report on Savoy's Business.

Accompanying this announcement is a statement of the business of the theater for the year 1915. This shows that the gross income of the house was $46,588.91. The operating expenses were $32,509.58; salaries, $3,700; rent, $1,500; interest on investment, $2,400; interest on loan, $345, and taxes, $1,029.84. In explanation of this showing, it is said in the announcement, "A great popular misapprehension exists on the part of the public as to the money made out of exhibiting motion pictures. When the unstable character of the investment is considered, it is seen to be largely speculative. A fire or an accident, or the opening of an opposition house, may in a night wipe out the investment and cause large loss. The business depends upon the good will and support of the public, and the management of this theater desires to do all in its power to deserve this good will and support."

Referring to the statement, they say, "From this you can readily see that the competition of another house would not only destroy our business, but is doomed to failure itself, because a daily loss of only 145 ten-cent admissions to this theater would wipe out entirely all profit made last year.

May Increase Admission Prices.

"It may become necessary to establish a fixed price of 15 cents for admission to most of our high-price shows in order to enable us to give our patrons the best, not only in photoplays, but in music as well. With an enlarged theater, good music and showing selected films only, the patrons of this house will, it is believed, support the price of admisssion necessary to furnish them with high-class entertainment."

The plans prepared by B. Stanley Simmons, architect, show an addition on either side of the present building of fifteen feet. The new front will have an attractive marquise over the entrance. The base is to be of stone and the upper walls of rough texture brick with terra cotta pilasters. The work will be started in May.

Crandall Also to Invade Section.

The third surprise is the announcement made to the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD by Harry M. Crandall that a company, of which he is the head, are pushing through to completion plans for the establishment of a theater in this same section of upper Fourteenth street. The necessary property has been or is being secured, floor plans have been prepared for a house that will have a seating capacity of about 1,500, and the required capital is available. This is in line with Mr. Crandall's determination to operate a motion picture theater in each section of the city. The house will be something of a novelty in motion picture theater construction, for it will be so built that it may be thrown open during the summer and obtain the same results as are possible with an airdome. The roof will be so constructed that it may be raised or lowered by electricity. Mr. Crandall promises a further announcement of his plans at an early date.

"Nation" Film in Washington.

There seems to be a considerable division of opinion among the people of Washington with respect to allowing the exhibition in local theaters of the "Birth of a Nation." It is not known that any of the exhibitors in the District of Columbia contemplate booking this production, but while some of the citizens' associations are busy passing resolutions urging the District Commissioners to refuse to allow this photoplay to be shown, others, including patriotic societies, have passed resolutions favoring its exhibition.

J. P. Anderson in Australia.

Letters are being received not infrequently from Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, who formerly presided over the destinies of the Washington office of the Fox corporation, who now resides in far-off Australia. "Conditions here seem very good for tremendous business. Personally, we find the place most delightful. The climate is similar to that of Washington in the month of May, although the natives complain bitterly of the heat. This is the hottest part of their summer but, pretty good for a fat man, I have not felt the effects of the temperature as yet." Mr. Anderson tells of the fine motion picture theaters of the British colonies, and says he finds the exhibitors there fine fellows to do business with.

C. L. Worthington Visits.

Local exhibitors were glad of the opportunity last week of greeting C. L. Worthington while on a visit here as manager of the Eastern district for the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Worthington spent considerable time in this city as the local manager of what was then known as the Eclectic Film Rental Company. Upon joining the Fox forces he was made manager of the Philadelphia office and later he was appointed district manager for the Middle West territory. He now looks after this city, Syracuse, N. Y., Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, having his headquarters in the latter place.

Tennessee Sunday Laws

Supreme Court of State Sustains Decision of Lower Court in Test Case of Exhibitor Howard Graham, Convicted of Opening a Moving Picture Show on Sabbath—Sunday Opening Killed for the Time.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—It is illegal to operate moving picture shows in Tennessee on Sunday and persons operating such shows on Sunday are subject to conviction in the criminal courts and fine. Such was the holding of the Supreme Court, at Nashville, in a recent ruling in the case of Howell Graham, of Chattanooga, against the state, appealed from the criminal court of Hamilton county. Graham operated picture shows in Chattanooga and was convicted in the criminal court of operating his shows on Sunday, the conviction being secured last fall. He appealed his case to the Supreme Court, sitting at Knoxville, at the close of the term, and the case was transferred by the court to Nashville.

Counted Open Show a Public Nuisance.

In affirming the lower court the Supreme Court held that the conviction was sustained by the common law in force in the state, both on the ground that the operation of the show and the assembling of crowds therein on Sunday constituted a public nuisance, and that they tended to corrupt the public morals; that the provisions of the common law which recognize the sanctity of the Lord's day are a part of the law of the State. Justice Green concurred in the result reached in this case, but dissented from that part of the opinion which reaffirmed the definition of a public nuisance, which is on file in the case of Parker against the State, 84 Tenn. 476.

Made a Test Case.

This decision is one of the most far-reaching of any that have been made in connection with the operation of picture shows in the state. The Chattanooga exhibitors have been fighting the city authorities and other officials for years over the Sunday-closing issue, and hoped to obtain a favorable decision by carrying a test case through to the higher courts.

For the past two years the exhibitors have been practically closed on Sunday, except when showing pictures for some kind of public benefit. Last summer the shows were allowed to run for a few Sundays for the benefit of a fund with which to build a public club house for firemen and policemen. At the expiration of this run a few of the houses continued open on Sunday, but warrants were issued for the arrest of the managers, and convictions obtained under the old blue laws.

It appears as though the exhibitors are about to the end of their rope under this decision, which may effect exhibitors in some of the other cities where the officials have paid little if any attention to the matter.

Paris, Tenn.—Manager H. L. Lawrence, of the Dixie theater, Paris, Tenn., has entered into an agreement with a committee representing the Mothers' Club, whereby one day each week will be set aside for special shows for children. S. P. Long Buys the Bijou.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—The Bijou theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., has been sold by John C. Twinam to S. P. Long, who is said to be associated with A. S. Rosenzweig in the deal. It is understood that the purchase price was in the neighborhood of $30,000, and the deal was handled through W. B. Wright. It has not been stated what will be done with the property, with the exception of a statement by Mr. Long who said that it would not be operated as an opera house. The theater has been closed for the time being.

Paul R. Albert.

Paul R. Albert, seventy-four years old, one of the oldest theatrical men of the South, died recently at his home in Chattanooga, after gradual decline. Mr. Albert was born in Paris, Tenn., later going to Cincinnati, and about fifty years ago to Chattanooga. For thirty years he was interested in Chattanooga theaters, being manager of the old Opera House, and owner of the Albert theater. The deceased was the first exalted ruler of Chattanooga lodge, No. 91, B. P. O. E. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of the Damon Lodge Knights of Pythias, and of several fraternal organizations.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By James McGuire, 611 Erie County Bank Bldg., Buffalo Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Buffalo Times Film Service.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The Buffalo Times Film Service has been formed by Norman E. Mack, proprietor of the Buffalo Times. Through M. D. Condon, business manager of that paper, Mr. Mack has bought the Marian Leonard Studio at 265 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, and has appointed George W. Terwilliger, manager of the service.

Want Cheaper Operators.

Buffalo exhibitors are watching with interest the fate of the bill recently produced at Albany by Senator George E. Spring at the request of the Westminster Club of Buffalo. The measure exempts churches, charitable institutions, clubs and private homes from the law requiring licensed operators for moving picture machines. The expense of a licensed operator has been found too burdensome by the Westminster club in giving moving picture exhibitions in its settlement work. Yet the licensing of operators is not generally considered a tax; but a means of safeguarding patrons. If skilled men are not needed in churches, they are not needed in theaters especially built to be safe.

Mr. Hickey has just bought a new automobile, a high-class 1916 model of a well-known make.

New Midway House.

Midway, Ky.—The Midway Realty Company is preparing to build a combined opera house and moving picture theater on Railroad street, the work to be started at an early date. It is understood that the theater will be one of the prettiest small houses in the district.

May Build a New House.

Paris, Ky.—If plans of Lexington capitalists do not miscarry a new moving picture theater to cost $20,000 to $30,000 will be built at Paris, Ky., shortly. It is understood that a site on Main street has been secured. Paris is one of the oldest cities in the Bluegrass district, and has a population of between 6,000 and 7,000 people.

Combination Theater and Flat.

Ashland, Ky.—It is reported that Huntington, W. Va., capitalists are preparing to erect a combination theater and flat building here in a short time. It is understood that the theater will be equipped for moving pictures.

Vaudeville House Cuts.

Louisville theater magnates who heretofore have not given much attention to the B. F. Keith vaudeville house as a competitor, are now looking at the proposition from another viewpoint since the announcement to the effect that night prices at the theater would be cut to fifty and thirty-five cents on the lower floor, and matinees to twenty-five and ten, including Saturdays. The new schedule went into effect on March 5. Heretofore night prices were fifty and seventy-five cents, and many people who would not pay seventy-five cents for front row seats, nor sit behind the sixteen row line for fifty, may now be seen at the box office. Manager James L. Weed, of the vaudeville house, in a statement to the correspondent of the Moving Picture World, said that the reduction was made to stimulate business during the early spring season when things were generally quiet. The house has a seating capacity of 3,000 and more money can be made in loading the house at lower prices than playing to a few at high prices. All downstair seats were fifty cents in the old theater on Fourth street, but when the shows were moved to the new theater two seasons ago prices were advanced.

Kentucky Bills Die

Exhibitors Throughout the State Are Congratulating Themselves on Legislature's Adjournment—Some Drastic Measures Failed of Enactment—Fire Marshal's Bill and Bill to Regulate Theaters Killed.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Kentucky exhibitors are feeling somewhat relieved over adjournment of the 1916 legislature without the passage of any laws which might have a harmful bearing on the moving picture industry. The State Fire Marshal's bill, proposing a number of drastic requirements in the operation of motion picture theaters, died with hardly a gasp, a bill to regulate theaters also went by the board in much the same way as the fire regulation bill, and many minor bills were also dropped into the discard. Much of the entire session was devoted to wrangling over the liquor question and many bills of importance never got a hearing. The principal among these was one relative to the tax laws of the state which are badly in need of adjustment. This bill was generally endorsed by moving picture men and business men, but will not be acted upon until 1918.

A CHANGE AT THE STRAND.

Stanley Spoehr at Helm of Big Lexington Theater—An Able Exhibitor.

Lexington, Ky. — Announcement has been made of a change in the management of the Strand theater, of Lexington, whereby Stanley Spoehr, formerly of Henderson, Ky., becomes manager of the Lexington house, succeeding Louis Zahler, formerly of Chicago, who has sold his interest in the company to M. Switow, the president, and has returned to Chicago.

Mr. Spoehr, not only knows pictures; but is an excellent business man. For several years he was connected with the Planters' State Bank at Henderson, but upon hearing the moving picture call became manager of the old Nickelodeon. Later he was made manager of the Princess theater when that house was purchased by George Bleich, of Owensboro, from Judge W. Allen Kinney, of Louisville. Mr. Spoehr was actively in charge at Henderson until the Princess burned a few weeks ago, and built the business up from a losing to a well-paying one. Mr. Spoehr now has charge of one of the finest and largest theaters in the Middle West. The Strand has a seating capacity of 1,400, cost nearly $100,000 to build, and has a $20,000 pipe organ.

FILM BOARD NOMINATIONS.

Louisville's Censorship Board of Children's Shows to Elect Officers.

Louisville, Ky.—The tri-monthly meeting of the Louisville Censorship Board of Children's Moving Picture Shows, resulted in the nomination for re-election of Mrs. Frederick Levy as president of the organization which was the first of its kind in the country. Other officers nominated were Mrs. Helm Bruce, vice-president; Mrs. Emil Tachau, corresponding secretary; Miss Annie S. Waters, recording secretary, and Mrs. J. B. Arbegust, treasurer. These officers will be installed at the annual meeting.

Letters were read from fourteen well known producing companies. These were in answer to communications sent to producers that the latter give more attention to producing educational and fairy story pictures for small children. The replies were all favorable in general stating that the producer would be glad to co-operate in this important movement.

The Parkland Closes.

Parkland, Ky.—The Parkland theater, in Parkland, one of the large suburbs of Louisville, has been closed. Opening Wallace Park.

Louisville, Ky.—The Paducah Traction Company is preparing to open Wallace Park on May 14 or 21, and is arranging to have the Jarside Stock Company play at the Casino theater during the week, and have pictures on Sunday. The traction company has arranged with the Mechanicsburg, Ill., I .O. O. F. band for a series of band concerts every Sunday during the summer. The band concerts and pictures are expected to make a decided hit.

Change in Strand Prices.

Louisville, Ky.—The management of the Strand theater, of Louisville, has announced a change in its prices. Hereafter the first floor and balcony will be held at ten cents, the mezzanine floor at fifteen cents, and the gallery, reserved for negroes, at five cents. Heretofore, all seats on the first floor and balcony were fifteen cents.

Will Build Colored House.

Louisville, Ky.—The Citizens Amusement Company, recently incorporated, has asked for a permit for the construction of a brick theater building at 1102 West Walnut street for negroes. The building will be 38x152 feet and will seat 800. S. P. Ostrander is the architect, and the officers of the corporation are all colored.

The house has been placed in excellent condition, especial care being shown for the patrons' comfort. Endless Films for Advertising.

Morehead, Ky.—E. E. Maggard, head of the Maggard-Bradley Company, manufacturers of the Cosmograph moving picture machine, has completed a device for taking care of an "endless film." It is claimed that this device will wind and unwind 1,000 feet of film at the same time and that the machine will be largely used for advertising purposes in show windows, etc., and that the company has orders for a number of the machines.

Trying Ohio Sunday Laws

Exhibitor Clarence Myers, of Chillicothe, Has Appealed to the Supreme Court to Decide His Sabbath Opening Case—Lawyers Are Afraid That the Highest Court Will Have to Reaffirm the Old Blue Law.

By Kenneth Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CHILLICOTHE, O.—In order to determine whether the old statute prohibiting Sunday theatrical exhibitions applies to moving pictures, as the courts at Chillicothe, O., have held it does, Clarence Myers, of that city, has appealed to the Supreme Court asking a reversal of the judgment of the court of appeals and the common pleas court.

The case is being watched with some trepidation by exhibitors all over the State now that has reached Supreme Court dignity, as many lawyers are of the opinion that the high tribunal will have no alternative other than to hold that the statute applies to picture theaters. It is undoubtedly in force, but has for years been a dead letter, as theaters of all kinds have been permitted to remain open on Sunday as on any other day; but now that the matter has been brought squarely before the courts, it is feared that the authorities, even in the larger cities, may be compelled to enforce an obnoxious "blue law."

SANDUSKY LICENSE FEES.

New Rates Based on Seating Capacity —$30, $35, $50, $100.

Sandusky, O.—The city commissioners of Sandusky, O., have decided to gather in some revenue from the moving picture theaters, and have arranged a schedule of license fees for that purpose, based upon seating capacity and location. Those outside the fire limits will pay $30 a year. Others, seating less than 300 persons, will be charged $35, and those seating over 350, $100 a year, while all theaters between these two classes are to be taxed $50 annually. There are two houses in Sandusky, the Star and the Alhambra, in the $100 class, on this basis. Representatives of a number of the houses have appeared before the commission to urge that they are already pretty heavily taxed in various ways, and that the new charge will be rather burdensome, but indications are that the authorities will put the program through.

"NATION" FILM FORGETS OHIO.

Epoch Producing Company to Quit Trying to Persuade State to See Film.

Cincinnati, O.—It has been definitely decided by the Epoch Producing Company, controlling the great Griffith production, "The Birth of a Nation," to give up for the time being all efforts to secure legal authority to show the picture in Ohio. It was for a time believed that the interposition of the courts could be secured, and tentative arrangements were made for dates at the Grand for the picture, but these plans fell through when the United States District Court at Columbus refused to interfere with the mandate of the Ohio censors.

That public sentiment in Cincinnati, as far as any reliable indication of it could be obtained, is overwhelmingly in favor of the picture, was shown by the production at the hearing in Columbus of seventy-six affidavits of leading citizens who had seen the picture, and all of whom declared that it was one of the finest they had ever seen, and entirely unobjectionable. The present postmaster of Cincinnati and his predecessor, who resigned recently, were among those whose affidavits were produced to this effect.

Offered Free to Exhibitors Who Want It.

One of the biggest and most gratifying pieces of work which the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co. has handled in a long time was completed recently, being a complete review of the big Proctor & Gamble plant at Ivorydale. All departments of the plant are shown, with the various processes involved in the manufacture of the several famous products made there. The first showing of the picture was made recently at the Emery Auditorium, on the occasion of the annual distribution of the employes' share of the company's profits. Nearly a thousand persons were present to enjoy this feature of the evening's entertainment. The film will be widely distributed, the company offering to permit its use free of charge by any organization desiring its use for educational purposes. Clarence Runey, of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., is particularly proud of this film, as the company pronounces it much the best of the several they have had made of the plant and its operations. Commercial work is now claiming the activities of five crews with the Runey concern, being held up only by impossible weather conditions from time to time, and Mr. Runey looks for a big year.

Alhambraisms.

The management of the Alhambra theater, of Canton, O., has adopted an unusual and very effective method of filling its newspaper advertising space. Instead of the stereotyped block-letter announcement of coming attractions, it uses a straight half-column or so of gossipy matter, under the head of "Alhambraisms—Edited by Tub." Short, snappy paragraphs, referring to past and coming attractions in every-day sort of language, make a very readable column, and the unusual nature of the advertising has created much interest. The Alhambra is devoting a good deal of its space, incidentally, to "boosting" for its special Saturday morning program for children. This is to be run every Saturday, from 9:30 to 12 o'clock noon, and as there has been a persistent demand for pictures of this sort, the management anticipates a considerable degree of success for the new departure.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Ball Park Theater Opens.

CLEVELAND, Ohio—The Ball Park theater, one of the prettiest motion picture houses ever built in Cleveland, opened March 11, with the Pathe photoplay, "Little Mary Sunshine," as the feature.

William Rankin is manager of the new house, which is located at 6822 Lexington avenue, opposite the American League ball park. The theater seats 450 persons, has leather upholstered chairs and a $4,000 ventilating system which will give a flow of filtered cold air in the summer. The decorative scheme is gold and green and a number of costly oil paintings adorn the walls.

Manager Rankin announces that the new theater will run selected programs on an open booking system, with special educational features for school children on Saturdays.

The mechanical equipment of the house includes two 1917 Simplex projectors and a four-arc Martin converter.

Censors Will Listen for Outcry.

Columbus, Ohio—Motion picture exhibitors all over Ohio are waiting to see whether the Ohio Board of Censors will act on the right they announce they have reserved, to revoke the certificate of approval recently issued to the Lubin film, "Race Suicide." The censors announced that their approval of the picture was qualified and that they might later decide to revoke it, in the event any public outcry was made against it.

The film, state rights to which are owned by Cleveland men, has attracted crowds while shown here and has apparently been highly approved of by the public.

Music Hath Powers.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Manager Jack Greenbaum of the Alhambra theater has just announced that no patrons will be seated while the orchestra is playing during a performance. He believes good music will help to quell those persons who persist in loud talking during motion picture performances and has engaged an orchestra with Frank H. Ruby as director.

Standard's New Signs.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Joseph Grossman of the Standard theater, has just been given city permits to erect two mammoth electric signs at a cost of $3,000, in front of his theater at E. 8th street and Prospect avenue.

"CHILDREN NOT ADMITTED."

Penny Wise Pound Foolish Ways of Exhibiting That Make Trouble.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

PONTIAC, MICH.—Films which are advertised by "Children Not Admitted," and suggestive poster advertising were two things emphsized by Rev. Father T. J. Ryan, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Catholic Church in a pre-Lenten sermon incidental to having his childish parishioners sign pledges to abstain from "being present at any place of amusement, particularly moving picture theaters, during the forty days of Lent."

"I say that for a Catholic to come to the communion railing and receive ashes on his forehead on Ash Wednesday and then go on permitting his children to frequent these shows during the Lenten season or perhaps to frequent them himself, is hypocritical," he said.

Father Ryan was aroused because children were admitted, he said to shows which were advertised for adults only. A 13-year-old boy who saw one of these shows informed him they were no worse than others that were not advertised as barring children. Father Ryan, calling upon city commissioners about the matter, was told a new ordinance would be necessary. The churchman suggested stationing a policeman at theater doors to see that children were not admitted to shows classed as not of value to them.

That he does not want moving picture theaters abolished is made plain. He believes they might give way to something worse, but he does want them regulated.

Flint, Mich.—E. J. Stanton, 48 years old, manager of the Royal and Lyric theaters, is dead. Prior to taking these houses he operated the Idle Hour and Vaudette theaters in Michigan City, Ind. For ten years he was manager of the Detroit Journal office at Lansing. His wife and mother survive.

Gee! He Was Gone!

Paw Paw, Mich.—When Deputy Sheriff Lang reached Alabama to bring back "Paul Morton Pickford" charged with defrauding Michigan motion picture men by posing as a relative of the famous, Mary, Lottie and Jack Pickford, and cashing worthless checks, he was informed the prisoner had sawed the bars of his cell and escaped.

Ishpeming, Mich.—The Butler theater will be operated only on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons and evenings when Paramount pictures will be shown. It also will be used for pictures when road shows play the Ishpeming theater.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Twenty-one Kalamazoo merchants have combined to give Monday matinees at the Fuller theater which will be free to patrons of the stores.

IN DETROIT.

Harry Irons at New Empire Helm.

Harry Irons, formerly manager of the Liberty theater, and who left two months ago for New Orleans on account of his health, has returned to Detroit and is in charge of the New Empire theater, Woodward avenue, succeeding Jack Mowat, who resigned. For construction—modern ideas—and money spent—the photoplay theaters up north are far ahead of the theaters in the south. In fact, it is his contention that there is a big field for improvement in e south.

Colonial to Run Pictures.

"You can say in the Moving Picture World that our present intention is to run pictures in the new Colonial theater at Woodward and Sibley streets," said Clare A. Hoffman, president of the company, full mention of which was made in last week's issue.

Detroit Notes.

The Pathe Exchange on East Larned street now has a modern projection room where it is in a position to make screenings for exhibitors who want to "see" first.

In "Feature Facts," the monthly house organ of the New Family theater, Adrian, copy of which was received this week at the Moving Picture World's Detroit office, E. M. Simons has the following to say on "Why 15 Cent Shows." "The question has been asked why we have so many 15 cent shows. There is considerable difference between a movie and a photoplay. The New Family charges less for the same pictures that appear in other cities." The New Family will shortly redecorate its rest room, install new flowers in the auditorium—new curtain and new carpets—and redecorate its lobby. The Question Box at the New Family is getting to be a popular feature. Patrons who want to know anything about the moving picture industry, stars, plays, coming attractions, etc., just write their question on a slip, put it in the Question Box and by mail the information is forthcoming.

Co-operative Advertising

Detroit's Three Leading Picture Theaters, the Washington, the Majestic and the Broadway-Strand, Agree Not to Compete With Each Other in Display Advertising—Use Six-Inch Space on Sundays and One-Inch Week Days.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—An agreement has just been effected between the Washington, Majestic and Broadway-Strand theaters, whereby for a period of at least three months they will all use the same amount of space in the daily newspapers—no one to use more or less than the other. The agreement started the week of March 12th. On Sunday each theater ran a six inch advertisement, while on week days one inch is used. As the result of this agreement, each theater is saving from $150 to $200 on newspaper advertising.

"I believe it one of the best things we ever did," said John H. Kunsky, lessee of the Washington. "We believe absolutely in newspaper advertising, but there is such a thing as spending too much money with the newspapers, because over and above a certain amount of space it is a waste of money. In other words, if people look on the amusement page and the three leading theaters have a six inch advertisement each, people are going to see them—and it doesn't need a fourteen or twelve inch advertisement to say the same thing. As far as we are concerned, we would just as soon have a six inch as a ten or fourteen inch advertisement—all you can do in any advertisement is to announce your show and the star with a brief line or two descriptive of the attraction—the thing that makes your business big or little is what the people say to one another. On Sunday the Washington always does an enormous business irrespective of the attraction—if they like it that means you have five or six thousand people boosting for you—if they dislike it—well, they just don't boost."

Harry Garson, of the Broadway-Strand theater, had to say: "We saved $250 on our advertising the first week, and we have done a big business. If the three leading houses will stick together and cooperate, we can just as well get the public educated to small advertisements as large ones—it's all in how you educate them. Then again its a lot better for the theater to use the same sized space week in and week out, because it creates greater confidence—to say nothing of the money saved. We heartily favor the new plan—in the course of a year it will mean an economy of approximately $8,000 to $10,000."

Manager McGee, of the Majestic, says his company will save even more than $200 per week, because the Majestic has been running, on the average, the largest advertisements of any theater in the city. "There isn't any question that the newspapers have been getting a lot of money for advertising that were not justified by the results," he said. "No house can afford to eliminate advertising especially if it is catering to transient business, but there is such a thing as using twice the space to tell the public something that one-half the space would do."

There is a lesson to be learned by this method. Advertising costs a lot of money in the course of a year and exhibitors know they must have advertising—but they can do the same as Detroit has done—get together and agree on a certain amount of space—no one to run over a certain amount—then they can all cut down at least three or four inches each week. This may not amount to anything big one week, but for fifty-two weeks it will run into thousands of dollars.

Triangle Popular in Detroit.

Detroit, Mich.—The Duplex Theater is proving more popular every week, business showing a healthy increase since the opening a few months ago. During the week of Feb. 28-March 4th "Peggy" with Billie Burke (Triangle production) was the attraction and every performance attracted crowded houses. Numerous requests have come to the management asking that the feature be shown again.

STRATFORD THEATER OPENS.

Hundreds Turned Away on Premiere Night at New House.

The Stratford theater, Dix and Ferdinand avenues, Detroit, was formally opened for the first time on Saturday evening, March 11, to two crowded houses. In fact, hundreds were turned away and several policemen were called to handle the crowds. "My Lady's Slipper" (V-L-S-E), was presented the opening night.

The Stratford is under the management of E. V. McGrath, formerly manager of the Maxine, and is controlled by a stock company, with the following officers: President, F. A. Schneider; William H. Steffes, secretary, and Joseph Schneider, treasurer. The Stratford policy is one daily matinee, and two evening performances, with continuous performances on Sundays and holidays. General admission is ten cents; reserved seats fifteen cents, and mezzanine box seats twenty cents. There are drinking fountains in the rear, and retiring rooms for ladies and gentlemen.

Manager McGrath.

The theater has a very able manager in E. V. McGrath, as manager of the Stratford. He gained considerable theatrical experience through his affiliation with Vernon C. Seaver's Chicago enterprises, and later through his successful direction of eastern photoplay houses. He came to Detroit from Cincinnati, and was associated for a year with the Maxine theater. He is rated as one of the most progressive photoplay men in the state.

The Theater.

The Stratford fronts on Dix avenue, and is of fireproof construction, with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. The exterior is faced with cream terra cotta and brick, with finely worked detail in ornamental terra cotta. A steel marquise projects well over the sidewalk, covering the entire entrance. Mahogany finished entrance doors and panel poster frames add to the rich appearance.

Interior decorations conform to the Adams period, ivory gold and old rose being the basis of color scheme. Rose shades predominate; the wall panels are executed in light shades, articulated by free hand work. The beauty of design is especially striking in the ceiling and boxes. Draperies are in old rose and gold trimming, ornamented with the letter "S" in gold cloth, the lambrequin on the stage opening being embellished with applique work and fringe.

The projection booth is in charge of Frank L. Shannon. The equipment includes two Power's 6-B projection machines, special stereopticon dissolvers, spotlights and Wagner converter. Lighting through the auditorium is semi-direct self-suffusing.

The Stratford seating capacity is approximately 1,200. Seats are roomy and comfortable, with scroll arm rest and spring edge. Private boxes are in the mezzanine, and each contains six seats. No effort has been spared in making the Stratford as attractive as possible and every means have been provided for the comfort and accommodation of patrons. (In a later issue we shall have photos and a more detailed story.)

One More in New Orleans

Ernst Boehringer Takes a Fifteen-Year Lease on Lot Near Victoria Hotel—October 1st Will See Beginning of Another Magnificent Moving Picture Theater—Some Details of the New House.

By George M. Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—This city is assured another magnificient moving picture theater with the signing by Ernst Boehringer last week of a fifteen year lease on the property now occupied at 422 St. Charles Street, by the Victoria Hotel. The present lease expires on October 1, 1916, at which time Mr. Boehringer will start building what he declares will be the most unique moving picture house in the south.

The theater, with the cost of the lease and all improvements, will represent an investment of about $210,000. Plans for th picture show are now being made by Fromherz and Drennan, local architects. It will seat about 1,700 people, and will be one of the most substantial structures in St. Charles street.

Burt King Promoted.

Burt King, the extremely popular assistant manager of the New Orleans branch of the General Film, has been named manager of the branch at Memphis, Tenn., and left this week to assume his new duties. F. E. Garner has succeeded Mr. King as assistant to Manager F. G. Morrow. The Memphis branch has been made a sub-branch of the New Orleans section of General's activities and is expected to show marked gains under the direction of Manager King, and his chief, Mr. Morrow.

Triangle Exchange Coming.

Arthur Lucas, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation of New York, will be in New Orleans within a few days to complete arrangements for the opening of a Triangle exchange in the Crescent City. This exchange will be independent of the Triangle exchange now being operated by Ernst Boehringer in the Triangle theater building, and which serves only a certain number of exhibitors in New Orleans.

Smiles at the General Office.

Employees of the General Film New Orleans office certainly do not believe in race suicide. Only two weeks ago F. E. Garner, then manager of the feature department, announced the arrival of a little girl stranger at his household. Now it's Tracy Beckham who is all smiles, and hurries home from work every evening to play with the bright little baby boy who came to his home last Thursday. In Mr. Garner's case, that gentleman was appointed to assistant manager of the General exchange a week after the interesting advent in his family, so following this proven assertion that babies are lucky, it's time for Mr. Beckham to rise a rung in the ladder.

Broncho Billy May Locate Here.

It is definitely understood, but not verified, at the time this letter goes forward that G. M. Anderson, he of Broncho Billy fame, has purchased a tract of land in the lower section of New Orleans on which he will erect a studio for a company which he will bring to New Orleans.

Two Who Are Hustlers.

Two well known local film men are handling two feature films with marked success. E. L. Rife, with the Mutual office, who made quite a record with "The Diamond from the Sky" is now handling "The Girl and the Game," and is keeping up his former meteoric pace. F. Goodrow, who until last week was with the local office of Mutual, has taken "Guarding Old Glory" through the states of Louisiana, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and reports that the picture is booked for a solid three weeks in this territory.

Rex Photoplay Service Dissolves.

The Rex Photoplay Service, Inc., with offices in the Nola building, has dissolved. C. Henriques, president of the company, and W. Henriques, manager, have gone to New York City. The company made a business of importing and exporting films, but it is understood that their field here was narrow.

Writing Advertising Scenarios.

Local moving picture enthusiasts are at present engaged in the highly lucrative business of writing advertising scenarios for a local company which is achieving quite a success in putting on advertising moving picture films in New Orleans theaters. Several recent films showed that there is a great deal of local talent. There have been some extremely clever and unique ideas noted in a number of the films, which are advertising many of New Orleans industries and merchants in a decidedly attention-getting manner.

New Orleans Exchange Notes.

Sol M. Sugarman, of the Princess theater, Meridian, Miss., was on the Row this week.

"The Birth of a Nation" is to be shown for the first time in New Orleans at the Tulane theater for one week commencing Sunday, March 12. Superintendent J. W. Gwynn of the New Orleans public schools permitted any child who wanted to attend "The Birth of a Nation," to do so, provided the child had the consent of the parents or teacher. School closed at noon Monday for all children who expressed a desire to see the picture.

Despite the fact that there are at least two dozen new houses in this territory, all of them seem to be enjoying good business. The exchange men report that there is a much lighter demand for films, but that on a whole, business is very fair considering the season. There is quite a demand for Lenten subjects.

Dorothy Jefferson, of the Essanay studio, with her mother and other relatives is visiting in New Orleans at the home of James Pearson, 1448 Calhoun street.

Gulf State Notes.

Alexandria, La.—A big pipe organ has been added to the musical equipment of the Saenger theater, which recently put in the Triangle program.

Monroe, La.—Announcement has been made that Sugar's theater, Monroe, will hereafter be opened daily.

Montgomery, Ala.—Veterans from the Confederates Soldiers' Home at Mountain Creek, Ala., were guests of the Elks in Montgomery on February 24 at a special showing of "The Birth of a Nation."

Shreveport, La.—The Shreveport Slide Company, Inc., has been formed in this city for the purpose of manufacturing moving picture slides and to buy and sell moving picture supplies. The capital stock of the corporation is $5,000 and the following Shreveport men are interested in the company: J. H. Miller, C. C. Stewart, Nathan Greenfield and Fred F. DeSoto. In the order named the first three are president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer respectively.

Port Arthur, Texas—The Pearces and Peoples theaters have inaugurated a profit sharing contest here which ends on March 31; the prizes being a Ford touring car, a diamond ring and several cash prizes. Under the plan of the contest contestants will be allowed to sell $1.10 worth of admission for $1.00, each sale being worth so many votes to them.

Macon, Ga.—The management of Macon's three moving picture houses have announced that in accordance with numerous requests that have been expressed through the newspapers of Macon, that contracts with the William Fox Company would be cancelled. The contracts, however, extend four weeks more and Fox features will be shown during that time. All theaters announced that they will make no attempt to foist pictures upon its patrons that have been pronounced undesirable.

Augusta, Ga.—The Sunday amusement question in Augusta has come to a head by the petition of a local theater to be permitted to keep open on Sunday at any time it chose. The laws of this city permit free sacred concerts on Sundays and the photoplay managers are rebelling at the unjustness of the ordinance.

Webster Theater Opens in St. Louis

A Fine New Picture Theater Recently Opened by D. T. Graham and His Four Sons Opposite the Big Webster School, from Which It Is Named—Seats 650.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST LOUIS, M.—The Webster theater, a new house which was recently opened at 12th and Clinton streets, is a model theater in every way, and a fine example of the kind of people the exhibition of pictures is attracting. The Webster is owned and operated by D. T. Graham, a well known manufacturer, and his four sons, George; W. W., G. C., and Dr. W. T. Graham. The last named, who is busy practicing his profession, does not take any active part in the management, but is interested in a financial way with his father and brothers.

The other members of the Graham family, however, are active in the management and upkeep of the place, and take great interest in the theater. The Grahams are very enthusiastic about the moving picture business, and great believers in its future. A year ago they did not think of entering the amusement business, but they had collected some capital, and they began to look around for something to invest it in, and being ardent picture show goers they saw the possibilities of the industry and decided to build a theater.

The Webster just across the street from the Webster school after which it is named is one of the best equipped theaters in the city. It seats 650 persons, all on one floor, has rest and retiring rooms, drinking fountains and a baby carriage garage. The operating booth is a model of neatness and utility. It is furnished with two Simplex machines and a Wotton Rexolux motor generator, and no little thing that would serve to make a booth complete seems to have been forgotton. Dad Wittmann is in charge of the projection booth, and he is a veteran in the business, but not as his name would seem to indicate, in point of age, for he is very young.

Mr. Wittmann is one of the first crank turners in the city and can tell some interesting things about the early days.

1,200 Press Agents.

"When we were looking around for a location, people advised us against building opposite the school," said W. W. Graham, "but we could see nothing but an advantage in the site. Our theory has been justified. There are 1,200 children who go to the school, and as a result we have pretty nearly 1,200 press agents boosting for us. About half the kids naturally pass the front of the theater, and the other half find it more convenient to go and come that way, and if Father and Mother and Big Brother and Big Sister are not kept informed as to what kind of a program the Webster is going to have, it is not the fault of the kiddies."

The Grahams are building an airdome next door to the theater that will open in May. It will seat 2,000 and will have many things not found in an ordinary airdome. There will be a tier of seats in the back that will rise from the ground to a height of six or eight feet, and that part of the audience can look over the heads of those on the level.

Interesting Paper Display.

There is a unique idea for paper display for the front of the garden; the wall fronting on Clinton street will be of ornamental brick, and frames with plate glass will be set into the wall for the display of posters. There will be four of these paper show windows, each one set in between ornamental pilasters in the wall. The glass will be fitted in attractive frames, and will be a very attractive manner of displaying a program, and far ahead of the old manner of pasting, or hanging paper. Room for two six-sheets, and a number of smaller stands will be provided.

The Webster charges five cents on five days a week, with General program, and ten cents on Saturday and Sunday, when Paramount features are used.

No Free Picture Shows This Year.

St. Louis, Mo.—Mayor Kiel, announced last week at the final budget hearing conducted by the Board of Estimate, that there would be no appropriation for free moving picture shows in public parks this year, the board having agreed last summer to eliminate this competition with airdomes, when several exhibitors protested that the free shows were taking away practically all their patronage.

Manager Edwards' Little Film Party.

C. S. Edwards, manager of the Pathe Exchange, issued invitations to the exhibitors and exchange men (and ourself) of St. Louis, to visit the Congress theater, on Olive St., near Sarah, on March 17th, for a premier showing of a new Pathe feature in which Miss Florence Reed is starred. Miss Reed is playing a four weeks engagement at the Park-Shenandoah theaters, and as she has had no opportunity of viewing the film since it has been finished, Mr. Edwards arranged for the presentation of the picture, as well as a reception for Miss Reed. "At Bay," a recent Pathe release in which Miss Reed appeared, made a very favorable impression on the local exhibitors, and has won nothing but praise for the very excellent work she did in the feature. Miss Reed's dramatic engagement in St. Louis closes on March 19.

KANSAS CITY NEWS LETTER.

Special to Motion Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

"Picture Pep."

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—"Picture Pep" is the name of an 8-page semi-monthly magazine soon to be issued under the direction of Lee D. Balsly, of the Kansas City Feature Film publicity department. This magazine will contain articles of interest to all phases of the moving picture industry and will be distributed to exhibitors, exchange offices, newspapers and other places where it will be appreciated. Four states, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri will be the territory receiving this publication. A feature column will be "Ads and Pub," which will contain personal notes, original and humorous. It is planned to make each issue cover about 3,000.

Aeroplane Kite Boosts "Peace" Film.

J. R. Burford, proprietor of the Rex theater, Arkansas City, Kan., has raised the national colors 3,000 feet into the air, where they are visible for a distance of five miles. Mr. Burford conceived the notion of advertising the "Battle Cry of Peace" with a great box kite. He made the kite, its planes are ten feet square, and it somewhat resembles an aeroplane. He painted three stripes on the lower plane, the colors being plainly distinguishable even when the kite is high in the air. It was a job for three men to get this big kite up—but it has been in the air two weeks now, and may stay a month. Banners advertising attractions, especially Theda Bara, are run up on the string of the big kite, flaunting 500 feet in the air, and notifying the surrounding country of the offerings of the Rex for that day.

Notes of Exchangemen.

Fremont, Neb.—E. F. Johnson, of the Empress theater, at Fremont, Neb., was a visitor to the offices of the Western Film & Supply Co., several weeks ago, making arrangements for handling film supplies and accessories in connection with his brother, Ben Johnson, who is an exchange manager in Fremont.

Chanute, Kas.—D. D. Johnson, of the People's theater, Chanute, Kas., has sold that house to the People's Amusement Association for $30,000. This gives the association control of both theaters, the Hedrick, which it formerly owned, and its acquisition. D. O. Reese is manager of the new combination. Mr. Johnson has left Kansas and is looking for a location in some live Missouri town.

Kansas City, Mo.—The report has gone around the local exchange managers that A. E. Dale, who erected the Dale theater, at 24th and Troost, is contemplating the erection of a $100,000 house at 36th and Troost.

Springfield, Mo.—Harry H. Hughes has leased the first floor of the Elks Lodge Hall, in the Elks Arcade, at Springfield, Mo., and will convert it into a modern motion picture theater, in addition to various other amusement enterprises. Grubel Bros., Kansas City, Kas., owners of an extensive chain of theaters, are reported to be backing the project, work on which is to begin about April 1.

An Atlanta Screen Club

Local Film Men Hold Meeting at Hotel Ansley and Start Formation of a Screen Club—George Allison Presides—Revival of the Old Motion Picture Trades Club and Will Be Fraternal.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ATLANTA, Ga.—A screen club on the order of such organizations as New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Denver and other big motion picture centers, is being organized in Atlanta. A meeting of the film men was held in the pine room of the Hotel Ansley Friday night.

The meeting was preliminary to the actual organization of the club, which will be a fraternal body. It will be a revival of the old Motion Picture Trades Club on a more metropolitan scale.

An entertainment program for the year is to be mapped out, including a number of public affairs, as well as private amusements for the film colony and their families. During the year many of the screen's most illustrious favorites will be entertained by the new organization.

An elaborate dinner was served. The meeting was presided over by George Allison, former head of the Atlanta Pathe branch. Addresses were delivered by every film exchange manager in Atlanta.

Club quarters will be secured following organization.

Five Years Lease on the Grand.

Hunnicutt company, and will be continued as a high-class moving picture house, showing the Mutual program with added entertainment features.

Mr. Hunnicutt assumed charge the early part of this week. The house is under the direction of J. P. Davenport, who has sent agents to New York with the view of providing new attractions for the place. Work began the first of this week remodeling the lobby and foyer, as well as adding new touches to the interior.

Mr. Hunnicutt is also vice-president of the Strand theater.

Gaumont Stars Here.

Atlanta, Ga.—This city was invaded this week by real moving picture actors. The Gaumont company—fifteen strong—came to Atlanta from Jacksonville bright and early Monday morning.

They were here—machine man, director and all—to make a series of scenes in one of Atlanta's big cotton mills and at Georgia Tech for a big cotton mill drama, which the Gaumont company is now producing.

The Gaumont people were here for several days, and Manager Kessnich of Atlanta Mutual, was host to them. They were royally entertained by this prince of good fellows.

De Sota Again Changes Hands.

Atlanta, Ga.—The DeSota theater, has again changed hands, King Stillman, who has been operating the house, has disposed of his interest to T. A. Gunn, Monday. Mr. Gunn, it is understood, will continue the present policy of the house, playing vaudeville and moving pictures.

Several hundred orphans from the various homes in and about Atlanta crowded into the Strand theater Saturday, to see little Marie Osborne in "Little Mary Sunshine," a Pathe feature.

Elgin Censors Resign

Entire City Board of Motion Picture Censors Throws Up a Bad Job and Gives Out Statement as to Its Reasons—Finds Difficulties in Choosing Pictures for Adults —Chicago Decisions Will Serve Elgin.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ELGIN, ILL. — In the announcement which accompanied the resignation of the entire local board of moving picture censors is the following significant statement: "The board feels that the legitimate censorship of films does not necessarily make them suitable for young children. Not all decent fiction is proper for children to read."

The board, all women, was suggested by the Mission Union and appointed by Mayor Fehrman, a year ago. Courtesy of local exhibitors is commended in the resignation.

Other difficulties are outlined: "We investigated the plans of other cities and found that Chicago has a board of paid officials who censor all films before they are shown to the public. This we cannot do because we have no city ordinance granting such powers to us. Furthermore, the films are not out from Chicago early enough in the morning to be shown before the afternoon performance.

"A meeting of the board of censors and the managers of the shows was held, all but one of the managers responding. They assured us that in the main only films passed by the Chicago board are shown here and expressed their desire to give the public clean pictures."

The Monday-to-Friday Shows.

Aurora, Ill.—Residents of Aurora did so much speculating regarding the object of the pool mentioned in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World that the Aurora Theaters Company issued the following statement:

"The majority of the picture-loving public attend the theaters on Saturdays and Sundays and this fact has given rise to an erroneous impression that the motion picture business is an extremely profitable one; while, as a matter of fact, most theaters are operating at a loss from Monday to Friday, due to the comparatively small attendance scattered among a too-large number of theaters.

"Up to a year ago this condition was not so apparent because the public was content with short variety programs and frequently visited two and even three theaters in an evening. The present demand, however, is for an elaborate program of an hour and a half or two hours' length with appropriate (and expensive) music.

"The object of this combine of theaters is to meet this changed condition of affairs in a manner which will guarantee to the amusement-loving public of Aurora and vicinity, the highest standard of photo-plays, vaudeville and legitimate shows and still allow to the theater owners a reasonable return on their investment."

Expect No Open Sundays.

Springfield, Ill.—A big union revival meeting here is followed by a change in front by the sheriff, J. A. Wheeler, and there are rumors of closing moving picture theaters on Sunday. The sheriff, elected under the impression that he would be "liberal," saw a friend die with delirium tremens on the eve of his inaugural. He shut the saloons on Sunday, drove out segregated vice and made a general clean up. In the course of the revival a service was held at the jail. The sheriff, four deputies and twenty prisoners professed conversion. The sentiment against the Sunday shows is an after effect of the evangelistic wave.

Stock in Ham Ex Film.

East St. Louis, Ill.—George Harry Hamilton and his wife, Mrs. Maude Hamilton, president and treasurer, respectively, of the Lansdowne Photo-Play Company, were held to the grand jury in the sum of $500 each on a charge of operating a confidence game, preferred by Ado Lang, Paul Slezak and Miss Mary (Patsy) Murphy. They testified that they had purchased stock in the Lansdowne Photo-Play Company and were promised positions. Ado Lang gave them $200 and was to get a position that paid him $50 a month. He did not get the position, and when he asked about it, they told him, he said, that the Lansdowne proposition had failed, and that they would give him stock in the Ham Ex Film Company of Delaware. This they never did. Miss Murphy said that they wrote her from Paducah, Ky., and when she came to East St. Louis she gave them all the money she had, $10, for one share of stock.

Lang said he had been unemployed and applied at the studio, in Lansdowne Park, on January 4 for a job, in answer to an advertisement. He said Hamilton offered him a place as "superintendent of the studio," at $50 a month salary provided he would buy $300 stock in the Lansdowne Photoplay Company.

Milwaukee's Better Film Movement

Support of 3,000 Club Women of State for Campaign to Foster Special Shows for Children and Wholesome Amusement.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The support of three thousand Wisconsin clubwomen in and around Milwaukee is claimed for what is termed a movement for better pictures. It is similar to hundreds of other movements, including a plea for better films, special shows for children and a decision to report objectionable pictures to managers and censors. The Jackson theater here already has fallen into line with the clubwomen and started Saturday afternoon childrens shows. One aim of the Milwaukee workers is to get more of these special shows in the neighborhood theaters. Because Saturday morning interferes with the household schedule one clubwoman wants the childrens' shows on Friday night or Saturday afternoon. This will be a financial impossibility for managers who have a dependable adult patronage for these shows. The morning shows fill in a gap.

NEW MINNEAPOLIS THEATER.

The Lagoon of the Cohen Brothers Will Be Ready by May 1.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent Moving Picture World.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. — Minneapolis will have another large and finely equipped moving picture house when the doors of the Lagoon theater are thrown open about May 1. The structure, which is being built by M. L. and J. W. Cohen, will cost more than $100,000, not including the investment in real estate. It is located at Hennepin and Lagoon avenues.

The new playhouse will have a total seating capacity of 1,500, of which 1,000 can be accommodated on the main floor and 500 in the balcony. The approach to the theater will be centered between a row of four store fronts, two on either side. The theater proper will be rather square in appearance, its exact dimensions being 100 feet by 87 feet. The main floor is laid saucer style and all seats are placed in curved rows. There will be no posts to obstruct the view of the screen from any section of the seating arrangement. Twelve loges will contain five chairs each.

Great attention has been paid to ventilation in the building of the theater. The system used is known as the mushroom. It will change the air throughout the theater every three and a half minutes. Under every seat there will be a ventilation flue through which fresh air will be driven by means of huge fans operated by electricity. The seats cost $8 each, are upholstered and barrel-backed. On one of the upper floors a dance hall 35 feet by 65 feet is being equipped.

Three New Show Licenses Granted.

Three new licenses for the erection of picture theaters have been granted by the city council.

A one-story theater will be put up on Seventh street, between Raeney and Minnehaha streets, by Andres Brothers and Lindren. The building, which will be of brick and concrete, will cost $12,000.

The new theater to be built by Ness and Sullivan, proprietors of the Ray, Seventh and Fauquier streets, will be located at 777 East Seventh street. With a seating capacity of 600 it will be thoroughly modern. The estimate is $20,000.

C. L. Graham will build a brick and stone theater on Seventh street, between Forest and Mandota streets, Regent Goes Back to 5 Cents.

C. R. Menzel, manager of the Regent, theater in the heart of the business district and which is situated on Hennepin avenue just off Sixth street, is enthusiastic over his company's shift to the straight five-cent basis, although the new scale has been on trial only a few days.

"It's a case of the fast jitney instead of the slow dime," said Mr. Menzel. "I was strong for the ten-cent rate, but I'm convinced now for good."

The Regent is a typical "drop-in" theater and has been playing to packed houses every minute since its venture into the nickle field. Many business men find it convenient to spend a few moments of their time in the Regent during the noon hours.

L. V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick, has booked Paramount's five-reel edition of "Poor Little Peppina" for a week. This is the first of the films in which Mary Pickford is to share in the profits to be shown in Minneapolis.

Lafayette Sunday Trial

Four Indiana Motion Picture Theater Owners on Trial for Violations of the Sunday Closing Laws in Circuit Court With Jury—Misha Robinoff, David Maurice, Luke Balfe and Charles A. Reichard.

Special to the Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

LAFAYETTE, Ind.—The motion picture controversy in this city, which, in all its phases, has occupied the undivided attention of the community for three months, is now at fever heat. The trial of Misha Rubinoff, David Maurice, Luke Balfe and Charles A. Reichard, four motion picture theater owners, is in progress in the Circuit Court before a jury.

The intense interest is manifest in the great crowds which are attending the trial day by day. The Tippecanoe county courthouse has been crowded daily and the daily newspapers report the trial fully. The papers say that greater crowds never visited the court room.

The four motion picture theater owners are charged individually with a violation of the Suday closing laws and collectively with conspiring to break the laws of the state in that they entered into a conspiracy to open the motion picture houses on Sunday. The prosecution contends that the four theater owners deliberately entered into this conspiracy after two of the four had been arrested and tried for this offense. Rubinoff, one of the defendants, was recently acquitted when he pleaded that he was a Hebrew and that Sunday was not his Sabbath.

The end of the trial before the jury is expected to decide the fate of Sunday opening in Lafayette. It is said that if the men are acquitted by the jury the police will not again interfere in the operation of the shows on Sunday and it is understood the motion picture men have arrived at the conclusion that they will close on Sunday if a conviction is obtained.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A contract has been signed by Robert M. Cass, representing a goup of patriotic Indiana citizens interested in the Indiana centennial, with the Selig company of Chicago calling for the filming of many historic spots throughout the state of Indiana. The production will contain eight reels, and will be called "Historic Indiana."

Gilsen Willets, the noted writer who wrote the scenarios for "The Adventures of Kathlyn," "The House of a Thousand Candles," "In the Days of the Thundering Herd" and other successes, has been engaged to prepare the special scenario. James Whitconb Riley, the poet, will be asked to write the sub-titles for the film in verse and George Ade, Meredith Nicholson, Booth Tarkington and other famous writers of Indiana will be asked to prepare something to help out in the production.

Marguerita Beriza, late of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, will have the leading role in the production, supported by a carefully selected caste of Selig players. The players will visit the historic Indiana places while producing the film.

Read Theater Burns.

Morristown, Ind.—The Read theater of Morristown, Ind., was destroyed by fire recently at a loss estimated at $15,000. Inadequate fire fighting service caused the big loss, according to the owner, Mrs. J. S. Read, and the manager of the theater, H. C. Jackson.

The cause of the fire is not known. It started early in the morning and defective electric wiring may have caused the blaze. There was no one in the theater at the time of the fire. The theater was one of the up-to-date structures in that section of the state. Included in the loss was a $6,000 photo-player organ.

Paris, Texas, Censorship

Fairly Drastic Kind of Censorship Interference With Exhibiting Motion Pictures Crops Up in a Texas City—Its Provisions—Mayor Fathers New Bill—It Is Said to Have Met With Strong Opposition.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PARIS, Texas, is the latest victim of the censorship craze and quite a political battle is being staged there with this question to be settled. The entire citizenship seems to be taking a hand on one side or the other.

An ordinance has been introduced in the city council proposing very drastic regulative measures, but great opposition has developed to this. The mayor, who fathered the measure, was so worked up over the opposition that he is said to have resigned. The ordinance, in substance, as reported by a Paris paper, is as follows:

"License (to conduct a picture show) shall only be issued to persons of good repute, for morality and sobriety, and any and all licenses may be revoked at the pleasure of the mayor or city council for failure to comply with any of the provisions of this ordinance or any other ordinances of the city of Paris. It shall be unlawful for any person to exhibit, display or be concerned in the exhibition or displaying in any moving picture show or any other place any picture or film without first having obtained a permit for the same from the Board of Censors. * * *

What Is Counted Improper.

"It shall be unlawful to exhibit any picture or film showing the act of burglary or arson or robbery or any other crime or violation of the laws of the state of Texas, or of a male person striking a female person, or any violation of the marital relation, or infidelity expressed or implied, or of any person, fictitious or real, of immoral character or whose actions are those of an immoral person."

Not much chance to show any picture that is worth while if the law is enforced to the letter. Might even bar news weeklies.

(If this is a part of the license and censorship ordinance, there is a very marked redundancy in it.

Vitagraphers Leaving.

Antonio, Texas—The Vitagraph company which has been working for some time on "The Secret Kingdom" in the vicinity of San Antonio, Texas, is expected to finish there about March 23. From San Antonio they will go to New Iberia, La., for the purpose of making scenes in which a swamp figures.

The company is under the direction of Theodore Marston, and includes Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Ned Finley, Robert Whitworth, William E. Dunn, Arline Pretty and Dorothy Kelly. Arthur Ross has been turning the crank.

One-Night Vaudeville.

One-night stands for vaudeville attractions at several of the larger Texas towns not now on circuit bookings will be something new when the theatrical season opens next fall, Karl Hoblitzelle of Chicago, president of the Interstate Amusement Company, who was in Dallas recently, said.

"One-night vaudeville next year will spread over the entire country, but it will be more general in Texas than anywhere in the Southwest."

Dallas Territory Notes.

Haskell, Texas—Dicks theater, is now under the management of C. Menefee. Richard S. Nolan, former manager, still retains control of the house, although he has retired from active management. It is expected that his active work in the future will be with a large theatrical syndicate.

San Antonio, Texas—The Princess theater, San Antonio, will install a mixed program in the very near future, using Pantages vaudeville and feature pictures.

San Antonio, Texas—The Queen theater, San Antonio, has started a special children's matinee every Saturday from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., under the auspices of the San Antonio Mothers' Club. Manager William Peltzer expresses pleasure over results so far.

RULES FOR ONE NIGHT SHOWS.

Omaha May Make Stringent Rules—Careless Conditions.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

OMAHA, NEB.—Regulations for portable moving picture machines which are becoming more common in Omaha may be made more stringent. Attention of city officials has been called to the fact that where a single night's entertainment is given no fireproof booth is being used. On the other hand the machine often is set up between two rows of people, and in the absence of inspection of the wiring, a short circuit and consequent panic is always possible.

DENVER WANTS FEATURES.

Exhibitors Say They Can't Get the People Out on Five-Cent Night.

By E. C. Day, Denver Corespondent of Moving Picture World.

DENVER, COLO.—Moving picture devotees in the Denver teritory have gone feature mad. They won't give their time or money for small stuff and as a result the regular program is a dead issue. Whereas a few months ago the exchanges such as the General, Universal and Mutual booked their customers on a circuit where one program would run for weeks without a change, they now are booking open. Here and there is a small theater that runs the regular program, but in most cases the exhibitor calls for only a single reel or two of comedy to run with a feature.

In the downtown houses in Denver proper nothing but features are being run. The same holds good in the larger residence theaters, while the suburban houses are running from two to five ten cent or feature nights. And the exhibitors in the latter class complain that they can't get anybody out on the five cent nights, indicating that it is only a matter of time until every theater in town will be on the ten cent basis.

In the Out-of-Town Districts.

Similar conditions exist throughout the Denver teritory. Chadron, Nebraska, for instance, has a population of only 2,000 people and but one theater, yet the feature picture predominates in the town. And it is not merely one feature a week or even two but Triangle, Fox and other features are being shown on four or five days each week.

So great has been the run on feature productions that Triangle films have not had an idle day since their release in the Denver teritory and the larger towns in the state are still awaiting their turn to play "The Lamb," one of the first productions. Paramount is unable to take care of all of its customers with one copy and is now arranging to get two copies on every release. Fox has its pictures in every town in the territory except fifteen and is booking with eleven Denver houses. The World, V-L-S-E, Kleine-Edison and Pathe exchanges report the same volume of business. The Masterpictures De Luxe have the call at the Mutual, while the Red Feature and Blue Bird releases are the business getters for the Universal. The General's Broadway Star features are second in demand only to "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

SCREEN CLUB'S LADIES' DAY.

Third Weekly Luncheon a Gala Event—Many Guests.

Denver, Colo.—The third regular weekly luncheon of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club was a gala event. It marked the first Ladies' Day and also turned out to be Guests' Day. There was a big turnout of members and their wives and sweethearts and in addition several members of Florence Roberts' company who were in the city appearing in a "Modern Magdalene" attended. The famous star, herself, was unable to be present.

Al Curtis, director of Joker comedies at Universal City, Los Angeles, was also a guest. He made a short speech in which he thanked the club for the honor conferred upon him.

Allen Curtis on Vacation.

Denver, Colo.—Allen Curtis, director of Joker comedies, which are a part of the Universal program, is home for a visit for the first time since he became associated with the moving picture industry. This means that Curtis is in Denver because this city has been his headquarters for 15 years and he calls it home because he likes it and because his mother and brother live here.

Richard Battles Promoted.

Denver, Colo.—O. A. Carlson, former book-keeper and later booking agent in the Denver exchange of the Mutual, has resigned on account of ill health. Richard Battles who has been asociated with the Mutual exchange for years, working up from the humblest position in the shipping room is now chief booking agent.

Mrs. H. H. Quine Dies.

Denver, Colo.—A veil of gloom has been cast over the moving picture colony by the death of Mrs. H. H. Quine, wife of Harry Quine, treasurer of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, one of the best liked exhibitors in this section. Mrs. Quine had been ill but a short time and her end was unexpected. Members of the Screen Club attended the funeral in a The sympathy of every man connected with the film industry in the Denver territory goes out to Mr. Quine.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Co., was a recent visitor here from Santa Barbara.

Ticket Scalpers Tax

San Francisco Tax Collector, City and County, Issues Notice That All Theater Ticket Peddlers and Agents Must Get License—Fee Will Be $300 a Month—Theaters Accused of Playing for Higher Prices.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—Edward F. Bryant, Tax Collector of the City and County of San Francisco, has issued a notice to the effect that all theater ticket scalpers and agents would be compelled in the future to take out ticket peddlers' licenses, the fee for which is $300 a month Theater tickets have been sold for a long time at various cigar stands and in saloons and charges have been made that theaters have used this method of selling seats to secure higher admission prices. At times when tickets would be unobtainable at the theater box office they could be secured on the outside at advanced rates.

Amusement Head Makes Long Trip.

San Francisco, Cal.—Morris Meyerfeld Jr., president of the Orpheum Circuit, has returned from a visit to New Orleans and New York and all the cities where this circuit maintains houses. In discussing the theatrical situation at large Mr. Meyerfeld expresses the opinion that moving pictures may be regarded as an adjunct of high class vaudeville. At several of its houses feature films are being shown with splendid success and this policy may be extended over the entire circuit.

Leon Bories Leaves General Film.

San Francisco, Cal.—Leon Bories, who has been connected with the General Film Company since its organization, and whose connection with the film business in San Francisco dates back to the establishment of the first exchange, has resigned his position as manager of this branch and has left for an extended automobile trip through southern California. His successor has not been named, as yet, and his duties have been taken over for the present by district manager H. H. Hicks. As Mr. Hicks will remain here until after the exchange is moved to its new location on Golden Gate avenue in April it will probably be several weeks before the selection of a permanent manager is announced. Before his departure on the vacation trip Mr. Bories was presented with a handsome loving cup by his associates in the local branch, many of whom have also been with the General Film for a long time.

Mutual Makes Changes.

San Francisco, Cal.—T. W. Johns, who has had charge of the Los Angeles branch of the Mutual for some time, has resigned this position and will shortly move to San Francisco to enter the business field. C. Mell Simmonds, who opened the Triangle exchange in San Francisco with such success a few months ago, has been appointed to the post of manager and passed through San Francisco recently on his way to the southern city.

Censors Approve "Damaged Goods."

Watsonville, Cal.—The recent announcement of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit that "Damaged Goods" had been booked for Watsonville, Cal., created quite a stir here and steps were taken by certain interests to prevent it from being shown. It was finally decided to submit the picture to a board of censors, consisting of city officials and leading citizens, and a special showing was made one morning by Mike Zar, who had charge of the house at this time. Almost without an exception those who viewed the film at this private showing declared that it should be shown by all means, this opinion being shared by Mayor Trafton, Secretary Gates of the Y. M. C. A., Rev. E. B. Hayes, Rev. C. L. Thackery, A. N. Judd, F. P. Krough and Dr. G. S. Easterday. Columns of space in the local papers were devoted to a discussion of the subject, but the finding of the censors was allowed to stand and the film was shown without further interference.

"Carmen" Repeated by Request.

San Francisco, Cal.—Manager Sid Grauman of the Empress theater has been compelled to listen to the many requests that "Carmen," with Theda Bara, be repeated at this house and this attraction has been booked for an early date. At its release he attempted to secure it for two weeks, but was unable to do so.

Nat Magner Secures Pavlowa Film.

The remodeling of the old American theater on Market street is progressing rapidly and will be opened early in the spring by Sheehan & Lurie as a high-class moving picture house. Many new features are being incorporated in this house, including the elimination of stairs wherever possible.

Melchoir H. Diepenbrock, who is now operating the Strand at Sacramento, Calif., was a recent visitor here to arrange for feature attractions and to secure the services of a local representative.

Mr. Christopher, of Fresno, Cal., who conducts the Bijou was also a recent visitor here and before leaving the city purchased a Wurlitzer orchestrion.

Morris L. Markowitz, head of the California Film Exchange, has returned from a visit to Los Angeles to attend a directors' meeting. J. B. Bryson, formerly in charge of the Laemmle exchange at Minneapolis, Minn., has been placed in charge of the Los Angeles branch of the California Film Exchange, taking the place of D. S. Markowitz, who has resigned. It was planned at first to send Abe Markowitz, of the San Francisco office, to fill this position but new arrangements have been made.

Sam Harris, of the Hippodrome Circuit, is making a visit to Los Angeles and San Diego.

A. Kay, at one time connected with the local film exchange business, has taken over the Kentucky theater at Nineteenth and Kentucky streets, and has installed much new equipment.

The Atlas Educational Film Company has been very busy of late, having disposed of four Atlas projection machines during the past week, one of these going to the Crockett, Cal. High School.

The Bell theater at Twenty-ninth and Mission streets has been closed and its proprietor, H. J. Skinner, has disappeared.

The High School at Auburn, Cal., is being equipped with a Motiograph projection machine by Edward H. Kemp.

William Webster, manager of the Strand at Woodland, Cal., was a recent visitor here. He has been ill of late and has been recuperating at Bartlett Springs.

Two Theater Transfers

Portland, Oregon, Theatrical Map Gets Big Change—National Sold to Local Men—Will Be Called Strand—Baker Theater Will House Northern Hippodrome Attractions and Feature Films.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, Ore.—Two of the important theaters of this city changed hands March 7. The National, an exclusive photoplay house, passed to the Strand Theater Company, a new corporation, and the Baker theater, Portland's big stock house, was acquired by Levy Brothers, of Spokane and Seattle. While the deals were concluded simultaneously, it has not been disclosed that they were in any way related.

National Becomes Strand.

The Strand Theater Company, which acquired the National, was recently organized by S. Morton Cohen, pioneer in the moving picture filed in Portland, and Gus Metzger, manager of the local Universal film exchange, is said to be interested with Mr. Cohen in the new enterprise. The new company will change the name of their theater to the "Strand" and will make some changes in the interior of the theater. The house was closed for repairs on March 9 to reopen March 19. It will be managed by H. W. Pierong, formerly manager of the Portland Empress, and later superintendent of amusements of the Rose Festival Association.

Vaudeville will be combined with pictures and a five reel feature and four vaudeville acts will constitute a show. Two changes a week will be the rule and popular prices will prevail. The vaudeville acts will be booked through the Western Vaudeville Managers Association of Chicago and Universal service will undoubtedly continue in the house.

The affairs of the National Amusement Company were controlled by a receiver for some time. The sale to the Strand corporation permits the old company to liquidate and it was announced a few days after the consummation of the deal that creditors of the National would be paid in full.

Baker to Become Hippodrome.

The Baker theater, which for several years has housed Portland's popular stock company, will be renamed the "Hippodrome," according to recent announcements in Portland papers, when the stock season closes May 1. Levy Brothers Hippodrome attractions, together with feature pictures will show in the house. This Hippodrame circuit, sometimes called the Northern Hippodrome, has no connection with the Ackerman and Harris Hippodrome circuit which recently leased the building occupied by the Portland Orpheum. While the newspaper announcement stated definitely that the deal had been closed, more recent information disclosed that several details of the transaction were still being considered at the time of this writing.

Features Will Command Good Prices.

Exchange men were highly pleased with the coming of these new enterprises to Portland and stated that their advent to the city would have a noticeable effect on the feature film market.

More Censorship Gospel.

Portland, Ore.—During the month of March members of the city censor were scheduled to speak on censorship in one of Portland's leading churches and a committee from the motion picture interests called on Mayor Albee to ask, among other things, the reason for the apparent spreading of censorship gospel. The Mayor replied that inasmuch as the city already had censorship, the speakers were merely explaining its workings and not spreading its doctrines. When interviewed later he stated that the city desired to do nothing that would disrupt the pleasant feeling now existing between the administration and the film men.

"Mary Page" Contest.

Portland, Ore.—Manager L. B. Christ of the Pickford theater, Portland, has arranged to run a contest in connection with his showing of the Essanay serial and at the conclusion of its run in his theater, Mr. Christ will present a "Mary Page" gown to the most popular young lady entered as a candidate in the contest. Women's clubs and civic organizations have been interested in the venture. Votes will be given with admission tickets.

Vancouver, Wash., Theater Sold.

Vancouver, Wash.—Chris Engleman has sold the Palace theater, Vancouver, Washington, to Kiggins and McGill who will conduct the house under its present policy. This firm operates the U. S. A. and Rex theaters in Vancouver and the Grand at Camas, Wash.

Heard on Film Row.

Bend, Ore.—L. E. Dodson, who leased his theater at Bend, to L. Doner for a short period, has again taken charge of the house.

Portland, Ore.—Pantages Circuit has booked Pathe's "Iron Claw" to follow "The Girl and the Game" which has been showing in the Pantages theaters in this territory.

Clatskanine, Ore.—R. C. Bacon has reopened the Columbia theater at Clatskanine.

Portland, Ore.—A. R. Patton, road man for Mutual out of Spokane, was in Portland territory temporarily, working in Eastern Oregon.

La Grande, Ore.—"The Battle Cry of Peace" did a record breaking business at the Arcade theater and the newspapers gave editorial space to favorable comments on the picture.

Pendleton, Ore.—Dr. N. A. Medernach sold his theater, the Orpheum, to Livermore & Gullich. Dr. Medernach is contemplating locating in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—Sol Baum, the new manager of the Portland Blue Bird office, returned recently from a trip through the eastern part of his territory and reports that he booked his features in every town on the line.

Portland, Ore.—Recent out of town film men visiting on Film Row were F. A. Perin, of the Savoy, Eugene, Oregon, E. M. McGann, of the Grand, Sheridan, Oregon, George Endert, World Film Corporation, Seattle, and E. R. Redlick, Fox Film Corporation, San Francisco.

SALT LAKE SCREEN CLUB.

Organization Started — Will Promote Baseball Team and Bowling League.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—A screen club for Salt Lake and Utah managers, exchange men and others connected with the industry in this teritory, is projected. Meetings have been held and it is likely that the club will be formed within a short time. As a starter, a meeting was held March 9 in the offices of the General Film Company, at which it was decided to promote interest in the project by forming a bowling league and a baseball league from the men in Film Row. Already several theater parties and suppers have been held and a number of exhibitors and exchange men have been regular attendants at the bowling alleys.

T. Y. Henry in Charge of Local General.

T. Y. Henry, formerly of the Denver office of the General Film Company, is now in charge of the office in this city, succeeding Roy Madden, who is on the road in the interest of the "Strange Case of Mary Page."

J. R. Cummock, Assistant at V-L-S-E.

James R. Cummock, for several years identified with the Paramount program in the Progressive Motion Picture Company on the Pacific Coast, is now in Salt Lake as assistant manager of the V-L-S-E office.

Business Notes.

"The Birth of a Nation" is playing a three weeks' engagement at the Salt Lake theater and the attendance has been large. A return engagement of one week will be played in April, during the semi-annual conference of the "Mormon" church, when thousands of out-of-town visitors are in Salt Lake.

Louis Marcus, president and general manager of the Notable Feature Film Co., returned recently from an extended visit on the Pacific Coast.

Denham Palmer, district manager of the World Film, was in Salt Lake last week on a regular tour over his territory. He expressed satisfaction with the success of local Manager Hugh Rennie and his salesmen in placing the World products in this territory.

The large organ at the American theater, which was at the time of its installation the third largest instrument of the sort in the city, has been almost doubled by the addition of another set of pipes on the opposite side of the house.

CHILDREN'S FILM CENSORS.

Spokane to Have Board to Choose Good Films for Juveniles.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Growing out of the inauguration locally of exclusive moving pictures for children by Dr. Howard S. Clemmer of the Clemmer theater about a year ago, is another organization headed by Mrs. J. T. Burcham of Spokane, called the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board. This is along the lines of the Louisville, Ky., also National Board of Censors for Children's Motion Picture Shows, started by Mrs. Frederick Levy. An authorized list of films chosen by it was printed in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in our issue of July 3, 1915, page 52. The purpose of this new Spokane board is likewise to have pictures censored especially for children, and recommend a chosen list for children. It is the aim of the organization to have affiliated branches in cities and towns throughout the country, just as the Louisville board has, under the patronage of Federated Women's Clubs, and to urge producers and exhibitors to make this a special feature of having, at least weekly pictures exclusively for children of tender years, instead of allowing them to see problem plays beyond their years. Mrs. Burcham could get valuable help in this work by addressing Mrs. Levy, in the care of the board, at Louisville, Ky.

BUILDS UP POOR THEATER.

Exhibitor Packritz Brings Order and Success to Empress at Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—C. Packritz, who took over the Empress theater, Spokane, last fall, after it had made several failures, due to mismanagement and some ill-conducted contests resulting in one of the principals suddenly leaving town, has put that place on a paying basis and is now doing a nice business. He experienced some difficulties at first in living down the name of the place, but now reports business good.

He reports that "The Goddess" serial, which closes March 17, has brought good results and that he has signed for "The Strange Case of Mary Page."

Spokane Film Brevities.

B. W. Copeland, manager of the Rex theater, has made some changes in his theater and put in some box seats, which sell at 10 cents each. He also announces that he is using the Metro, the Universal, and the World Film on various days, weekly, and that he is having excellent results from such a change.

Starting March 12, Lee S. Forbes of the Class A will use the World program, having arranged for the full program of first run pictures for his house.

Local Film Hits.

Among the film hits in Spokane theaters for the week of March 5 were Billie Burke in "Peggy," which drew large patronage at the Liberty; Nance O'Neil in "The Witch," at the Casino; Charlotte Walker in "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," at the Clemmer; Lionel Barrymore in "A Yellow Streak" at the Class A, and Charles Chaplin in "His First Vacation" at the Hippodrome.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Will Permit No Crowding.

Edmonton, Alberta.—As a result of the conviction of Manager Hazza of the Empress theater in Edmonton, of the offense of allowing patrons to stand in the lobby of his theater, the police commission passed the following resolution, which was sent to the city council for the information of that body:

"That the Chief Constable be instructed to see that his officers maintain a careful supervision of the crowding said to be prevalent in the entrances and exits of local picture theaters, and to take action forthwith unless this dangerous practice is stopped." The report was filed.

A complaint made to the council at the last meeting by G. H. May, and dealing with the same matter, was recommended filed by the safety and health committee, as the commissioners' resolution covered May's complaint. Reports indicate that for the present, at least, the construction placed upon the law in the recent case is to be enforced.

Variety Reopens.

Victoria, B. C.—The Variety theater, which has been closed recently during extensive alterations to the interior, reopened for business on March 6. Hector Quagliotti, manager of the Colonial in Vancouver, who came to Victoria to supervise the opening, has returned home. Universal's "The White Scar" played the opening engagement, and the Bluebird Photoplays will open at this house on March 27.

Combination in Kamloops.

Kamloops, B. C.—W. A. Wilkinson, manager of the opera house, has secured from his chief competitor, "Daddy" Brown, control of the Empress theater, and will in the future conduct both houses. The opera house will at times house road attractions, showing pictures the balance of the time at 5 and 10 cents. The main picture house hereafter will be the Empress, to which the Wilkinson orchestra is to be transferred. Prices here will be 10 and 15 cents, with V-L-S-E and other high class productions.

Big Feature in Small Town.

Souris, Manitoba.—That a high class feature can be shown to good advantage in a small town was conclusively shown recently by Manager William Harper of the Lyceum in Souris, Manitoba—a town with a population of 800. Mr. Harper booked "The Spoilers" for one night at a flat rental of $75, fixed his admission price at fifty cents, and by a vigorous campaign succeeded in bringing his gross receipts up to $175.

Co-operation Agreement

In Western Canada, Several Exhibitors Start National Film Service, a Co-operative Exchange to Book Features for Themselves at Pro-rata Costs—How It Is to Be Conducted—Theaters Already in the Scheme.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—An interesting and locally novel development in the manner of conducting a film exchange is now being experimented with by W. P. Dewees, manager of the Rex theater in Vancouver, and the leading spirit in the newly-formed National Film Service, handling the V-L-S-E and Triangle programs throughout Western Canada. Mr. Dewees has just returned from Montreal, where he settled the Triangle deal with E. A. Fenton, in charge of the Triangle in Canada, and P. L. Waters, who made the trip up to Montreal from New York.

Mr. Dewees talked interestingly of the policy of the new film service when seen by the Moving Picture World correspondent, and outlined his plans. "Our ideas," said Mr. Dewees, "is not to secure a profit for the National Film Service, nor for the three men who have formed it. We are all exhibitors ourselves, and are forming a circuit covering our territory which will be of benefit to us in a larger way than through the simple exaction of an exhorbitant rental for our pictures, and will give the same advantages to every house using our service.

"Many houses (one of them in each town), are already using the V-L-S-E productions. To those of our established customers who desire it, the Triangle franchise will also be given, and each manager will be quoted a price that equals only his pro rata share of the total rental which is paid for the films. They will not be offered to a competing house on any consideration until the man we are already tied up with, has definitely decided that he does not want them. There will be no bidding of one man against another, and if our associate in any town desires to continue with us there will be no transfer of his franchise to any competing house, even though we might be offered many times the price we were receiving from him. We have, of course, figured out the approximate amount we should receive from each town, and on more than one occasion have been able to give a manager our service at a lower figure than he offered for it, simply because we had figured his town at a lower price. Through our taking each film for an extended period, and using it continuously during that time, a low rental is secured, and every exhibitor on the circuit shares in this advantage.

"Our principal object in the forming of an extensive circuit, and one that will be permanent, is to enable us to be in a position to make a definite and large offer for any production or program which we may desire to book, with at all times a definite and exact knowledge of what we are in a position to pay for it. All advantages which lie in the ability to operate on a large scale are shared equally by all users of the service.

"The circuit as at present constituted includes the Rex and Globe theaters in Vancouver, the Royal Victoria in Victoria, the Province and Bijou in Winnipeg, the Strand in Calgary, the Empress in Edmonton, the Rose in Regina, the Daylight in Saskatoon, Sask., the Savoy in Moose Jaw, Sask., the Empress in Prince Albert, Sask., the Empire in Brandon, Man., the Edison in New Westminster, B. C., and the Empress in Kamloops, B. C."

"I believe," said Mr. Dewees in conclusion, "that this is an ideal arrangement for the exhibitor."

Liberals Win Again.

Vancouver, B. C.—British Columbia exhibitors are one step nearer a change of government in the province, and consequently in the censor's office, through the defeat of Hon. A. C. Flumerfelt, the Bowser candidate in the Victoria by-election. This closely followed the victory of M. A. Macdonald in Vancouver, and seems to assure a Liberal landslide in the general election. Premier Bowser would probably be inclined to promise almost anything asked for by the exhibitors at the present time, but as his defeat seems assured it is probable that nothing will be attempted for the present. On the evening preceding the election a great political meeting was held in the Royal Victoria theater, at which Premier Bowser, the Minister of Lands and the Minister of Finance made speeches.

Ideas and Business Notes.

Winnipeg, Man.—C. W. Rowley, Manitoba provincial commissioner of the Boy Scout movement, lent his enthusiastic aid in boosting the pictures of French Boy Scouts, shown during a recent week at the Orpheum here. Partly as a result of his efforts Manager E. J. Sullivan of the Orpheum, put on a special show on Saturday morning, running these films and several others.

Vancouver, B. C.—James W. Pilling, manager of the Orpheum, reports that the best drawing card he has had in his house for many months was the Mutual Masterpicture, "The Girl from His Town," with Margarita Fischer. This production was shown for three days, and Mr. Pilling frequently had a crowd waiting in the lobby. This means something at the Orpheum, as it is by far the largest house in town, seating 1,700.

Winnipeg, Man.—George Law, manager for the General Film Company in this city, reports a considerable increase in business for the General in recent weeks and states that many exhibitors are favoring a return to shorter subjects. The Signal Film Corporation's serial, "The Girl and the Game," has opened at the Majestic and will also be shown at the Starland.

Calgary, Alta.—John Hazza, manager of the Empress theater in Edmonton, was a recent visitor to Calgary, where a meeting had been arranged with W. P. Dewees of Vancouver. Mr. Hazza reports business as being uniformly good in Edmonton.

"The Battle Cry of Peace," the Vitagraph company's great preparedness picture, opened at the Rex in Vancouver on March 7, and continued throughout the week. Very few cuts were made in this film, and the customary tendency to delete from American pictures any evidence of an "unnecessary display of U. S. flags," or even to reject a picture on this account, was noticeably absent. The run started off to good business, and applause was frequent. Pursuant to a decision reached just before the opening of the engagement, night prices are 50 cents and $1.00, with matinees at 25 and 50 cents.

Broy and Whitehead, handling "The Spoilers" in Canada, have recently opened offices in the Phoenix block in Winnipeg, and are booking their feature throughout this section of the country, having just played return engagements at Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon and other towns, as well as two weeks in Winnipeg at the National, Osborne and Colonial theaters. They are now booking the picture in houses in towns ranging from 600 to 3,000 population. A new print has just been brought into Canada, and Broy and Whitehead will soon leave for the East, to show in Montreal, Toronto, and other eastern points.

During the week of March 26 two new David Horsley productions of uncommon merit are available to exhibitors.

On March 27 will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, a five part feature entitled "The Love Liar." It is a pretentious and skillfully made production of an absorbing dramatic play of the finer type, beautifully photographed, and convincingly enacted by a popular cast of players headed by Crane Wilbur.

On March 31 will be released a one reel Cub Comedy, "Jerry and the Smugglers," a rollicking farce of good, clean fun presented by George Ovey and an all-comedy cast.

Productions such as these will please in any theatre and reflect their value in the box office. Ask your nearest of the Mutual exchanges in the United States and Canada for bookings.

Delancey Rensselear receives a letter from his daughter, Violet, who has been in a convent in Europe for some time, advising him that she will soon be in America, and that she will be accompanied by a wealthy widow, Mrs. Grace Elliott. At the same time Rensselear's lawyer calls and informs him that all the stocks he has been investing in are absolutely worthless, and that Rensselear is financially ruined.

Rensselear decides to do what he can for his only daughter, and goes to Mrs. Roache Dunning, a social leader. He tells her his story, and she agrees to engage Violet as her social secretary, and to endeavor to arrange for a wealthy marriage for the girl.

Meanwhile, on the homeward journey, Violet meets Blake Penderley, and falls in love with him, finally becoming engaged to him. Mrs. Elliott is jealous of Violet, and finally persuades Blake to marry her.

Violet arrives home, and her father takes her to Mrs. Dunning, where she assumes her work as social secretary. As the days go by, Page Carter arrives in town in search of his long-lost sister. He is told of Violet, and seeks her acquaintance. He follows her to a bank and there causes her to believe that she is a thief for picking up a paper containing a few bills which he himself had placed there. Carter also poses as a thief.

Finally Carter attends a dinner given in his honor at Mrs. Dunning's home where Violet is to meet a wealthy man. She is surprised to discover that the man of wealth is none other than Carter, who has posed as a crook. In the course of conversation, Carter also discovers the whereabouts of his sister Octavia, whom Violet had previously met at her dressmaker's. Carter asks Violet to marry him, much to the satisfaction of all parties concerned.

As he lingers at the side of the lifeless clay, he finds a book which he opens and reads. This book is the diary of Rita Crossley, his wife, and as he turns the pages over one by one, days that have long gone by come back to him. He remembers the happiness of their early days of marriage, and discovers that his wife's dream of life was for home and for family. The diary impresses a lesson upon him, and he resolves thereafter to lead a more sedate life.

KALEM.

FOR SWEET CHARITY (March 21).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); I. Sellem (Porter Strong); Ruby Lyps (Norma Nichols); The Cook (A. Edmondson).

I. Sellem declares that in every fourth box of soap he sells there is a dollar bill. He doesn't intend to give one away, but Ham and Bud by a clever ruse succeed in getting a greenback from him. Their attention is drawn to a charity bazaar, and they enter.

It's all off when Ruby Lyps is disclosed with a sign over her head reading "Kisses $1.00 Each. For Sweet Charity." Having paid their way in, Ham and Bud only have eighty cents between them. Their efforts to make the eighty cents do the work of a dollar wind the bazaar up in a whirlwind finish, but there's still more fun in store for Ham and Bud when they get jobs in the kitchen of a fashionable restaurant.

AT BACHELOR'S ROOST (March 22).—The cast: Ethel (Ethel Teare); Her Father (Gus Leonard); Jack (Jack MacDermott); His Uncle (Charles Mulgro); The Lovers (Al Fretas, J. North and R. Zell). Author, Howard Irving Young. Producer, William Beaudine.

Ethel has too many lovers to suit her father, so he speedily accepts the invitation of his old friend to visit Bachelor's Roost, "where there isn't a man under sixty." Ethel finds Bachelor's Roost the limit of depression. Then Jack, home from college to visit his uncle, happens along. His uncle, fearful of the wrath of Ethel's father, tries to persuade Jack to leave, but that young man will not be moved, for he has seen the dashing Ethel. Wigs and make-up in his suitcase from his college amateur play offer a solution and when Jack next appears he is "not under sixty." The mix-ups that follow may well be imagined, but suffice it to say that Ethel finds a lover even at Bachelor's Roost.

WHEN THINGS GO WRONG (March 24).—The cast: Sis (Sis Hopkins); Jack Newlywed (Arthuur Albertson); Nell Newlywed (Mary Kennedy); Mother Sharp (Olive West); Father Grumpy (Richard Purdon); Indifferent Ignatz (Henry Murdock); Bill, the Janitor (Frank Minzey). Things surely do go wrong in the home of the Newlyweds, where Sis is the first and only servant. First mother-in-law and father-in-law, who have never met, have a run-in at the railroad station that grows worse when they arrive home with Sis as escort. Then Sis has to mess one thing up after another until everybody is calling her down. Sis decides to end it all then and there in a tornado of excitement that ends with Sis' blunders patching everything up and bringing the dove of peace to the home of the Newlyweds.

THE DETECTIVE'S PERIL (No. 72 of "The Hazards of Helen" March 25).—The cast: Operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); The Paymaster (Clarence Burton); The Detective (Robyn Adair). Produced by James Davis.

Hanging from a rope over the track, the detective seems certain to plunge to death when the oncoming train splits the knot of the rope which has been tied to a rail and slung over the bridge girder. Helen's presence of mind and nerve in swinging out over the waters of the river on the other end of the rope and thus balancing the detective until the train has passed prevents the terrible catastrophe. Later, when pursuing the culprits, Helen once more takes her life in her hands by throwing a lasso from the hand car on which they are pursuing the freight over the brakebeam; and then crawling hand over hand to the top of the car.

VITAGRAPH.

THREE JOHNS (March 27).—The cast: John Frown (George Kunkel); John Briggs (George Holt); The Sheriff (George Stanley); Looney John (Otto Beninger); The Sheriff's Wife (Anne Schaefer); Superintendent of Asylum (Jack Mower). Author, Edwin Ray Coffin. Produced by Dave Smith.

John Brown and John Briggs, strangers to each other, both decide to go on a hunting trip to the same place. Looney John, a sometimes violent lunatic, is at large in the woods and there is a large reward offered for his apprehension. Both Brown and Briggs discover evidence of Looney's presence, and having just met and exchanged cards as fellow hunters, each imagines the other is the John wanted by the asylum people. Both despatch a note by an innocent-looking countryman, who is in reality none other than Looney, himself, to the sheriff, claiming capture of the insane one.

A laughable mixup follows, during which the sheriff arrests both Briggs and Brown and brings them to his home. While holding the fuming men there until the superintendent of the asylum arrives, the sheriff's wife, a quiet, unassuming woman, puts one over on them all when she discovers Looney making away with some of her choicest pies. At the point of a big butcher knife, she marches the frightened lunatic into the house just as the superintendent arrives. The discomforted sheriff sees the superintendent count over the reward money to his wife, while the Looney one is led away and the two other Johns have a good laugh over the incident.

FREDDY FOILS THE FLOATERS (March 31).—The cast: Freddie (William Dangman); Richard Cole (Frank Currier); Jim Cahill (George O'Donnell); Freddie's Employer (Wm. Lytell, Jr.); Leader of Floater (Joe Wallace). Author, James A. Stiles. Produced by Frank Currier.

Freddie, arriving in a country village, secures work in the local newspaper office. The owner of the paper is backing a candidate for Assemblyman against the town Political Boss. Freddie is abusued by the Boss for some trivial incident and becomes a personal as well as business enemy. Election time draws near and Freddie's employer, working for his candidate, draws voting strength from the political boss, who finally decides to employ repeaters at the polls.

The night before election, Freddie overhears on the party wire, the Boss giving orders to secrete the gang of repeaters (or "floaters" as they are called) in a certain barn. Freddie arouses his employer, and they vainly try to get the gang arrested, but Freddie succeeds by a ruse, in getting the floaters and their leader locked in the barn. He keeps them there all day, until, when the hour is getting late and the votes are going against him, the Boss sends some huskies to the barn for the floaters. They rescue the gang but the floaters arrive too late to save the day for their Boss, and the newspaper's candidate is elected. Freddie is rewarded by his employer and satisfaction reigns supreme.

A bag of gold is missing from Count Dalberg's safe. He accuses Morel, his steward. Morel protests his innocence, but rather than suffer arrest, flees with his little daughter, Madelaine.

Then, years later, Count Dalberg's gardeners dig up a withered rose bush and the missing bag of gold is entangled in its roots. It had been thrown there by the children—Julian, the Count's son; Marguerite, his daughter, and Madelaine Morel. Their bean bag had broken and they had taken one of the bags of gold as a substitute.

The old Count dies of remorse and Julian sets out to find Morel and Madelaine. He finds Madelaine living with Merope, an actress. He takes her home, falls in love with her and is about to make her his wife when Von Armin, a young nobleman who is engaged to Julian's sister Marguerite, comes and recognizes Madelaine as his former mistress. This is on the day Von Armin is to wed Marguerite.

The story ends at the church, where Merope denounces Von Armin as the author of Madelaine's ruin. Marguerite scorns Von Armin and, tearing off her bridal veil, leaves with her mother and Madelaine, while the broken-hearted Julian remains to pray with the gentle priest, the Abbe Valmont.

THEIR VACATION (March 30).—With bursting pocket books, Plump and Runt put up at the swellest hotel to spend the first stage of their vacation. For safety's sake Runt entrusts Plump with his wallet, and all goes well until Plump becomes enchanted with a pair of bright eyes belonging to a charmer who inveigles the big fellow into an invitation for an expensive dinner, during the course of which the pocket book mysteriously disappears.

Runt, in the interim, has been making the most of his opportunities with the landlord's daughter, and he presents her with a large box of candy. On asking Plump for the "necessary," Plump discovers his loss. The irate landlord puts them both to work cleaning shoes to pay for their board. Meantime, the fair crook and her partner, fearing a hue and cry after the lost cash, hide the wallet in a pair of shoes. Plump, gathering up the guests' footwear, takes away the identical pair and gives them to his little pal in distress, to clean. Hardly believing his eyes, Runt recovers their lost property and with howls of joy they awaken the landlord, pay their bills and are just in time to capture the evildoers as they attempt to escape.

ANVILS AND ACTORS (March 31)—Ethel, the daughter of the village blacksmith, is greatly admired by both Pokes and Jabbs. Pokes is the apprentice at the blacksmith shop and has the inside track of his rival, Jabbs, who has ambitions to become an actor. Ethel ridicules Jabbs' histrionic efforts and gives her heart to the honest son of toil, Pokes. After Pokes has presented an engagement ring to Ethel, poor Jabbs is heartbroken and flies away to the distant city to follow the career he loves.

Ethel's joy is short-lived, for the black-hearted villain Pokes, securing the return of the ring by a crafty excuse, places it on the finger of a city girl who chances to visit the village. Crushed in spirit at her sweetheart's perfidy, Ethel leaves her rural home to seek fame and fortunue in the city. Years afterwards, Pokes deciding to enjoy a well-earned vacation, visits the city and finds his way inside a theater to witness the performance of a repertoire company. When the theater curtain rises, to the horror of Pokes, there on the stage he sees his erstwhile sweetheart Ethel and his former rival Jabbs enacting a melodramatic play that portrays the exact conduct of Pokes toward Ethel in former days.

Forgetful of the fact that the play is based upon his own acts, and thinking that Jabbs is really treating Ethel shamefully, Pokes climbs on the stage and, opening fire with his revolver, chases the performers into the wings. Seeking refuge in a corner, Jabbs and Ethel spy a fire hose hanging near-by and opening the nozzle full force they turn the water upon the oncoming Pokes. The current is so strong that Pokes is swept completely out of the theater and out into the alley, while Jabbs and Ethel look on convulsed with laughter.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE HOME BREAKERS (Three Parts—March 31).—The cast: Gerald Sanderson (Fred Whitman); Edna (Margaret Landis); Wilson Crane (Charles Dudley); Mrs. Renssaler (Madeline Pardee); Ransom (Daniel Gilfether). Scenario by Anthony W. Coldewey. Directed by Bertram Bracken.

Gerald Sanderson and his wife, Edna, start life in a small way in a small cottage on the outskirts of a large city. While Gerald is away at work Edna learns of an old man, a neighbor, who lives with his motherless daughter and who is in dire want. Edna responds to their needs and while she is unable to save the life of the child she succeeds in bringing some comfort to her before she dies. Thereby she wins the everlasting gratitude of the child's father who attaches himself to the Sanderson household as a sort of general servant.

Some time later Gerald inherits a large fortune through the death of a distant relative. He and Edna move into the city and take with them the old man who becomes a sort of butler in their new establishment. Gerald becomes active upon the street as a broker and meets with great success.

Wilson Crane, a free lance broker, learns through club gossip of the Sanderson's rapid rise to fortune and determines, if possible, to get some hold upon him. Accordingly, he and a Mrs. Renssaler, an adventuress, arrange for an introduction to Gerald in the hope that she may be able to fascinate him. Gerald, however, while courteous and cordial towards her, repulses her advances. Crane then determines to work through Edna as well and sow suspicion in her mind, believing that once there is trouble between them it would enable Mrs. Renssaler to work to better advantage. He meets Edna and gradually ingratiates himself into her confidence.

At this time Gerald is in the midst of a big stock campaign which occupies most of his evenings as well as his days. Crane takes advantage of this condition to intimate to Edna that all is not well and finally comes out openly and offers to prove Gerald's faithlessness to her. By previous arrangement Mrs. Renssaler calls at Gerald's office while Crane places Edna in a position where she can see but not overhear what takes place in her husband's office. Edna sees what she takes to be proof of Gerald's alienation and returns home, heartbroken, with Crane. Then follows cunning and intrigue by the "Home-Breakers," and as the young couple is about to meet despair in a ruined home, an aged servant, whom the young people had befriended in his own tragic sorrow, comes to the rescue and the "Home-Breakers" are defeated in their plot, and the young couple united.

ESSANAY.

I WILL REPAY (Three Parts—March 25).—The cast: Virginia Harding (Marguerite Clayton); John Shandon, an admirer (Edward Arnold); Ralph Shandon, his nephew (John Junior).

John Shandon, a man of thirty-eight is in love with Virginia Harding, a girl of about twenty. Virginia values his friendship greatly, but realizes she can never marry him. Ralph Shandon, John's nephew, returns from an expedition in the North. John introduces him to Virginia and it is a case of love at first sight. When Ralph tells his uncle that Virginia has promised to marry him, John for the first time in his life is tempted. He deliberates on the thought of how he can get rid of Ralph. He is in possession of a letter written by Ralph's mother before her death. This letter is written on three pages, and by omitting the second, it reads to the effect that Ralph's mother died of hereditary insanity and that Ralph is subject to this affliction. John shows this letter to Ralph. Ralph, not wishing to marry Virginia with this taint in his blood, returns to the North after writing her a note explaining his act. Virginia is heartbroken. Some time later John, repentant, tells her of his perfidy. She threatens to kill him. Virginia then goes in search of Ralph. She finds him, but not before he has really gone insane as a result of brooding.

THE DIXIE WINNER (Two Parts—March 28).—The cast: Joyce Fairfax (Joyce Fair); Her mother (Marian Murray); Judge Boyce, her grandfather (Ernest Maupain); Silas Morgan, banker (Patrick Calhoun).

The interests of little Joyce Fairfax are centered in horses and dogs. She is particularly infatuated with "Satan," a thoroughbred colt, belonging to her mother, a young widow. The mother is estranged from her father, Judge Boyce, because she married into a family with which the Boyces had carried on a feud for years. When reverses come she is compelled to sell the effects of the plantation and among them "Satan," the beloved colt. The alternative is to marry Silas Morgan, but Joyce insists that she couldn't stand the banker for a papa. The judge softens and secretly buys the colt. Then reverses come to him and the thoroughbred is his only hope. He enters "Satan" in the Dixie stakes and Morgan, who holds his notes and also wanted the horse, tries trickery to prevent the colt from running. The little negro stable boy, who is the only one who can do anything with the colt except Joyce, is kidnapped. Morgan is content. But he could not foresee that there may have been one other who could ride "Satan." The mysterious rider comes to the barrier, and is away with the field before Judge Boyce, the owner, can recover from his astonishment. He wins and as he flashes under the wire Mrs. Fairfax nearly collapses. She hastens to the paddock to find her little girl very muddy and soiled in her jockey colors. The Judge, hastening back to congratulate the "greatest rider in the world," finds daughter and granddaughter and everything turns out admirably.

He takes a position in his father's steel mills and promptly wins the enmity of Dr. Forsyth, the company physician and confidante of the elder Lindon. Forsythe sees his chance of occupying the manager's chair vanishing with the entrance into the business of the college boy.

One night he finds the young man greatly intoxicated and takes him to his home. Here he injects morphine and Lindon is in good shape to put through a large sale. As with drink he readily becomes a slave to the new habit. When he finds himself slipping, helped by the pleas of Vera, his sister, and of Catherine Whiting, his sweetheart, he pulls himself together and goes to a sanitarium. Returning cured, Forsyth has him beaten and carried senseless into a room where the old injections are renewed. He sinks rapidly now until disowned by his father. He disappears and becomes a peddler of "coke" in the underworld until arrested. Then he calls upon his old friend, Buck Whiting, and the latter has him released and sends him to the woods to make the fight again. He does, and shows his worthiness to marry the girl and take the management of the mills.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER (March 25).—The cast: Wilkens (Billie Reeves); Mrs. Wilkens (Mimie Humphrey); Tom—the son (Francis Joyner); Jenny—the daughter (Alice Mann); Mary—the cook (Mary Roland); Uncle George (Chas. Griffith). Written by Mark Swan. Produced by Earl Metcalfe.

Wilkens, his wife, son and daughter are a very quarrelsome family. They have a "scrappy" cook, and the family rows and jars worry their good, kind Uncle George a great deal. He is wondering how he can reform his relatives when he happens to pass a store where there is a lovely, old-fashioned, framed motto in the window. It occurs to him this would be just the thing to bring peace to his distracted relations, so he buys it and sends it to them with a request that they hang it in a suitable place.

As Uncle George has money they don't dare refuse, but nobody wants it hung where they can see it. They won't have it in the dining room, the cook won't stand for it in the kitchen and they finally settle on a dark corner in the parlor which is usually kept closed. So Tom gets the ladder and Jimmy gets the hammer and mother gets some nails and the cook gets the wire and they start to put up the motto.

There is trouble from the start. Father nearly falls off the ladder and has all kinds of trouble. The ladder falls from under him and to save his life he has to cling to the moulding. He smashes his finger with the hammer and knocks down several square yards of plaster. Finally he falls off the ladder, bringing the rest of the ceiling down with him. This precipitates another family fracas which is interrupted by the arrival of Uncle George, who is so angry at the treatment given his motto, he slams it down over Wilkens' head and departs in great dudgeon.

OTTO THE SOLDIER (March 27).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); His wife (Florence Williams); His daughter (Alice Mann); Milanda (Emily Lowry). Written by Burk Symon. Directed by Edwin McKim.

Zimmerman is a German tailor. Two important men of the city visit Zim and induce him to sign as a volunteer, spurring him on by ordering fancy vests, full dress suits, etc. Zim, in the wild excitement of having received such a big order, signs the official papers without realizing what he is doing. It is only when Zim is home with his family that he realizes the terrible thing he has done. He shows his worry by refusing to eat his evening meal, and to inquiries as to what is wrong he answers, "Nothing, don't bother me." His family is not satisfied with such an answer. It is only after Mrs. Zim administers a strong dose of castor oil that poor Zim's flood gates give way.

When his family appeal again he bursts into tears and exclaims, "I'm a valentine!" Mrs. Zim goes into hysteria. The children summon the neighbors, who commiserate with poor Zim. Zim disconsolately goes to bed. In the middle of the night Mrs. Zim gets an idea. She hits upon the idea of rousing Dr. Platz and bribing him to give Zim a poor bill of health. They rustle Platz out of his tight slumber and put in their order.

In the meantime Zim gets an early summons to appear for drill that evening. Zim tearfully goes to work. He regards each customer with suspicion, assuming a tubercular whisper for ordinary speech and replacing his natural walk with a limp.

But his persecutors have not been backward. They have sent over their husky night watchman disguised as a doctor who puts Zim through a rigid examination. There is nothing for Zim to do but to go to war. Mrs. Zim has baked all sorts of cakes for Zim to take with him. His friends bring offerings of sausage and limberger, which they stuff into Zim's uniform. His friends, the persecutors, have sent him up a four dollar horse and an old gun. Zim departs amid wailing farewells.

Zim accompanied by an improvised army recruited at twenty-five cents a head marches gallantly through the streets. Finally he arrives at the assembly hall. Instead of a call to arms he finds himself embroiled in a fashion show and while Mrs. Zim is weeping, Zim's fear of the horrors of war gives way to pleasure. Mrs. Zim is appraised of her husband's martial training and assumes the war path herself with a broom and puts the fashion show to rout and gives her husband a real battle which makes him seek the trenches.

THE VOICE IN THE NIGHT (Three Parts—March 30).—The cast: Richard Powell (Arthur Matthews); Joseph Leach (Francis Joyner); Mr. Wayne (Leslie Austen); Sergeant Lewis (James Cassady); Governor Spauling (Hollins Anthrim); Helen Spauling (Helen Greene). Directed by Clay M. Greene.

Richard Powell, a newspaper reporter, is taken to task by his editor for inattention to his duties in regard to the furnishing of interesting "copy," and told that unless he can find better "stories" he will have to seek another position. On his way home from the office, while racking his brains as to the best way of securing a "scoop," he encounters a lone woman, whose appearance and dress denote that she is not of the kind usually out on the streets at night, and turning on his heels he follows her at a safe distace. Soon he sees an automobile draw up to a curb and depart, leaving a man standing there as though about to keep an appointment. Then from the bushes a second man appears, masked and muffled. An encounter ensues, in which a pistol held in the hand of the first stranger is discharged, and he falls to the ground. Hurrying to the spot, he is confronted by the masked man, who in a peculiar and strangely musical voice, commands him to proceed no further in the affair, as the man on the ground was justly killed.

Immediately the speaker disappeared and the reporter followed, to see him conceal the pistol and mask in some vines overhanging a wall, and then disappear. Returning to the dead man he found a policeman standing over him, who called him by name, and inquired what he knew of the affair. In his duty to his editor he forgot what he owed to a law abiding community, kept his counsel, said nothing and the dead man was taken away in the automobile which had brought him to the spot.

Powell told his story to his best friend, Sergeant Lewis of the police, was rebuked for his treatment of the affair, and a bet of $10 was made, that he would find the mysterious man with the musical voice in ten days. On the ninth day he again met the mysterious woman in the case, followed her to a church, entered close upon her heels, and in the eloquent clergyman he found the same voice that had fascinated him on the night of the murder.

After service, he confronted the clergyman in his study, told him why he had come and with remarkable coolness and resignation, the now unmasked man told his story. It was that of a tender girl, his only sister, enticed from her home by the unprincipled scoundrel, only to be cruelly insulted and deserted, of a broken hearted woman, who left to fight her battle of life alone, became secretary to the Governor of State, and later his wife, of a happy wife and mother, found out and threatened by the scoundrel, who had deserted her, who hurried to her brother for counsel and advice. That brother advised her to keep the appointment insisted upon, got to the spot before her, and then occurred the tragedy of which Powell had been the witness. After the tragic recital the two men stood eyeing each other.

The clergyman spoke: "Well, he said, you know everything now. What are you going to do?"

As the clergyman looked deep into the eyes of his questioner he could see nothing but sympathy in them as the reply came, "Nothing!" Powell then hurried away from the church and sought his friend Lewis.

"Time's nearly up," said the Sergeant as he entered the room. "Did you make the scoop?" Powell opened the table drawer where he had left the money staked on the bet, took out the BILLIE'S DOUBLE (April 1).—The cast: Billie Riddle and William Biddle (Billie Reeves); Tom Dart (Francis Joyner); Mrs. Riddle (Margaret Moore); Mrs. Biddle (Mrs. Dunmire); Mr. Brown (Colton White); Policeman (Charles Griffiths). Written by Clay M. Greene. Produced by Earl Metcalf.

Billie Riddle, a man of no occupation, is living at a hotel. One morning there arrives at the hotel William Biddle and his wife who proceed to the desk and apply for rooms. Biddle is in face and feature the exact counterpart of Riddle. As he enters the room to which he has been assigned, he is seen by the father-in-law of Riddle, who immediately reports the incident to his daughter. She goes to the room, where Biddle assures her that he has never seen her before. She attempts to drag him from the apartment and is herself ejected.

Thinking that this behavior is only the result of a return to drink, she decides to take measures for locking him up, while her real husband is amusing himself as usual in the cafe.

Biddle and his wife indignantly go to the hotel office and report the intrusion of some crazy woman into his apartment. Mrs. Riddle and her father appear. Biddle insists that he is not her husband. The clerk is sure that he is, so a policeman is called and he is taken to the Riddle rooms a prisoner.

Riddle himself returns from the cafe and hurries upstairs, is captured by Mrs. Biddle, who concludes that either he is drunk or she is crazy.

Each prisoner escapes from the wife of the other. There is an exciting chase through the corridors of the hotel, and it is not until both families assemble in the office of the hotel that the mystery of the remarkable resemblance is explained.

RED FEATHER.

DRUGGED WATERS (Five Parts—March 20).—The cast: Clarence Webb (E. P. Evers); Dr. Perkins (George Berrell); Dr. J. Sherwood (Wm. Dowlan); Gladys Saunders (Gloria Fonda); Cornelia Wrigley (Lule Warrenton); Dr. Jennings (H. F. Crane); Selma (Mary Ruby); Weary (William Quinn). Scenario by Leonora Ainsworth. Produced by William Dowlan.

Clarence Webb, manager of the High Bluff Mineral Springs, has long doped the spring with lithia, sulphur, etc., in order to attract wealthy patients who imagine they have ailments. The county health officer is aware of the fact, but as the county is benefited by the larger number of hotel guests, he holds his tongue. He has also another reason for keeping quiet, as he is attracted by Cornelia Wrigley, the aunt of Glady's Saunders, who owns the spring. Cornelia is also aware of the drugging of the spring, but she considers the end justifies the means, as the business provides a nice income for her niece, Gladys, who would have nothing without it. She jollies Dr. Perkins to keep him silent, but she prefers old "Doc" Jenkins, the clerk of the hotel, who also admires Aunt Cornelia.

Gladys has lately returned from college and knows nothing of the methods used to obtain business. She knows her father's wishes were for her to marry Clarence, but she has given the matter no thought, as she is sorrowful over her father's death.

A retired capitalist, Mr. Harron, and his daughter, Selma, who is in love with her father's physician, Dr. Sherwood, come to the spring hotel and an attachment springs up between Gladys and Dr. Sherwood, much to the chagrin and jealousy of Selma and Clarence.

Clarence at once urges Gladys to marry him, but she refuses. He then tells her that she owes everything to him, that the springs are not naturally medicated and that he is the only one who can carry on the business successfully. She is horrified at the deception and still refuses him. He afterwards tells Aunt Cornelia he will tell all the guests she is defrauding the public. Terrified, she tries to persuade Gladys to listen to him. Clarence is then discovered putting ingredients in the water by Dr. Sherwood, who accuses him of defrauding the public. Clarence tells him that Gladys would lose all her property if it wasn't for the deception. Dr. Sherwood disagrees and tells him that the only real cure is diet, exercise and pure spring water—that he could effect cures, without the deception. Gladys, who has entered unobserved, promises to back him up if he will try his plan. Clarence in revenge tells the guests of the deception and they all prepare to leave. Dr. Sherwood, determined to keep them there and give his plan a trial, knows the only way to do so is to quarantine them. He has Clarence, who is about to leave town, locked in an old ice-house and tells the guests Clarence has smallpox and that they are quarantined. He stations guards outside the doors and windows and no one is allowed to leave the house.

Many laughable difficulties with his eccentric patients present themselves to Dr. Sherwood, but the final catastrophe occurs when Selma, who is jealous of Dr. Sherwood, learns that Clarence hasn't the small-pox. She bribes one of the guards to send for the health officer and constable and they release Clarence, who at once tells the guests of the false quarantine. The guests have bcome much beneutted by Dr. Sherwood's treatment, and when he asks them if they will stand by him instead of taking sides with the man who would allow them to remain invalids for life, they all rally to support Dr. Sherwood. As the Doctor could prove that Clarence defrauded the public for years, no one is arrested but poor Weary, the tramp, who, without clothes and food, has been locked in the house and has been dodging everyone until finally caught. He tells the constable disgustedly, "You couldn't find anyone else to arrest so you arrested me."

The path of true love appears smooth to Gladys and Dr. Sherwood as the business seems an assured success.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE

GRAFT (Episode No. 16—"The Pirates of Finance"—Two Parts—March 27).—The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanton); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Dunn (E. P. Evers); Dorothy Maxwell (Jane Novak); Jack Stevens (Jack Abbott); Maid (Yona Landowska).

Stanford Stone, the last of the Graft Trust, and head of the Mighty Money Trust, is preparing to create a panic in the money market to discredit the activities of Harding against organized big interests, and at the same time to crush Harding and anyone who may be in sympathy with him. Harding also is gathering his forces for a last great effort. Being a resident and a voter, he is entitled to hold office. The philanthropists, whom he had interested in the milk battle, are also interested in the Reform Political Party. They induce Harding to accept the nomination of their party for Mayor of New York.

Dorothy Maxwell is seated before the open fire, looking at a magazine cartoon of the money monster crushing the people. Suddenly the figures in the cartoon become animated. A crowd of men are toiling in the sand, dressed in garments worn by the slaves of the period when the great pyramid was built. Stone, as King of that period, stands over the workers with a large club—the money power club—and when one of the workers finds a precious food stone and attempts to quit the struggle and enjoy it in the shade, Stone goes to him, knocks him down with his club and takes the stone from him, tossing it on a great pile of stones that he has collected in that way.

A stranger halts near the workers. Dorothy recognizes him as Harding. The stranger asks the workers why they submit to the brutality of their master. They reply that they fear the club. The stranger tells them that they have a more powerful weapon at their very feet, and points to a sword lying there. This sword is the law. But the slaves are too fearful or too stupid to use it, so the stranger raises the heavy sword and starts toward the King. The latter comes forth to battle with a confident smile. The stranger is both courageous and strong, yet he finds it difficult to reach his adversary with the sword, while the club, in the skillful hands of the King, knocks him to the earth again and again. He retires to the workers all but beaten and examines the sword that has proved so ineffective. He gives a shout of joy as he discovers the cause. A long chain attached to the handle of the sword is in the hands of the King and when a blow is aimed at him, he has but to pull on the chain and the blade of the sword is turned upwards. The stranger calls on the workers to help him detach the chain from the sword. They fall to it with a will and soon have it free. The stranger then strides forward and this time has no trouble in dispatching the cruel King. The workers are freed and allowed to go their own way toward happiness. Dorothy wakes from her dream.

Stone and the big bankers dominating the Clearing House Committee, which in turn exercises arbitrary power over the finances of the country, start a panic and destroy a number of solvent banks. He also bitterly opposes the election of Harding. In spite of all, Harding is carried into office on a landslide of reform. Stone's power is broken and he prepares to flee. He visits the office of the Graft Trust and, sitting alone staring into the future, seems to see the ghosts of former members seated about the long table—their bony fingers pointed toward him. He rises in terror and quits the place, fearing he is losing his mind. All his preparations for fleeing the country are made and now his thoughts turn toward Dorothy Maxwell. Throughout the bitter struggle against right, his feelings for her have undergone many changes. He has loved, hated and feared her—now his chief feeling is desire and he determines to kidnap her and take her with him.

He instructs Dunn and two other men to kidnap Dorothy and place her in a closed auto that will be waiting outside the Maxwell home. The chauffeur will then drive to the dock when the tramp steamer, Arrow, bound for Africa, is ready to sail. Stone intends to take Dorothy into exile with him. Dorothy has saved Harding's life on two occasions during the election and he calls to thank her in person. He arrives in time to prevent Dunn and two other men from carrying out Stone's plan. From the frightened Dunn, Harding wrings a full confession. He determines to lose no time in rounding up the master crook. With Dorothy and Stevens, he gets into the auto found at the door and orders the chauffeur to drive to the dock. There they await the coming of Stone, ready to arrest him when he puts in an appearance to secure Dorothy. Two hours pass. The Arrow sails and Stone does not arrive. Harding, Dorothy and Stevens leave the auto, convinced that Stone has escaped. They repair to a nearby restaurant for a bite after their long wait. After they have gone, the chauffeur who drove them, gets out of the auto, removes his goggles and then slips quietly away. The chauffeur was Stone.

THE JANITOR'S BUSY DAY (March 27).—The cast: Jerry (Lee Moran); The Actor (Neal Burns); The Landlady (Stella Adams); Hammand Sisters (Betty Compson, Ethel Lynn); Bride (Billie Rhodes); Groom (Ray Gallagher); Father (Harry Rattenbury). Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

Jerry is a janitor at a popular boarding house. The landlady looks at the world with a distrustful eye. Jerry, having found her soft side, is assured of a job for life. One of the boarders is an actor who has long been out of work and he has been informed that he must either pay up or get out. The finances of the Hammand sisters are very low, too. While they have a good act, they are unable to secure engagements because they are brunettes. The popular demand is for blondes.

Billie and Ray have eloped and flee to avoid the rage of her angry father. They decide that the safest place to hide in would be a boarding house, and secure quarters in the place where Jerry is janitor. Her father secures the services of a famous detective and the search for the missing daughter is begun.

The Hammand sisters have been told so often that they will not suit because they are brunettes that they decide to be manufactured blondes. Jerry, passing their door, hears the gruesome remark made by one of them stating that "she will get the stuff from the drug store and they will dye together." Jerry thinks he is on the trail of a tragedy, and when one of the sisters leaves for the drug store he follows her. The actor, meanwhile, has received notice of an engagement and having only one pair of trousers sends them out to be pressed. Ray and his wife think they are safe from pursuit until suddenly the girl looks out the window and sees the famous detective following their footprints. Jerry sees the girl buying the dope in the drug store and, hurrying to the police station, tells them of the impending tragedy. The officers accompanying him back to the house. The landlady, meanwhile, has stopped Neal's trousers from going out, telling him he will have to pay up his board bill before running any others. In desperation he sneaks into the newlyweds' room while they are at lunch and steals a pair of Ray's trousers.

Jerry and the police arrive at the girls' room, and hear one of the girls say, "farewell forever," referring to her brunette hair. They think she is taking poison and break in the door. The matter is explained and Jerry receives the benefit of the policemen's rage. As they are belaboring him with clubs, he sees Neal sneaking from Ray's room with the stolen clothes. He puts the police on Neal's trail and they have a merry chase in and out of the house.

The girl's father has been notified by the detective, and hurries into the house where he confronts his daughter. She shows him her wedding ring and tells him they have already been married. Her father is unable to take out his spite on the girl now and grudgingly accepts his new son-in-law. Jerry the janitor is thankful that he is losing some of his customers as his many duties have proven to be too much for him.

Mr. Smith, finding his warnings to Ray and Neal unheeded, proceeds to more drastic measures, and kicks them off the place several times. In spite of the rough treatment they return, and he decides that the only way out of the difficulty is to put the girl in a boarding school. Billie is sent to a select school for girls, conducted by Miss Dillpickle. She is assigned a room with Betty, and the two become very friendly.

She writes Ray a note telling of the new arrangement and mentions that she has a room in a certain part of the house. Ray finds his efforts to see the girl unsuccessful and, deciding upon desperate measures, writes her a note begging her to elope with him. He intends to mail the letter, but his attention is distracted and he leaves it lying on the table. While wandering about the streets he makes the acquaintance of Betty, who is loaded down with bundles, and Ray gallantly assists her with her bundles. They stop for a rest in the park and Ray makes violent love to his new acquaintance. She is not exactly averse to his attentions, but finally leaves him.

Ray, thinking he has mailed the letter to Billie, regrets the action, as he finds more to admire in the new acquaintance. He determines to sneak into the school and steal the letter before the girl has had a chance to read it.

In the meantime the girls in the boarding school have been informed that there will be a suffrage lecture that evening and they are all marshalled into the lecture hall. Ray finds it easy to get into Billie's room, and is turning everything topsy-turvy in his search for the letter. The school receives a telegram announcing that the lecturer missed her train and the girls are dismissed from the hall. Betty, suddenly coming into the room, sees a man prowling around and immediately taints. The others, hearing the commotion, rush in. Ray takes refuge in the box couch and is discovered and the girls pile on top of the cover to hold him until assistance comes.

Policeman Smith, seeing the school hours their call for help and comes in. He finds Ray and gives him a rough reception. Ray finally persuades the officer to release him upon giving a promise that he will never see Billie again and he returns home sadly, thinking of the letter he has written. The girl arrives at the bank, but finds to discover that everything has been removed even the carpets, leaving nothing but the sleeping watchman. A SERPENT IN THE HOUSE (April 1).—The cast: Eddie (Albert MacQuarrie); Martha; his wife (Fritzie Brunette). The Slavey (Jane Bernoudy); The Ice Man (Tom Walsh). Scenario by L. V. Jefferson. Produced by Robert Daly.

Eddie and Martha Davis have taken up their married life in their bungalow. Their faithful slavey continues to minister to their culinary needs at the same time that she persists in her romantic dreams. Still absorbed in her "detectuf" literature, she and her lover the ice man, seek further for adventure, and find it in the mysterious doings of the mistress of the house.

Martha receives an invitation from a club friend to spend the day with her at the beach. She sends this invitation by her husband, with instructions that Martha accompany him in his automobile to their home and from there they will go to the beach where the picnic is to be held. Martha accepts. When the slavey sees her mistress leave home with the stranger she believes that she is eloping. When Eddie returns the slavey tells him that his wife has gone away with a man. He seizes a gun and starts in pursuit. Left to herself the slavey prepares to entertain the ice man upon his regular rounds. She "borrows" one of her mistress' dresses, dons it, fixes herself up as a grand lady and dazzles her lover when he calls. He is so pleased with the effect that he insists on taking her to the beach for an outing. He is ashamed of his own clothes and the slavey lends him a suit of the master's. In full regalia they leave for the beach where the jolly and innocent little picnic party is already in full swing.

The husband reaches the beach in search of his wife and her supposed lover and is unable to locate her until in the distance he sees a dress that he recognizes as his wife's. He traces the wearer through the maze of the amusement pier, up and down wild "rides," across lagoon, on the merry-go-round and rides the backs of camels. In the meantime, Martha from a different angle has seen a man in the distance, clad as only her husband is wont to dress, disporting himself with a female lady and horrified she sets forth in pursuit. The ice man sees her coming, and jilts his companion. Martha chases him, while Eddie is equally horrified at seeing his wife with another man. Both of them go for help one for the police and the other for her friends at the picnic party. The slavey and the ice man know that it is their exciting chief has played them in their predicament and while they have no others to wear they are forced to choose between sacrificing their apparel or losing their ole so they hastily tear off the clinging garments and place them on crudely constructed rafts, hobbits and planks and throw them into the water.

Eddie, dashing back with the police, sees his wife's dress floating on the surface of the water and gallantly dives in to save her. At another spot Martha sees her husband's suit drawing in the water and effects his rescue on the opposite side of the pier. Both discover their mistake and believe that the other has played a mean joke on them. They become suddenly embittered. They climb up the ladders of the pier and face each other on opposite sides, recognize each other and are convinced that each has been guilty of a trick on the other.

In the meantime, the real culprits have been forced out of the bath house by the police and are chased down the pier. They dash in between the combatants just as they rush together and his mate recognized and promptly throws to the lobe, while a tearful reunion takes place between husband and wife.

While the cousins' ideas are alike in business, they are very different in regard to Lillian Peck, whose father has an office adjoining the Binks. Mr. Peck has met the boys often, but has preference for Tom. Peck's wife, too, knows the boys well and her preference runs to Bill. Lillian prefers Tom, much to the disgust of Bill.

Lillian, while visiting her father's office, sneaks into the cousins' office and is engaged in love-making with Tom when Bill comes in, sees the two and raises a rumpus. He decides to settle the question once and for all by seeking Lillian's father. Bill snatches the only cigar in the office and hurries to see Peck, intending the cigar as a peace offering. After his departure, Lillian tells her handsome lover that he must hurry and get her father's consent to their marriage.

Bill and Peck do not mix well and Peck, thinking to be rid of the persistent suitor, tells him that the one who has the most money can have the girl. Bill thinks of a brilliant scheme to win the girl and hurries back for the firm's bank book. Mrs. Peck arrives on the scene, just as her husband tells Tom of the proposition he has made to Bill. This does not suit Ma Peck at all, as she thinks her favorite is being discriminated against. Bill brings in the bank book and, hiding his partner's name, endeavors to show the account as his. Lillian sees the deception, however, and tells her father of Bill's double dealing.

Heartened by Mrs. Peck's attitude, Bill takes the book to the bank and draws out the firm's funds. With a fist full of bills he returns to the Peck office, determined to win the girl. Lillian and her mother have returned home and Pa Peck, angry at his wife's defense of Bill, throws the latter out into the hall when he calls with the money. Bill leaves for the house to enlist the aid of Mrs. Peck.

Tom has learned of his partner's deception and hurries back to the office to tell Peck. The two determine to fight "fire with fire" and frame up a bogus telegram informing Bill that he is the possessor of a large estate left by a sudden deceased uncle, and then another telegram stating that the legacy, which would go to the poorest nephew, consisted of 15 cents. Bill gets the first telegram and as it reads that the fortune will be left to the poorest nephew he offers the roll of bills to Tom, thinking he will then be the poorer. Tom accepts. Bill tells the girl to phone for a minister, which she does. When the minister arrives, however, Bill receives a second telegram and learns that he has been fooled. Mrs. Peck, disgusted with Bill because he let the money go, agrees to the marriage of Tom and Lillian.

CAUGHT ON A SKYSCRAPER (Two Parts—April 2). The cast: The Flirt (Harry Gribbon); The Husband (Vin Moore); His Wife (May Emory).

Mr. Rawsberry knew that he shouldn't flirt, but he disregarded his conscience's admonitions and wrote a poetic note to a lady in the park. He requested a stranger to deliver it, but the stranger happened to be the fellow the lady was waiting for, and instead he gave the note to a married lady whose husband was sitting alongside.

Husband read it and naturally wished to know who was writing tender notes to his wife. He eventually found out and told Mr. Rawsberry very pronouncedly that if he valued his future happiness well being or his life itself he would never be seen within talking distance of his wife again. Mr Rawsberry saw that husband meant business and he resolved henceforth to let women alone.

He even went home and went to bed to avoid temptation. An evil fate intervened, however, as the lady and her husband unknowingly lived across the hall in the same hotel. The wife was a sleep walker and she walked into Mr. Rawsberry's room. The husband came home and discovered her and things looked black for Mr Rawsberry. The things that followed, however, made husband forget that he wanted to escape. The wife walked onto the edge of a skyscraper and traversed the parapet fourteen stories above the street. Everybody had heart failure and Mr Rawsberry's was so violent that he fell through a skylight. The wife eventually woke up safe in her husband's arms and the crowd dispersed. Mr Rawsberry has never flirted from that day to this.

THE NIGHT RIDERS (Two Parts—April 1).—The cast: Jennie Marston (Olive Golden); Jack Marston (Neal Hart); The Breed (Bill Gettinger); Apache Kid (Joe Rickson). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Jack Marston is the sheriff of a Western town and Jennie, his sister, is postmistress and operator at the stage station. Among the inhabitants of the town is an Indian breed. An outcast from his own people, he is looked down upon by the race of his adoption, although his education has included a college course.

The express company has posted a reward for the apprehension of one Apache Kid and his band of fellow robbers. The next night the band arrive in the town and hold up one of the main saloons. Peggy, a dance hall girl, takes the fancy of the leader, the Apache Kid, and he abducts her and takes her with them when they make their escape.

After dividing the loot the band separates. The Kid takes Peggy and hides in the nearby hills. The sheriff and his party pursue the bandits, but lose them in the rocky canyons. The breed has accompanied the posse and wanders off alone to trace the bandits in his own way. The sheriff, too, becomes separated from his men and is seen by the Apache Kid. The bandit captures the sheriff and leaves a note to the posse, telling them to quit searching for the bandits and to bring him five thousand dollars under penalty of finding the sheriff shot full of holes. The posse, realizing the life of the sheriff is in danger, hurry back to the town to raise the money, but the bandits' haul has been such a large one that there is hardly five thousand dollars left in the town. Jennie wires to the nearest express office, telling them to send the money, and arranges relay horses so as to get the money before sunrise next morning.

Next morning the Kid is awaiting the sunrise to see whether he kills the sheriff or not. Through an accident, the breed locates the hiding place and attacks the bandit. His superior strength prevails and the bandit is thrown over the cliff. Jennie has received the money and, accompanied by a posse, makes all haste to take the money to the Apache Kid. Her surprise and joy are unubounded when the party meet the breed, Peggy and the sheriff returning. They learn of the bandit's death and the bravery shown by the breed.

The sheriff recalls his debt to the breed and regrets the humiliating remarks made to the latter when he had warned him to stay away from the girl. As the story ends, the girl finds her trust in the breed was justified and the others begin to look upon him with more respect and honor.

IN THE HEART OF THE SHELL (March 3).—Baby Wilton, while selling the pretty shells she picks up along the beach, comes upon two sweethearts, sitting on the sand. While the sweethearts are "playing hands" the girl suddenly discovers that she has lost her ring. Both start up and search the sands for it, but are unable to find it.

Baby Wilton timidly approaches the young couple and offers to help them.

"I play every day on the beach and maybe I will find it," she explains.

The man hands her his card, which reads, "Alfred Clark, Huntington Hotel," and tells her that if she finds it to bring it to him at the address on the card.

A rough beachcomber learns from Baby Wilton of the loss of the ring and sternly tells her that he will look for it. Little Baby Wilton runs home to her mother, weeping at the harsh way the beachcomber treated her. She finds her mother, a confirmed invalid, only partly conscious. A doctor is at her mother's side. He tells the child that only an operation can save her mother. "And operations cost a great deal of money, little girl," he smiles sadly. "I would not attempt to take the case, as only a skilled surgeon could handle it. It might cost all of a hundred dollars."

Next day Baby Wilton starts to look for the ring on the beach, but is ordered away by the beachcomber, who hopes to obtain the reward himself. Wearied with trying to sell her shells, Baby sinks down to sleep beside a big rock. As she drifts away into dreamland, the big shell changes form and soon a beautiful fairy steps out of the shell and starts talking to her.

"I will grant you any wish, little girl," smiles the good fairy at Baby Wilton.

"I wish that my mamma would get well and that I could find the ring to pay for her operation," says Baby Wilton.

"Your wish is granted," declares the fairy And then, while Baby Wilton looked on in amazement, the fairy drew back into the shell and faded from sight.

Waking from her dream, Baby Wilton looks about her. She finds near the great rock against which she has gone to sleep a large beautifully-colored shell. She thinks of what the fairy has whispered in her ear and, taking a stone, cracks open the shell. There, inside, where Mr. Clark's fiance had put it in an idle moment, lies the ring.

Dodging the ugly beachcomber, who suspects her purpose, Baby Wilton takes the ring to Mr. Clark, who is overjoyed to get it back again. Mr. Clark gives Baby $100 for her trouble as a reward. And then, with the check tightly grasped in her hands, Baby Wilton runs back to her mother.

"See, mother," she cries, "here is money to pay for your operation. Now you will soon be well."

THERE IS NO PLACE LIKE HOME (March 25).—The cast: Andrew Blair (Antrim Short); His Father (Lou Short); His Mother (Mrs. Short). Written and produced by Lois Weber.

Andrew Blair is discontented with his happy home. He and the other boys of the village look with envy upon the Bolton boys, whose parents live in a covered wagon and go about the country. Andrew finds it hardest to get along with his father, who insists he prepare his lessons instead of running about the streets, while he finds it hard to bear with his mother in the morning, as she always wants him to fill the wood-box before leaving for school.

The boy broods over his imaginary hard life and finally decides to run away. He scribbles a note on a piece of wood, and slips away. Seeing the Bolton boys, he joins them and then learns that they do not fish for fun, but to supply the family with something to eat. He decides to return with the Bolton boys that evening, and on the way they stop at a farmer's to steal a chicken.

They secure the chicken, but the farmer discovers them and takes a shot at the boys. Andrew receives most of the shot, and one of the Bolton boys, who is a cripple, loses his crutch. Andrew receives a rough welcome from the Bolton parents, and when they learn the circumstances of the lost crutch they turn the chicken loose for fear the farmer will discover who the boys were.

Andrew sits down to a sloppy meal. The farmer arrives at the house, and Bolton makes the boys hide out in a shack. Andrew thinks of his mother's nice meals and how neat his father always appeared, and decides to go back home. Meanwhile, the Blairs have missed the boy and while his mother is inclined to worry, her husband tells her to pretend not to miss the boy and he will come back.

Andrew sneaks away from the Boltons and enters the room. He tells his father he is sorry he ran away and his mother immediately sets before him an appetizing meal. As he sits before the warm fire, he decides that he has not appreciated his father and mother and that in the end, "there is no place like home."

HER SISTER'S SIN (April 2).—The cast: Dr. Brock and his worthless brother (Francis Ford); Dr. Brock's Wife and her worthless sister (Grace Cunard). Scenario by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

Dr. Brock, an eminent physician, and his wife live happily together. The wife is a home-loving woman, much given to domestic duties. The wife's sister visits them and there soon appears a slight cloud to the happiness of the doctor and his wife. The wife's sister is entirely different from her. Her only care in life seems to be to gamble, drink and go with the so-called "smart set." One night the sister is participating in a card game and is a heavy loser. Nearby is a safe containing valuables belonging to the doctor. The sister opens the safe, steals a sum of money and continues in the game. Upstairs the wife has retired to bed. Her husband has presented her with a beautiful diamond necklace and she wears it to bed with her.

The doctor goes to the safe for an important paper and discovers the theft. He removes the remaining valuables and, going to his wife, tells of the sister's speculations. The wife pleads that the girl is her sister and her husband promises to take no action, but insists that the girl leave the house the next day. Sadly the wife agrees to the arrangement. The doctor returns to his work in the laboratory, the wife drops to sleep, while downstairs the sister, continuing the card game, again loses heavily.

A masked burglar breaks his way into the house and, coming to the wife's room, discovers the diamonds she has worn to bed with her. He is in the act of getting them when the wife awakens and screams. Dr. Brock hurries upstairs and confronts the intruder and recognizes him as his own brother.

In the card game an argument arises and one of the players is caught cheating and shot. The police, hearing the disturbance, rush in. The worthless brother and the worthless sister realize how narrow has been their escape from prison and determine to lead a better life.

As the story ends the worthless brother of the doctor and the worthless sister of his wife find much to admire in each other and decide that with each other's assistance they will be able to lead better lives, while the doctor and his wife give their blessing and stand by really to help the strugglers along.

A MODEL HUSBAND (Two Parts—March 29).—The cast: Mr. Cherub (Harry Myers); Mrs. Cherub (Rosemary Theby). Written by Samuel Greiner. Produced by Harry Myers.

Mr. Cherub is considered by all the world to be a model husband. Housewives hold him up as a shining example to their husbands. In truth, however, Mr. Cherub is anything but a virtuous husband. He mistreats his wife and orders her around like a slave. As for liquor, it is true enough that he never saw the inside of a saloon, and pretends to be an apostle of grape juice and pasteurized milk. But he makes up his continence on the sly, by enjoying every once in a while a few teaspoonfuls of a cough medicine, which is really nothing else than Scotch Strong.

The Prohibitionists, however, know nothing of all that. So highly do they think of him that they determine unanimously to nominate him for Mayor. They send a committee to his home to bring him the good tidings. Unfortunately he is just engaged in a pleasant altercation with his wife concerning the food, the affair reaching its climax in a crockery duel.

But when Mr. Cherub sees the committee approach his home he loses no time in patching up things and grouping himself, his wife and his children into a touching picture of family affection, which fairly brings tears to the eyes of the committee. The ladies on the committee urge Mrs. Cherub to communicate to them by what ways and means she has succeeded in making as perfect a husband as Mr. Cherub. Her good cooking, Mrs. Cherub replies, turned the trick.

Unfortunately, one of the Prohibitionists pays a visit to Mr. Cherub's office just as the latter is out, and, being attacked with a fit of coughing, is helping himself to Mr. Cherub's cough medicine. This is the first step towards Cherub's downfall. A special committee of investigation is organized and surprises him in a very embarrassing position.

A young girl, who is really the sweetheart of this model of a husand, he introduces to them as his sister. The cough medicine he explains away on the ground that it was but so much bay rum, of which he made use after shaving.

The committee decides to interrogate his wife as to his sister. The truth comes out with a vengeance. She reveals to them her entire life and packs up her things, firmly resolved to leave him. When Mr. Cherub enters matters come to a domestic crisis. In spite of entreaties Mrs. Cherub rushes away with her children.

LADY RAFFLES RETURNS (Two Parts—March 28).—The cast: Chief of Police (Jack Connelly); Lady Raffles (Grace Cunard); Phil Kelly (Francis Ford); Crook (Harry Mann). Written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford.

In the home of Mr. Bronson, a wealthy banker, a strange series of incidents occur. There have been several valuable articles missed and the detective assigned to the case finds a man going through the safe one day. The man has a box of valuables which the detective takes. While they are talking a woman comes in claiming to be Mrs. Brownson. She picks up the box and leaves, supposedly to 'phone to headquarters of the capture.

Brownson returns later and the butler is found dead. The woman has disappeared. When Brownson states that he is a bachelor and that the man the detective is holding is his secretary, headquarters recognizes the work of Lady Raffles, and Phil Kelly, a famous detective is assigned to the case. Phil's chief tells him that Brownson has just been robbed of ten thousand dollars, and is ordered to recover the money.

Lady Raffles writes a note to the detectives, deriding the police and bragging that she will rob the Brownson safe that day at noon regardless of the number of police on hand.

Having learned of the butler's death, Lady Raffles sends one of her assistants to take the butler's place. The assistant claims to be a brother of the dead butler and thus secures the position. The crooks make their plans carefully. The new butler knocks a picture off the wall and takes it supposedly to have it fixed. The chief orders that no one be admitted or allowed to leave the house without his instructions. Some time later a man brings the picture to the house.

Lady Raffles and her confidence man get inside the house, pretending to be relatives of the dead butler. She and the butler together open up the picture, which proves to be a collapsible safe. They move the real safe behind the curtains and substitute the fake one. Lady Raffles, thinking she is unobserved, takes her time about opening the safe and getting the valuables from it.

Phil Kelly, cleverly anticipates how the crooks will work and, disguising himself in the clothes of one of the band, sees Lady Raffles opening the safe. The safe is returned to its original place, the fake one folded up and one of the crooks starts out with it, stating that the wrong picture has been sent. Kelly leaves with the gang. A short time later the robbery is discovered and the police are unable to figure out how it was done, although Kelly had warned them that Lady Raffles always kept her word.

In her private room she and Kelly are left alone. Kelly handcuffs her, discloses his identity and after a short search, locates the missing valuables. He leaves Lady Raffles handcuffed and restores the valuables to the owner. While the girl is raving at her bonds she looks on the table nearby and sees the keys to the handcuffs which the detective had obligingly left. When his chief asks him why he did not capture the crook, Kelly replies that he was only commanded to get the money and nothing was said about capturing the crook.

LAEMMLE.

THE DISASTROUS DARDANELLES EXPEDITION Special Release—March 30.—What happened at Gallipoli? Did the British troops evacuate the peninsula with the loss of but one man? Or did they suffer the loss of 30 per cent. of their effectives when they withdrew their ill-fated expedition against Turkey?

Perhaps the most spectacular campaign of the whole war was that at the Dardanelles. The sinking of great English dreadnoughts as they attempted to force the passage to Constantinople, the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of English, Colonial and Turkish troops in the "Graveyard of the East," and the final mysterious withdrawal from the costly venture by the French and English forces, all make the Universal's greatest war film, "The Disastrous Dardanelles Expedition," a feature of the most soul stirring interest.

These pictures were secured by Ashmead Bartlett, the famous war correspondent, who was able to penetrate into the peninsula with the troops. The scenes show thrilling Suvla Bay operations, the repulsing of a Turkish attack, the destruction of the position occupied by the famous Australian and New Zealand contingents (the Anzacs), the terrific slaughter at the famous Fort Sed-il-Bahr and other pictures showing the transportation of troops from Lemnos, the British hospital station and military base, to the various landings on the peninsula.

These landings were the most costly ventures the expedition experienced. Thousands of men were mowed down as they disembarked from the pontoon barges. The Turks, as they lay entrenched on the tops of hills, literally swept the troops from the boats into the water with their withering fire. It speaks well for the extraordinary bravery of the British that they were able to land at all.

A FOOL'S GOLD (Three Parts—March 30).—The cast: Dick Webster (Richard Stanton); Molly, His Wife (Myrtle Gonzales); J. J. Whittier (F. M. Wells); Doris Van (Gretchen Lederer); Bruce Higgins (Hayward Mack). Written G. L. V. Jefferson. Produced by Richard Stanton.

Dick Webster is confidential secretary to J. J. Whittier, a capitalist. Dick and his wife, Molly, find it hard to live on the small salary he is receiving. Bruce Higgins is a clerk in Mr. Whittier's employ, and one day, noting Webster's brooding tries to cheer him up. Webster tells him of his troubles and Higgins invites him to meet some friends. He makes the acquaintance of Doris Vane, a "social vampire," and she attracts him by her charms. Doris and Higgins are partners in a scheme to make money easy and Webster agrees to furnish them with tips on the market. He does this and Doris places the information in the hands of Higgins. The trio make quite a large sum of money. According to the agreement Webster receives one-half of the money. He takes it home with childish pleasure, but when his wife learns how he got the money and realizes that it was dishonestly, she will have nothing to do with it, and pleads with him to return it to his employer. This he refuses to do and a quarrel ensues.

Webster returns to the office, ever on the alert for new tips, but this time does not share the information with his partners and plays a lone hand. His luck is phenomenal and his wealth grows by leaps and bounds. His two partners, angry because he will not share his wealth with them, tell his employer and Webster is fired. The crowd of parasites which surround him, tell him how wonderful he is and cause him to believe that he is a master of finance. He believes that if he could marry into a family of established wealth he could increase his power. Accordingly he secures a divorce from Molly and begins to look about him for a new wife. Whittier and Doris have spread the news of the methods he used to secure his wealth and none of the people whom he wishes to associate with will have anything to do with him. Doris, however, wins his consent to their marriage. Their house becomes a gathering place for a swift set. Doris spends his money freely and Higgins, her companion, helps her.

Meanwhile, Molly's child is born and, really loving Dick, she pleads with his old employer to win him back to her. As the old man really at heart likes Dick, he agrees, but realizes that the only way to save him is to utterly crush him. Accordingly all the force of Whittier's name is thrown into the battle and the climax is reached when Webster is ruined. Webster returns to his sumptuous home, which he finds filled with people, eating and drinking, and his wife openly caressing Higgins amid the cheers of her companions. His anger overcomes him and he sets fire to the apartment holding the crowd in the room at the point of a revolver. He is finally overcome and they make their escape, while he sinks in a chair with his head on the table. The faithful old butler, however, drags him out and he walks the streets the balance of the night waiting for morning and his final fate.

Next day marks the complete ruin of Webster. Shunned by the parasites, who were his friends when he had money, he goes to his wife, who was wife in name only, but she deserts him. He returns to the ruin of his home and sifts the ashes of his home through his fingers. Whittier has called upon Molly, told her about her husband's misfortune and, overruling her protests, insists upon her taking the money which he has taken from her husband. She still refuses, but when he gently tells her of her unhappiness and her baby child, she realizes he is right and accepts the money. The old man advises her to put the money in the bank, and begin life anew with her husband.

SEARCH ME (March 23).—The cast: The Jailbird (Patty McQuire); The District Attorney (Arthur Moon); The Judge (Russ Powell); His Wife (Mert Sterling); Her Daughter (Priscilla Dean); The Detective (Jack Ganes). Directed by Jack Dillon. Scenario by Robert A. Dillon.

A jailbird is brought from his cell to the Warden's office, given $10 to go straight, and released, but not before the $10 has been picked from his pocket by the detective who slips it back to the Warden. At the jail gate the attention of the warden and detective is centered on the shapely ankle of a girl who is on her way to a pawnshop to obtain a loan on a necklace which her accomplice has stolen from the wife of the judge who sentenced the jailbird.

While engrossed in this manner, the jailbird gets back his $10 bill from the warden and also the watch of the crooked detective, which he later takes and pawns in the same shop that the girl is pawning the stolen necklace. The pawnbroker takes the necklace and is making out a ticket when the girl steals the necklace back from him and hides it in her muff, just as the jailbird enters to soak the detective's watch.

The jailbird seeing this manipulation steals the necklace from the girl's muff, pawns the watch, receives a ticket for it and departs. Outside the pawnshop the judge is passing just as the girl emerges. He flirts and renews her and the jailbird, escaping from the pawnbroker who has discovered his loss, jumps on the same car that the judge is in trying to flirt with the girl.

Alighting from the car the girl tells her accomplice of the Judge's attentions, and he is promptly knocked down, and the jailbird helping him to his feet, recognizes him as the judge who sentenced him, and for revenge slips the pawn ticket for the detective's watch in his pocket.

The warden discovers the loss of the $10 bill and accuses the detective of double crossing him, and when later the detective discovers the loss of his watch he accuses the warden of purloining it. The detective is summoned to the District Attorney's office who is the sweetheart of the judge's daughter, where he hears the pawnbroker's tale of the robbery.

Later in the park the girl discovers the loss of the necklace from her muff, and seeing the jailbird on an adjoining bench they walk over to him, accuse him of the robbery and there is a fight.

The detective locks the trio up, but not before the jailbird slips the necklace into his pocket where it is found later in court. On trial, the judge discovers the pawn ticket in his pocket at the same moment that the detective finds the necklace in his. The judge calls the detective and whispering confidentially to him slips the pawn ticket in his pocket, at the same moment the detective slips the pearls in his (judge's) pocket.

The judge's wife who attends the trial, sees and grows fearful of the man who stole her necklace when she flirted with him (this man is the girl's sweetheart who pawned the necklace and whom the judge flirted with), and she cautiously begs him not to expose her as a flirt. The judge on the bench sees the girl (the accomplice of the crook), and he is afraid of exactly the same thing that is worrying his wife.

BEAUTY.

A TRUNK AND TROUBLE (March 29).—The cast: Walt Slick (John Sheehan); Ruth, his wife (Carol Halloway); Bob (Dick Rosson); Mabel his wife (Quenelle Rosson).

Ruth is jealous of her hubby, Walt. She catches him making love to the photo of a girl friend of hers, and Walt beats it out of the house. After his departure Ruth receives a letter from her girl friend, the photo of whom caused all the trouble, in which Mabel states that she is glad Ruth has been able to find her an apartment near by, and she and her hubby are coming at once to spend their honeymoon.

Mabel and Bob arrive at the depot. Bob is so enthused over married life that he is constantly forgetting his suitcase. At the depot he chances to set it down for a second and forgets it. While Bob goes back for the suitcase, Mabel waits.

Walt is about to commit suicide by letting the train run over him when he sees the original of the girl whose photo he had admired so much. She also sees him and thinking that she is about to witness a suicide starts to faint. Walt runs over and grabs her just in time to prevent her from falling. Bob, also a jealous person, comes back with the suitcase and sees a strange man embracing his wife. Walt beats it, and Bob chases after him. Nearby an express wagon has broken down, spilling trunks and suitcases and spilling Mabel's dog. With Bob in close pursuit, Walt comes along, sees the dog trunk open, and as a last resort, jumps into it and closes it. The expressman gets the stuff back on the wagon and starts off.

When Mabel and Bob arrive at Ruth's apartment, Ruth is dressing, and tells them to wait just a minute. Bob has forgotten the suitcase again and starts back after it. The expressman arrives, and Mabel has her trunk put in her apartment which is directly opposite Ruth's. Inside the trunk is Walt. The girl's pet the "dog" through the hinged door. Mabel confesses to Ruth that she has one secret vice that she has not told to Bob. She likes her little puffs of cigarettes. She takes out one and induces Ruth to try one also.

Returning with the suitcase, Bob is stopped on the street by a lady kidnapper who hands him a baby, asking him to hold it for just a minute. As the woman doesn't return, Bob resolves to take the baby home. The baby has been kidnapped by Krooked Kate, who has detectives on her trail. She follows Bob and the detectives follow her to the apartment house.

Cigarettes don't agree with Ruth and getting sick, she returns to her apartment. Mabel hears Bob, is afraid to let him know that she has been smoking, and hastily throws her cigarette down. It falls into a waste paper basket near by the trunk. Mabel then admits Bob who sniffs the air and smells smoke. He begins to accuse Mabel of having had a man in her room. The cigarette meantime has started the waste paper basket burning. Walt, in the trunk, is getting pretty warm by this time. Bob is still accusing Mabel when they see that a fire has started. Krooked Kate enters and grabs the baby. The detectives appear in the hallway. Bob rushes out to get fire extinguishers. Smoke is seen coming from the trunk where Walt is smoking a cigarette dropped there by Ruth. The extinguishers are turned on and Walt is driven out and explanations follow.

THE IMPROBABLE YARN OF McQUIRK (April 5).—The cast: Jerry McQuirk, an old sailor (Orral Humphrey); Jamie, a credulous boy (Robert Miller); Jamie's Mother (Lucille Ward); Hookum, king of the cannibals (Perry Banks). Directed by Phil Walsh.

Jerry McQuirk, an old sailor, and Jamie, a boy of about eight years, are companions in idleness. Jerry whiles away the time relating a lurid history of his experiences in being cast upon a cannibal isle. He repeatedly drops the story at a critical moment, and has to be prodded by Jamie.

Jerry's tale is about a time when he is cast from shipwreck on the cannibal isle, where the king decided he was too thin to eat, whereat the cannibals started Jerry on a fattening process. However, Jerry circumvents them by eating profusely the leaves of the Skinaree plant, which keeps him thin. Finally Hookum tires of waiting and orders Jerry cooked as he is.

Amongst the wreckage from his ship, Jerry finds a phonograph and a can of powder. While amusing the natives with the phonograph, he blows them up with the powder, and Jerry lives to tell the tale.

MUSTANG.

THE RANGER OF LONESOME GULCH (Three Parts—March 24).—Frank, the ranger of Lonesome Gulch, loves Nell, the daughter of Davis, a retired college professor, living on a western ranch. Although Nell cares for Frank, and he proposes to her periodically, she can never quite decide to marry him and puts him off until she shall finish a novel which she is writing.

The novel is finished and accepted, subject to some changes which the publishers wish to consult her about and she goes East, leaving Frank lonely, but happy with the reminder that she will think seriously of marrying when she returns.

Nell meets Watson, an illustrator, who returns with her to get material for illustrations for the book. Watson finds out that Davis has money and determines to marry his daughter. Frank discovers a letter written by Watson disclosing his intentions and escorts him to the train at gun-point.

Frank determines to teach Nell a lesson by staying away. The cowboys are giving a barbecue on Nell's birthday and Nell rides over to Frank's station to find out what is the matter. Frank accuses her of intending to marry Watson, and although she assures him that she has always loved him, Frank is obdurate and Nell goes away crestfallen. She is attacked on the road by a band of drunken horse traders, who have stolen the wine from the barbecue. She takes refuge in Frank's cabin and he defends her to the last cartridge. The drunks are too many for him and are breaking down the door; so Frank, agrees with Nell to shoot her with the last cartridge, rather than let her fall into a worse fate.

The cowboys, who have followed the horse traders in search of the wine, arrive too late to prevent the tragedy. Nell is taken home to die and Frank goes mad and wanders away. Nell's life in the open has fortified her to resist death, however, and she recovers and eventually finds Frank, who has been cared for by some trappers. His reason returns, and Nell is no longer in doubt.

AMERICAN.

IN THE SHUFFLE (Three Parts—March 28).—The cast: Sharlee Evans (Winnifred Greenwood); Bill Ensor (Edward Coxen); Bluff Stuart (George Field); "The Kid" (William Marshall). Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Bill Ensor is the silent partner of Bluff Stuart in a gambling place. An unpleasant feeling is created between the partners because Stuart feels that Bill's efforts to keep things fair and square are ruining the business. Bill incurs the enmity of the Kid, when he prevents the Kid, slightly intoxicated from sitting in a poker game. Stuart frames up an attack on Ensor, in which the Kid shoots Ensor in the shoulder. Ensor is taken to a hospital where he meets Sharlee Evans, a nurse, the Kid's sister.

Ensor falls in love with Sharlee, and she returns the affection. A hospital surgeon who cares for Sharlee learns by a visit to the gambling rooms that Ensor is Stuart's silent partner, and uses this information with Sharlee against Ensor. She refuses to believe the accusation until Ensor himself admits it. Ensor proposes to Sharlee, but is refused because he is a gambler. She tells him how in years previous Stuart induced her father to sell his hardware business to join Stuart in gambling, and how Stuart fleeced him out of his money, the loss of which caused her father to kill himself. The sting of her father's disgrace was renewed by "The Kid's" lax morals and gambling tendency.

Ensor leaves her, intending to sell out to Stuart, and engage in a reputable business. Bill has a serious talk with the Kid in which he tells the boy of Stuart's part in the father's ruin. Stuart, meanwhile, showers his porter's girl with attentions and dismisses the waiter for interfering. The jealous waiter plots to kill Stuart. The Kid goes to Stuart to confront him with the facts regarding his father. In a fit of anger the Kid struggles with Stuart, who has an empty revolver in his hand. The waiter, outside a window, shoots Stuart. The Kid thinks he has killed Stuart. Just as the fatal shot is fired, Ensor enters, takes the revolver from the Kid, who escapes through the window, and upon the arrival of the police, Ensor is accused of the murder and exonerated when they discover the revolver is empty and has not been fired.

Upon reaching home, the Kid tells Sharlee of his crime and Ensor's acceptance of the accusation; and she insists that the Kid return to exonerate Ensor. In the meantime, the waiter is caught and confesses. The Kid's manhood asserts itself, and Ensor takes him west, where the story closes with a letter from Sharlee to Ensor, hinting a happy reunion to come.

ON THE RAMPAGE (March 24).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Baron de Long (George George); Host (Jefferson Osborne); Hostess (Janet Sully).

Jerry is permitted a moment's respite by the policeman when the law's guardian spies Baron de Long, a notorious fakir. Jerry appropriates his suitcase, which contains some articles of apparel and an invitation to attend a very exclusive party. He decides to impersonate the Baron. Bedecking himself in false whiskers and in the Baron's clothes, Jerry is welcomed with a great deal of pomp. Suddenly his attention is attracted by a commotion outside of the mansion. It is Baron de Long, who has been released, being ejected as an impostor. However, the Baron gains entrance to the house by means of a side window. He confronts Jerry.

A general mixup follows. The first impostor grabs a sabre and jabs it into Jerry, who gives chase to his tormentor. Finally they come together on the top floor. The Baron, getting the upper hand, throws Jerry out of the window. In his downward flight he crashes through the roof of the massive conservatory. In the meantime someone has summoned the police. They run down the Baron. After looking high and low for Jerry they finally pull him out from under tons of glass. Jerry and the Baron are handcuffed together, taken to the ballroom, where the host and hostess apologizes to the guests for the trouble caused by the two. And as the whole gathering jeers, the officers leave, Jerry and the Baron once more in the clutches of the police.

JERRY AND THE SMUGGLERS (March 31).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (George George); Sing Lee (Louis FitzRoy); Padlock Bones (Gordon McGregor); His Wife (Janet Sully); Maid (Louise Horner); Chauffeur (Arthur Mund); Sergeant (Harry Jackson). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Financially embarrassed, Jerry attempts to avoid paying for the sumptuous meal he has just had, and for his troubles he is thrown out. Much to his surprise, a large bundle follows him, the waiter believing that it belonged to Jerry, when it was really the property of the celebrated detective, Padlock Bones.

Jerry opens the bundle and finds a book "How to Become a Detective," and also a collection of disguises, including the attire of a Chinaman. There is also a note telling of a band of Mongolian smugglers and, after reading this with much interest, Jerry decides to dress up like one of the natives of the Orient and try his hand at running down the smugglers. In the meantime the detective discovers the loss of his bundle and, after a heated argument with the waiter, starts off to find Jerry.

Impersonating a Chinaman, Jerry walks along a roadway when he is struck by an automobile, but instead of being knocked to the ground, he is lifted up on the hood of the machine and he rides for some distance before the occupants of the car take any particular notice of him. Jerry recognizes them as some of the conspirators of the smugglers and interests them by saying he is a cook out of a job.

They take him to their mansion and employ him as cook. He at once starts in by making love to the maid, and when the gardner sees this he starts a fight, in which the whole household takes part and which ends up in an uproar. When things are quieted, Jerry persists in his lovemaking. He is making good headway with the maid when the landlady appears. The maid rushes away and Jerry continues on his course with the woman of the house without knowing what he is doing. The husband arrives and another mixup puts things in an uproar. Jerry is ordered to get to work in the kitchen, and his inexperience with a gas stove results in an explosion. A fire follows and Jerry plays a prominent part with the hose.

Jerry manages to get a line on the smugglers at about the same time that Padlock Bones learns of Jerry's whereabouts, but before the would-be detective arrives, Jerry, in the attire of the maid, starts out with the chauffeur and makes for the water where he has information the smugglers, a band of Chinamen, are about to do their work.

THANHOUSER.

THE WHISPERED WORD (Two Parts—March 15).—The cast: Wife (Grace De Carlton); Husband (Wayne Arey); Father (J. H. Gilmour); Foreman (Lawrence Swinburne).

Anna, against the wishes of her friends and father, marries John Golden, who was deemed unworthy of her. The first few months of her married life convinced her that she had probably erred when she followed the dictates of her heart.

John, addicted to liquor, dragged her down to the depths of poverty, forcing her to live in the squalor of the congested tenement district. One day she whispered to him a single word. From then on he took a firm foothold on himself and for the first time in many months the young wife recognized the husband of her ideals.

Where he had been a loafer and a social outcast he became a diligent worker and looked forward to the day when he could resume his old place among the better people of the community. He saves his father-in-law from the hands of a mob. When the old man learns that his worthless son-in-law has at last decided to make a man out of himself and when he hears he is soon to be a grandfather, he relents and harmony and happiness reigns in the Golden household in anticipation of the coming heir.

THE FIFTH ACE (Two Parts—March 22).—The cast: The Girl (Alice Lake); Her Sweetheart (Wayne Arey); Her Father (J. H. Gilmour); Gambler (Hector Dion); The Dupe (Yale Benner).

After an evening of small winnings at the gaming table the crooked gambler decides to go after bigger game. A story in the newspaper telling of a coming week-end party to be given by the daughter of a rich banker gives the gambler the opening he seeks. He hires a pair of thugs to hold up a rich clubman who is included in the list of invited friends. Of course, the scheming crook is on hand to make a fake rescue and in return the clubman falls into the gambler's trap and includes him in the invitation to the big summer home of the banker.

The gambler is accepted without question, but he finds that the heiress already has a sweetheart. The crook decides to eliminate his rival so that the goal of millions may be open only for him. Poker games are a nightly recreation among the men and the gambler prepares a deck that contains five aces. When the girl's sweetheart is about to deal, the gambler cleverly substitutes the prepared deck. The hand is played. The stakes run as high as the excitement. The rival shows four aces and is just about to take in the pot when the father of the girl remembers his own hand. Quickly he turns it over and exposes the fifth ace.

There is no crime in the father's eyes so great as that of cheating at cards. The proof is absolute for the young chap had shuffled and dealt. Despite the protests of the daughter who refuses to believe so despicable a thing about her sweetheart, the father orders him to take the first train in the morning.

One of the hysterical woman guests demands that her diamond necklace be put in the safe over night because she fears to have it in her room while a card-sharp is under the roof! This is done, and the crook learns the combination while the father is opening the safe.

In his room upstairs the falsely accused man decides not to wait until morning. He packs his bag and steals from the house and to the station to get a night train. The crook, in his own room, is torn between two loves. In the future is the heiress and her millions; in the present is a diamond necklace worth a hundred thousand dollars. But he puts aside the lesser temptation, only to receive a night telegram from a pal that his last trickery is known to the police and he must vanish quickly or be arrested.

The crook decides that he will not leave empty-handed. He drops his bag from the window to insure hasty flight, and in the darkness hurries to the safe and its waiting diamonds. As he works at the safe the banker upstairs is unable to sleep because the scene at the card table has driven sleep far from his eyes.

The crook carelessly makes some sound that the nervous man upstairs hears. Taking a pistol the banker comes down to meet the intruder. The gambler is warned, and darts to the French window and escapes. The banker fires at the shadowy form. He sees the man stagger and clutch his arm, and knows his shot has hit, but the robber escapes.

Awakened by the shot the guests come running downstairs. The woman who had the necklace sees the open safe. She loudly accuses the "card sharp" of its theft and demands its return. She is insistent and leads the way to his room, flinging open the door to show the signs of hasty departure.

The banker knows that the crook must have gone to the railroad. He is determined to start after him. The daughter is just as determined to go with him, and she carries her point.

At the station the falsely accused man paces up and down as he waits for the train. The gambler suddenly appears on the scene. The surprise is mutual. The younger man wants to know why the other guest left so suddenly.

"I guess for the same reason that you did," the gambler sneeringly said: "Becausue I couldn't get the girl and the money."

Enraged at the sneer, the man who had been accused of cheating grasped the gambler by the arm, only to withdraw his hand quickly at the feel of the warm, sticky blood that showed through the light cloth of the gambler's sleeve. Realizing that discovery is at hand, the crook tries to escape, but the young chap quickly proves his mastery. When the girl and her father arrive they find a cowering person, beaten and cursing and a quiet young chap standing over him. In the crook's bag they find the necklace and the deck of cards from which he took the fifth ace that caused the suffering to the two young people.

Motion pictures that appeal to the public and that the public will pay real money to see are the kind of pictures that you want to be running in your theatre. The two advertisements above which were prepared as a part of a regular service for TRIANGLE exhibitors show just why the TRIANGLE PLAYS released this week will appeal to your patrons—just why it will be of financial advantage for you to run them. These advertisements are merely illustrations of one of the basic ideas back of the TRIANGLE FILM CORPORATION—that each picture must contain some vital point that will strike the heart of the public and make people feel that they simply cannot afford to miss the next TRIANGLE PLAY.

PAUL'S POLITICAL PULL (March 28).—A well-mannered young man had two elder brothers who were very cruel to him. They made him do all the work. And when they went fishing it was Paul who dug all the worms and baited the hooks and carried the tackle to and fro from the house. One day a letter came to the house addressed to the brothers. It notified them that their wealthy old uncle was dead and had left his money to the brother, "who, during the month of August, should work most steadily." The executor was authorized to make the choice, and the two elder brothers fought bitterly to decide which of them should be wealthy. Neither of them gave one thought to poor little Paul, or realized that he also was entitled to enter the contest. So the cruel brothers went out to look for work.

Paul brooded over the situation and wished that he had a fairy godmother. But he didn't—in fact the only friend he had was Sport Costigan, a ward heeler, and to him he took his troubles. Costigan told the young man that he would fix it for him. The cruel brothers, unused to work, had difficulty in finding it. They lost one job as soon as they got it, because they could only carry a piano half way up a flight of stairs. Then they got a place in a restaurant, where they lasted an entire day, being discharged after numerous misadventures. For the rest of the month they simply tramped the streets hunting for jobs, but each was satisfied because he knew he had done as much work as his brother.

And all through the month of August little Paul could be seen daily from nine to five in front of the City Hall seated on a camp chair and cooling himself with a palm fan. The month of probation ended. The executor called and the cruel brothers presented a letter from the restaurant keeper certifying that the brothers had worked there one entire day, adding: "One was a bad waiter and the other was worse." Then it was up to the executor to decide who had won and it must be admitted he was in a quandary.

Just at this moment Paul and the ward heeler entered. The ward heeler introduced Paul and said he was a brother to the cruel ones, and then he motioned to Paul, and Paul presented a letter to the executor.

This message was from the office of the City Board of Improvements, correctly signed and sealed and read as follows: "This is to certify that from August 1st to August 31st Paul Jasper has been employed by this department, assigned to keep the snow off the sidewalk in front of the City Hall, and has been most efficient." The executor gave the estate to Paul, while the wicked brothers gnashed their teeth. And little Paul was very grateful to the ward heeler, financing his campaign so that he was elected alderman, and now he is as rich as Paul.

THE SNOW SHOVELER'S SWEETHEART (March 30).—The cast: Snow Shoveler (Jay C. Yorke); Sweetheart (Frances Keyes); Her Father (Harry Bates).

The proprietor of the only garage in the village was not popular because he seemed to have only one idea in mind—that of raising the price of gasoline. He controlled all the supply of that valuable fluid and every time he thought of it he boosted the rate a nickel or so. The disliked man had a daughter, who had a sweetheart. He was a young man who came to the town and started a photograph gallery, but met with little success. True, he made a hit when he took the garage keeper posing in the midst of motor cars, but unfortunately he set the place afire. With local customers he was also unlucky, for somehow the pictures he took were always out of focus, and so badly distorted that customers would never pay for them. Hence, within a short time the sheriff took possession of the photograph gallery.

The young man called upon the girl and told her his career was over. While she was trying to console him her father entered and ordered the young man away, saying that no man who does not work "can court my daughter when gasoline is selling at 30c a gallon." The young man admitted the truth of the argument and was just about going away when he chanced to look through the window and saw that snow was falling, so he turned upon his father-in-law-elect and said resolutely: "Listen! A job awaits me—I will become a snow shoveler." And he did. In any line of business the energetic man can make good. The snow shoveler worked so enthusiastically that within a few hours he became a foreman, much to the joy of the other laborers in his gang.

In the meantime the garage keeper was in trouble. A poor widow and little child had endeavored to buy some gasoline and had been rudely repulsed. She sobbed out her sad story to several young men, and they determined to make an example of the wicked garage keeper. They found him in his home and would have made him swallow his own gasoline had it not been for his daughter. The girl went to the roof of the building and attracted the attention of her sweetheart by hitting him with a snowball. He came to her rescue and the intruders were vanquished in hand-to-hand combat. His narrow escape taught the garage keeper the wickedness of his conduct, and he voluntarily reduced the price of gasoline so low that the poorest widow in town could buy all she wanted of it. In addition, he permitted his daughter to marry the man of her choice.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE DE LUXE.

MY PARTNER (Gaumont—Five Parts—March 20).—The cast: Joe Saunders (Burr McIntosh); Mary Brandon (Mary Mantell); Mathew Brandon (James Ryan); Grace Brandon (Marie Edith Ellis); Ned Singleton (Curtis Cooksy); Josiah Scraggs (Goldwin Paton); Wing Lee (John Leach).

Joe Saunders, Siskiyou's leading citizen, miner, gentleman and all-around favorite, has loved Mary Brandon, the daughter of Mathew Brandon, ever since she had come to Siskiyou as a child. And it is not strange that he has, for Mary is a sweet, gentle-mannered girl of nineteen. Together with her younger sister, Grace, she keeps house for her father, and furnishes the only spot of light and joy to the hearts of many of the rough, kind-hearted men of the town.

Mary knows of Joe's devotion, and loves him, too, in her simple, girlish way, until one day Ned Singleton, a young stranger, comes to town. He is a handsome, enthusiastic chap, and he soon wins the love and respect of the entire community. He gains the unbounded admiration of Joe Saunders by catching a Mexican who cheated at cards, and Joe asked him to become his partner.

In the meantime, Mary, too, has become interested in the fascinating young stranger. On a prospecting expedition, Joe and Ned find gold, but the younger man falls from a cliff and is carried back to the little mining town unconscious. Due to the tender care of Joe and Mary he recovers his health, but seriously loses his heart to the girl. Mary has grown to care more for Ned than for Joe.

On the night of Mary's twentieth birthday, Joe follows her when she leaves the happy party given in her honor, into the woods. He tells her of his great love for her, and asks her to marry him. Mary is forced, for the first time, to confess to Joe her love for his partner. She leaves him, heartbroken and sad, and goes on to keep her tyrst with Ned at lover's rock.

Joe comes upon them just as Mary pleads with her lover to marry her at once, as he had promised. The big, kind-hearted miner steps in and forces Ned to promise he will marry her at once. In the meantime, Scarggs, the villain, who loved Mary's mother and now loves her, has tried to force his suit. He goes to Ned's cabin, bent upon stirring up trouble, and sees Joe as he rides away after trying to divide up and split partnership with the boy. When Scraggs accuses Mary of being Joe's mistress, Ned jumps at his throat, and in the tussle which follows, he is killed. The villain tears one bloody cuff from his shirt and hides it in the holes of the hearth from which Joe had taken out their strong box before leaving, and runs to the village to say that Ned Singleton has been murdered and that he had seen Joe Saunders leave the cabin.

When the men arrive at Ned's shack they find Joe bending over the dead body of his partner. He had returned too late to proffer the hand which he had refused before. At the trial Joe is acquitted. Scraggs is accused, and in the face of everyone Joe marries Mary because he loves her, and to preserve her good name.

THE LOVE LIAR (Centaur—Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: David McCare (Crane Wilbur); Ludwig (Fred Goodwins); Margie Gay (Lucy Payton); Diana Strongwell (Mae Gaston); Edna Carewe (Nan Christy); Arlene Allaire (Ella Golden).

David McCare, the love liar, is a musical genius, the idol of society, hated by men and worshipped by women. He casts off his mistress, Margie Gay, for a new love, Diana Strongwell, an heiress. Margie pleads with him to take her back, but McCare gets rid of her through the services of Ludwig, his valet, and a broken-down musician. Ludwig is also in love with Margie. McCare marries Diana, much to the chagrin of Edna Carewe, a friend of Diana's, who is also attracted by the musician. They live happily for a short time until McCare becomes discontented and makes advances to Edna.

Meanwhile Margie finds the narrow path a stony one. A woman of the streets suggests the easiest way. Margie shrinks but finally consents. The first man she accosts is Ludwig, who leads her to her home and offers marriage. She is reluctant at first, but eventually agrees, and they are married. At a dinner dance given by Diana, she catches McCare making love to Edna. Diana denounces Edna and demands that she leave her home. McCare answers that if Edna goes he too, will leave. And so husband and wife are parted.

In time Diana divorces the "love liar" and he marries Edna. Diana advises Edna later that McCare is an overgrown child and that in order to keep his love he must be jealous. A year passes. Edna, with the aid of Diana's advice, has made the "love liar" happy. One night in a cafe he sees Arlene Allaire, a ballroom dancer. At home Edna has given birth to a baby and though it will live, it is evident that its birth will bring death to the mother. Diana, who is at the side of Edna rushes out to find McCare and locates him in the cafe, where he has assumed the leadership of the orchestra and is directing Arlene's dance. At the news of his wife's illness McCare is stricken with dumb surprise and hurries home. Edna dies in his arms.

For days McCare lived in an abstracted mood, watched over by Ludwig and Diana. One day as he plays his violin a vision of Arlene passes before his eyes. He throws off his brooding mood and goes back to the cafe and to Arlene. Her bills have been paid by McCare's checks until one day a number of them come back stamped 'No Funds' and from that moment on Van Allen who had been previously paying for everything for the dancer, finds himself again welcome at her apartments. It is here that McCare finds him one evening. The men fight, the police are called and McCare is arrested, but Arlene refuses to make any charge and McCare is simply put out into the street. Ludwig takes McCare home and there Margie and he care for the wrecked man. But McCare cannot blot the image of Arlene from his mind and he returns to the cafe where Arlene is dancing, securing employment as a musician.

Here Diana finds him. She begs him to tell her his troubles. He breaks down and confesses his love for Arlene. In time drink claimed him, too, and McCare sank lower. Time passed and McCare became desperate with love and jealousy. One night while Arlene is dancing a madness overcomes him. He dashes his violin to the floor, takes Arlene up in his arms and starts with her up the grand stairway to the cafe. The attendants attempt to overpower him, but he throws them off and drawing a revolver, compels Arlene, who has scurried away, to come to the foot of the stairs. Covering the startled crowd, he speaks to Arlene: "You've taken all my heart, my honor, my manhood. At your feet I fling the dregs!" He shoots himself and falls down the stairway to Arlene's feet.

Diana took him home and the "love liar" lived another day, forever calling upon the name of she who had shown him Hell. Diana, ever his friend, went to Arlene's apartment and pleaded with her to come to McCare's bedside. She refuses at first, so Diana poured the contents of her purse at her feet. Thus bribed, Arlene consented to go, and in her arms the soul of the "love liar" passed.

When all are gone and Diana is left alone with her dead, she takes him in her arms, for at last he belongs to her—to her alone.

THE IRON CLAW (No. 4 "The Name and the Game"—Two Parts—March 20).—Golden and Manly saw Mrs. Golden intent on watching the house and the former ordered her away. Manly supplied her with money and promised to aid her. The Laughing Mask smuggled Margery from Legar's den and the pursuing criminals ran their automobile over an open bridge. Legar robbed a bank at which some of Golden's money was kept, and successfully fastened the blame on the Laughing Mask. The man of mystery, disguised as one of Legar's henchmen, got control of the loot and notified Golden of his intention to return it only after Golden had improved conditions in his tenements.

THE IRON CLAW (No. 5 "The Incorrigible Captive"—Two Parts—March 27).—Margery, accompanied by Manly on a shopping tour, saw a parrot that once belonged to Legar and purchased it. The parrot escaped and returned to Legar's den. Manly was kidnapped and brought to the den and with the aid of the parrot, made his escape. Margery looking for certain documents to be forwarded to her father, was set upon by the master criminal, who stole a valuable map and then locked her in the vault. Margery was released from the vault, although not until the talkative parrot repeated the combination to her rescuers. Outside the house the Laughing Mask wrests the map from the fleeing criminal and returns it to Margery.

THE WOMAN'S LAW (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—March 21).—The cast: Gail Orcutt (Florence Reed); Keith Edgerton (Duncan McRae)! Mrs. Lorme, Gail's friend (Anita d'Este Scott); Vance Orcutt, Gail' son (Master Jack Curtis); Vance's Governess (Lora Rogers); John Kent, District Attorney (John Webb Dillion); Frank Fisher, reporter (William A. Williams); Lucas Emmet (Philip Hahn). Directed by Lawrence D. McGill. Scenario by Harvey Thew and Albert S. LeVino.

George Orcutt, a dissolute young New York millionaire, has forfeited his wife's respect and affection by his infidelities. Gail Orcutt centers her attentions in life on her young son, Vance, and withdraws from society. Although they reside under the same roof, they have long ceased to be husband and wife. Even this slim chain of acquaintanceship is broken when in a quarrel over another woman, George Orcutt kills his friend, Lucas Emmet, after a riotous night in Emmet's studio.

In an effort to keep her boy from being branded as the son of a convicted murderer, Gail determines to seek the aid of district attorney John Kent, who is her friend, but she finds the case is beyond either his control or hers. On the way back to her house where her husband is in hiding, Gail comes upon the living double of George Orcutt. This stranger is sitting on a park bench, his mind stunned by a terrific mental shock. Gail determines to palm off on the district attorney this living double of her husband until Orcutt shall have made his escape. She gets the stranger to her house, makes him change clothes and surrenders him to the police as the real George Orcutt. The district attorney and his medical examiners find this false George Orcutt (whom they, of course, believe to be the real George Orcutt), to be mentally incompetent and the stranger is committed to a sanitarium for treatment and observation.

In the meanwhile, the real George Orcutt escapes and goes into hiding. He lives on money sent to him by Gail who is, however, in constant terror lest her deception be detected. To her consternation she receives word from the sanitarium that her "husband" has recovered his health and will be free, and the authorities naturally send him back to what they consider his own house. Gail is forced to accept the stranger into her house as her husband. Her whole salvation rests in the fact that although his body is restored to health he cannot remember anything of his life prior to his commitment to the sanitarium. The stranger naturally assumes that he is George Orcutt and finds himself to be very much in love with the woman he believes to be his wife. Gail also takes a liking to this clean cut, clean living man of whose past she knows nothing. But she is harassed by the necessity of making both the stranger and her friends believe this man is George Orcutt, and at the same time the real George Orcutt in the background.

A newspaper reporter stumbles upon the fact that Gail has imposed upon the district attorney and then he sees the real George Orcutt in a saloon. He so informs the district attorney. That same night, when the reporter and the district attorney are on their way to Gail Orcutt's house to investigate, Orcutt himself goes there to make a demand on Gail for money. He lets himself in by his own key and finally his wife persuades him to go. He hardly has left the room when the stranger enters to consult with Gail about her strange conduct to him and to make a demand that either she cease this attitude or that she permit him to depart with Vance and set up a separate establishment.

From across Riverside Drive where the real Orcutt is hiding until he can again enter the house where he intends to rob his own wife of the large sum of money he sees her put back in the safe, Orcutt sees the stranger enter his wife's room and a quarrel between the two. He again lets himself into the house by a key, drawing a pistol as he does so. He is insane with jealousy. The butler hears steps below and believes a burglar has entered the house. The butler quarrels with Orcutt in a pistol duel in the dark. Almost immediately afterward, the district attorney and the reporter reach the Orcutt residence. Brought face to face with the situation on her own deception has created, Gail tells the story to the stranger and the district attorney of the substitution she had perpetrated. By means of papers in the suit of clothes which he wore when Gail found him, and which she had hidden in the attic, the stranger's identity is learned: Orcutt's body is taken from the house as that of a thief. The district attorney and the reporter agree to remain silent and the strange romance ends in a quiet wedding for Gail and the stranger.

IN SOFT IN A STUDIO (Phunphilms—March 22).—Heinie's lot is pretty rough—doughnuts all he has to munch; Louie's plight is still more tough—hasn't got a thing for lunch. Myrtle is a sculptress fair—see her in her studio; not a model has she there, though she's searched both high and low. Louie gets a mighty start when he gazes at his pal entering the shrine of art with the pretty sculptor gal. Heinie cannot understand what the reason is that he has been kidnapped, so he asks: "What idt iss you vant off me?" "All you have to do is pose—stand still for a minute—wearing scarcely any clothes; there's five hundred dollars in it." "Lofely woman, you're a queen, beautifuller than Venus! I lofe you wid all my bean noddings will come in between us." Well, to make a long story short, Louie pushes his way into the posing class and rouses the anger of his companion-in-crime. The result is a beating for the intruder and a jail term for Heinie.

HOW FLOWERS BREATHE (Pathe—March 25).—This latest educational release, is an interesting and instructive picture. It is taken with the greatest of care, at intervals, and the action of plants which take months to complete are shown in a few moments. Some of our most common flowers are pictured. The geranium leaf is shown growing gradually and with regularity, while the growth of the leaves of the nasturtium goes on rapidly and in a jerky manner. Other phenomena in the life of the flower are shown, and the picture is enhanced by these being done in natural color.

IN THE FRENCH SOUDAN (Picturesque Africa—On the same reel with foregoing).—The French Soudan has many points of interest which are pictured in this subject. Near Timbuktu, a town on the edge of the great Sahara Desert, a caravan halts to get water from an oasis. The peoples inhabiting this part of Africa are always of interest, and their peculiarities in dress and manners are vividly portrayed. The lack of water for agricultural purposes in this region has always been a great drawback to luxuriant vegetation, and the way these men have conquered this natural obstacle makes a most interesting part of the picture.

child whom the chief knows to be an heiress. A letter has been received stating that the girl is being sent to a scheming squire, Morrison, and Joe goes to the squire's home. Before he arrives, however, Morrison has departed with the child, desiring to be rid of her and intending to turn her over to the gypsies.

Back in the camp there is much excitement. The Princess Dora and Joe are in love but their affair is complicated by the jealousy of the chief's aid, Hamilton. The result is a duel with knives and pitchforks, which is interrupted by the approach of a posse seeking to recover the child.

Betty hides in a wagon which is set on fire by the overturning of an oil stove. She flees to a water barrel, which is lassoed from the back of the wagon by a gypsy. As the gypsies flee over a bridge they dynamite it to prevent further pursuit. Their wagon then comes too close to a cliff and goes over. Squire Morrison, in a cask, follows, but luckily drops into the ocean and is washed ashore unharmed. Thrills are piled upon thrills, with the usual happy result. The gypsy lovers are reunited and little Betty comes into her own.

THE RAIDERS (Fine Arts—Five Parts—March 26)—The cast: H. B. Warner, Dorothy Dalton, Henry Belmar, Robert McKim, George Elwell and J. Barney Sherry.

Scott Wells has wasted his inheritance and is a humble clerk in a Wall street broker's office, being superior in the organization only to the office boy. One day in the corridor adjoining the offices he meets David Haldeman, a railroad magnate, and his daughter, Dorothy. From that time he is the young woman's slave, worshipping from afar.

When Haldeman, threatened with a breakdown because of too close application to business, is forced to go to the mountains for a rest, he leaves his affairs in the hands of Jerrold Burnes a notorious schemer. Wells, by accident, discovers that immediately after Haldeman has announced his intention of going away Burnes has summoned several big men into a conference, the object of which is to take advantage of the magnate's absence. A card of invitation to Miss Haldeman's dance is picked up by Wells; he determines to use it and warn the railroad president of the plot.

With a borrowed dress suit Wells appears at the Haldeman mansion just as a jeweled dowager exclaims that she has lost her necklace. The guests are checked off and Wells, unable to explain his presence, is about to be turned over to the police when a servant enters with the jewels. Wells departs without revealing the information he has. Next morning as he dreams of Dorothy, he again determines to thwart the plotters. But Haldeman has gone away and there apparently is no way out until Dorothy furnishes the backing for Wells to trade and hold off the conspirators. Even then the young couple are compelled to make a night auto ride and bring Haldeman back to Wall street just when Burnes and his confederates thought victory and riches were theirs.

HOODOO ANN (Fine Arts Five Parts—March 26)—The cast: Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, William H. Brown, Wilbur Higby, Lovola O'Connor, Mildred Harris, Pearl Elmore, Anna Hernandez, Charles Lee, Elom Lincoln and Robert Lawler.

In all her young life Hoodoo Ann has lived up to her nickname. Nothing has ever gone right for her and from the 13th of the month, when she is left at the Meadowdale orphanage, her troubles increase. Little Goldie, pet of Miss Prudence Scraggs, is allowed to play with a beautiful doll and an adorable kitten, but Ann spends her time scrubbing and scouring. One night the orphanage takes fire and is burned to the ground. Ann, with no malice in her heart, saves Goldie from death in the flames.

All the neighbors are at the blaze, and the Knapps, with no children of their own about Ann. The Vances father and son, take an interest in her, and young Jimmie is soon dividing his time between his studies, he wants to be an artist, and Ann. They become great chums. Then Ann discovers Mr. Knapp's revolver and while fooling with it in the attic it is discharged.

Next door live Sarah and Bill Higgins in a continually quarrelsome atmosphere. Sarah has just left the house vowing that he will never return when Ann rushes in to see what damage her shot had done. Bill is lying on the floor and she thinks she has killed him. Sarah returns and is arrested for the murder of Bill, who is now missing. The unjust accusation moves Ann to make a complete confession and she is about to be arrested when Bill appears.

It develops that the bullet had maimed a stray cat. Jimmie and Ann nurse the animal and Ann is convinced that her future lies in being a model nurse and home maker. She soon becomes Sunshine Ann, a name which sticks long after she has become Mrs. Jimmie Vance.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER No. 1, "Cruel and Unusual"—March 1).

Musty Suffer gets a job as caddy, but performs so poorly that he doesn't hold it long. So he decides to tee off on his own account. He finds that the clubs are too small and calls upon his famous lucky horse-shoe for aid, wishing for larger clubs. A fairy tramp appears and grants his wish. Even then his game is not satisfactory, but he solves the difficulty by wishing for a larger ball, which he gets. He knocks the ball into the clubhouse, ruining the club members' dinner, and later on gets into difficulties with a waiter, who breaks one of the clubs across his fat body.

Stomach pains naturally result, and when Musty sees an advertisement offering free treatment and free board to hook-worm victime, he applies for treatment and gets it. And it is some treatment. He is mauled, pounded, beaten, pummeled, kicked, thrown about, walked upon and otherwise maltreated until the "hook-worm" is forced to give up the ghost. Then, after trapping the hands of his "doctors" in the viselike finger-print machine, Musty appropriates one of the chief doctors' cigars and makes his departure.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 2, "Keep Moving!"—March 8).

Musty gets a job in a grocery store. A female customer makes him show her everything in the place and then buys a five-cent package of crackers. For revenge, Musty eats the artificial grapes on her hat. She catches him at it, throws a basket of apples in his face and leaves. Then a sissy boy buys a ball of yarn for his knitting, and Musty, disgusted at the effeminate qualities of the customer, puts a lighted fire-cracker in the package, with startling results. He meets his match when a cowboy desperado enters and forces him to give up half the contents of the store for five cents.

Soon a drummer happens along. Musty advises the proprietor of the store not to buy from him. This awakens the drummer's ire and he throws a handful of crumpled crackers in Musty's face. Musty, however, has not been idle, and when the drummer puts on his hat to leave, he finds that Musty has filled it full of milk.

After the drummer's departure, Musty decides to have some lunch. By mistake he fills his stomach with tobasco sauce. Naturally he craves water. In trying to get a sprinkling can which is suspended from the ceiling, he pulls down ceiling and all and is consequently discharged.

Leaving the grocery store, Musty goes to a barber shop for a shave, where he is attended by the uneonversational barber, who wears a gag for the protection of his patrons. Musty gets the shave, but the barber puts hair restorer on his face instead of toilet water. When the barber learns that Musty has no money with which to pay for his services, an altercation ensues, during the course of which the barber is arrested and Musty escapes.

Musty next visits a thirst emporium. The proprietor chases a rough customer into the street, and Musty takes charge of the bar and free lunch counter. His attempts at serving free soup to a tough customer are disastrous, and he receives considerable rough handling. During his activities in the saloon he gets his beard saturated with gasoline, and when he gets too near the fire over which the free lunch is steaming an explosion occurs which causes him considerable discomfort, but which also rids him of the troublesome whiskers. Disgusted with his experiences, Musty goes his way.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER—No. 3, "Hold Fast!"—(March 15).

Musty enjoys all the comforts of a fine home during the owner's absence, and is happily snoozing when a band of desperate burglars arrive, bent on pillaging the mansion. With them they bring a huge packing case in which to carry away their loot. Unable to escape through the door, Musty hides in the packing case. Very soon he is smothered beneath a large cargo of pillows, draperies, rugs, furniture, bric-a-brac and other various and sundry articles. The case is then nailed up and carried, Musty and all, to the burglars' den. There Musty is discovered and held a prisoner till morning.

The leader of the burglars runs across Willie Work, another hobo, and conceive the idea of a prize-fight between the two. They are taken aboard a large barge and told: "Youse guys are going to battle, and the loser gets shot at sunrise." A three-round bout then follows, during which Musty and Willie introduce a number of bits of pugilistic strategy never before seen in the prize ring. The fray ends at the finish of the third round, and the two battlers leave the barge together.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER—No. 4, "Going Up!"—(March 22).

and goes to sleep as comfortably as if he were in a Pullman berth. All goes well until the machine runs over a rock and Musty is cast to earth. He rises and hurls away the offending rock, which strikes the bandaged foot of a gouty passer-by. Musty then calmly resumes his nap in the middle of the road, undisturbed by the passing autos, which miss him by inches only.

Dippy Mary arrives upon the scene, and struck by Musty's unnatural beauty, falls in love with him. The result is that she gives him free reign in her employer's mansion during the latter's absence. A waiter arrives with a splendid lunch, which Musty would have enjoyed hugely had not an expressman dropped a trunk on one of the upper floors, causing the plaster to fall from the ceiling onto the repast. Musty tips the waiter with a large, juicy pie, which he hurls into the face of the menial.

A downy bed in the room tempts Musty. He climbs in and falls asleep. His slumber is punctuated with beautiful dreams, during which he bathes in a bath-tub full of beer and makes the acquaintance of several charming damsels. The dreams are disturbed, however, by the serenades of a "little Dutch band" and Musty is forced to drop water, pieces of furniture and various other missiles to persuade the serenaders to depart.

Resuming his slumber, he dreams of a beautiful maid who tempts him with a bumper of sparkling wine. While pursuing the illusion he falls out of the second-story window and bounds into a passing ambulance, in which he is whisked away.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER—No. 5, "Look Out Below"—(March 29).

Musty and his friend Willie Work, after a comfortable night's rest in a convenient henhouse set out in search of adventure. They select a mansion with the intention of burglary, but are frightened away by a militant sawbuck. They are summoned by Mme. Cayenne, a jealously guarded wife who promises them a fine lunch if they will mail a letter to her lover. They agree and the lunch is served. Just as they begin to eat, Senor Cayenne returns. Musty dives out of the second-floor window and hangs from the sill. Willie, who fails to escape, is introduced to Senor as Madame's brother from Kokomo, and royally entertained. The lunch is served to him alone although he is loyal to his friend and makes numerous attempts to slip various dainties to Musty, who remains hanging by his hands from the sill. Willie particularly enjoys the nut course, and uses Musty's head to crack the shells. Even the water in the finger bowls appeals to him after he has flavored it with sugar and lemon. At last he takes his departure, and goes to sleep on the lawn of the house in which he has been entertained.

Morning comes and Willie wakes. He discovers that Musty has been hanging all night from a window only a few feet above the ground. The two of them set out together but Willie spies a free lunch sign and decamps. Musty spies a beautiful maiden dressing in front of a window. The maiden, who is not so beautiful when she turns her face toward one sees him peeping and hurls a water pitcher which strikes Musty on the head. Musty takes this as a gentle hint to leave, and so resumes his travels.

Evening brings him to a lodging house, which advertises lodging for three cents and up. Musty enters and is given a resting place on a rope. The same rope is occupied by others whose snoring prevents our hero from slumbering. He complains to the attendant who induces sleep by hitting Musty over the head with a stuffed club.

When the gentle dawn appears Musty makes his way into a private room, to escape the attendant who is putting everybody out in far from gentle fashion. Even here, however, he finds he cannot escape, for a pile driver descends upon his head, knocking him into the exit chute, through which he is rushed into the street, where he collides with a laborer engaged in mixing mortar. The workman is precipitated into his own product, and Musty hastily decamps.

COSMOFOTOFILM CO.

A CHIP OFF THE OLD BLOCK—(Juvenile Film Corporation, March).—Chip, a poor little newsboy, comes out of a picture house and stands in admiration before a card board statue of Charlie Chaplin. While standing there he meets Little Nell and her sweetheart, John. Chip and Nell undergo the proceedings of "love at first sight," much to John's dissatisfaction. Nell gives Chip a penny as John pulls her away. As they continue their journey Chip looks after them, kisses the coin Nell gave him, sits down before the Chaplin statue and dreams.

His dream introduces him in the miniature role of Charlie Chaplin. After a funny experience with Miss Pantaloons, Chip meets Little Nell, who is dressed in a long skirt and poke bonnet. As they sit spooning on a bench John, dressed as a miniature villain, with a high silk hat and swallow tail coat, sees them and becomes enraged with jealousy. He bribes a tramp to steal Nell, and rid him of his rival. The tramp knocks Chip unconscious and runs off with Nell. He turns Nell over to John and then goes off and sits under a tree.

Chip regains consciousness and discovers the tramp under the tree asleep. He ties the tramp to the tree, hits him on the head with a club and thereby wakes him, and forces him to tell where he took Nell. The tramp confesses. Chip soon finds John and Nell struggling. He rescues her but John draws a knife and pursues them.

After a lively chase, Chip turns the tables on John and overpowers him. He then embraces Nell as they stand over the body of John. The scene fades out as they join arms and walk away. The dream ends. Chip wakes up and finds the manager of the theater shaking him. He rubs his eyes, realizes it was all a dream and runs off.

CHIP'S ELOPEMENT (Juvenile Film Corporation—March).—Chip, a newsboy, while sleeping in a newsboys' home, dreams that he is a real grown up moving picture actor. In the course of his dream he drives an auto to the home of Little Nell and induces her to elope with him. While Nell prepares for the elopement, Chip's rival, dressed as a villain, places a bomb on the cylinders of Chip's auto.

As Chip and Nell drive off in the auto the villain jumps on behind and Nell's father pursues with a horse and buggy. Two "cops" try to stop Chip in his flight, but they fail. The villain falls from behind the auto and is picked up by the "cops," who place him in the wagon with "pa." The villain and "pa" renew the chase.

Meanwhile Chip and Nell arrive at the church and are escorted within by Cupid. The villain and "pa" arrive at the church too late. Pa threatens to punish Chip but Cupid consoles him to a degree of forgiveness. He shakes hands with Chip and scorns the villain. As Chip, Nell and "pa" drive through the gates of Chip's new home, a shower of confetti falls in and around the auto.

Then Chip wakes up only to find that the supposed confetti is none other than feathers flying about his bed. Arousing himself more thoroughly he realizes that he is in the midst of a pillow fight. He soon forgets his dream and jumps into the fight. The matron of the home enters. The newsboys, with the exception of Chip, jump into their beds. The matron catches Chip in the act of throwing a pillow. She grasps Chip and spanks him as the scene fades out and the story ends.

CHIP'S BACKYARD BARN-STORMERS—(Juvenile Film Corporation—Two Parts—March).—Chip and his boy companions give a show in a backyard. Scenery is borrowed from a moving picture studio nearby. Attractive posters are displayed in conspicuous places by Cassi, the business manager, and everything is soon ready for the big show. But just before the first act begins Chip realizes that Mose, the most important character, is absent. He authorizes Cassi to go to Mose's home and use his influence toward getting Mose.

Upon arriving at Mose's home Cassi finds that Mose is destined to spend the day at his Mammy's washtub. Cassi pleads to Mammy, telling her how badly Mose is needed at the show, but his pleading proves in vain. As a last hope Cassi volunteers to take Mose's place at the wringer providing Mammy will let Mose go to the show. Mammy agrees; Cassi relieves Mose. Mose takes his dog and starts off for the performance.

Meanwhile Chip has adopted the role of Charlie Chaplin and has been doing several dances with Little Nell "The Leading Lady." After the dances Chip tries to steal the sweetheart of "Fatty," one of the principal characters. As he runs off with the girl Fatty starts after him, but is checked in his pursuit when he falls through the stage. In the midst of great confusion Fatty is helped to his feet and the curtain is drawn just as Mose arrives with his dog.

During the concluding act of a burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the story shifts back to Cassi at the washtub. He is beginning to realize the great sacrifice he has made, his patience becomes exhausted. By accident he upsets the basket into which the clothes are being wrung. Mammy becomes suddenly enraged and begins to shake him, whereupon Cassi pushes Mammy into the tub and escapes. Mammy vows vengeance as she pursues Cassi.

While getting ready for the final scene Chip unconsciously nails the stage to the back of Farmer Allen's wagon, which is backed against the fence in the adjoining yard. A few minutes later Farmer Allen gets ready to drive to town. While hitching his horse to the wagon, mentioned above, Cassi rushes into the show, followed by Mammy. As Mammy gets up on the stage and begins to punish Fatty, who in the role of Simon Legree is beating Mose, who is made up as Uncle Tom, Farmer Allen gets in his wagon on the other side of the fence and starts to drive off. As a result the whole fence and stage are pulled down and Mammy and the characters are drawn out into Farmer Allen's lot. After realizing what has happened Farmer Allen determines to punish the culprits. Mammy pursues Chip, while the Farmer chases Fatty.

All the "kids" in the audience join in the big chase. Fatty and Chip are soon caught. The children all gather round and laugh heartily while poor Chip and Fatty squirm 'neath the hard spanks of Mammy and the Farmer – and thus the story ends.

CHIP'S RIVALS (Juvenile Film Corporation—March)—While coasting down Kelly's Hill a number of boys snowball Mr. Kelly, who seeks revenge by throwing ashes on the hill. Chip and Cassi run Kelly down with their sled. In a rage Kelly pursues them. In the course of the chase the boys cross an ice pond. When Kelly tries to follow he stumbles and falls through the ice. Kelly frees himself from the ice and starts home, while Chip and Cassi end their chase in front of Little Nell's home.

Little Nell invites Chip and Cassi to come to her. They tell Nell of their adventure with Kelly. Meanwhile Kelly goes home and hangs his overalls on the line to dry. While Nell chats with Chip and Cassi, Joe dressed in a new Boy Scout uniform appears upon the scene and attracts Nell's attention.

Kenneth attired in the costume of a cowboy enters and conquers the affection of Nell. Cassi gets an idea and departs. Chip is very much peeved at Nell's attention to him. He demands that Nell give him back the chewing gum which he gave to her. Nell gives him the gum and Chip leaves. In the meantime Cassi has donned an elaborate Indian suit. When he makes his appearance in front of Nell he succumbs to the "Red Feather" and adores Cassi. "Cowboy Kenneth" and "Scout Joe" plot to win back Nell's love. Kenneth tells Joe he has a penny and proposes that they buy Nell some candy.

While Chip passes Kelly's home he sees Kelly's overalls on the line. He knows that all is fair in love and war and fears advances of the foe to "borrow" Kelly's overalls. He also succeeds in obtaining an old coat, shoes and other clothes and disguises himself. Upon arriving at the candy store Kenneth and Joe acquire the confection to win back Nell's love. Stepping on the scale of the store Kenneth gives Joe a penny's weight of the candy and says: "You give her that much and I'll give her this much." Joe becomes peeved but being for the time entertained he gives up the argument and starts off with Kenneth for Nell's home.

In the meanwhile Chip places some red hair upon his upper lip with the "evidence" and has attired himself as a miniature Charlie Chaplin. Back in Kelly's yard Mr. Kelly misses his overalls and starts in the direct Vowing vehemently he starts out to search for the culprit. Upon arriving at Little Nell's home Chip proves to be in Nell's estimation "most finest feathers." When Cassi observes the interesting Chip kicks Cassi into the doll carriage which starts to roll down the street.

Simultaneously Kelly, Kenneth and Joe appear at the gate and are run down by Cassi. When Kelly greets Cassi he (Cassi) points to Chip and says: "He's to blame, he pushed me." Kelly makes a dash for Chip, but Chip dodges him, and escapes. Kelly follows. When Percival saunters forth for his morning walk a negro baby asks the time. Percival, who carries a wrist watch on his ankle, willingly obliges the little colored boy and places his foot upon a wall and looks at the watch upon his ankle. At the same time Chip enters, followed by Kelly. In an effort to catch Chip who ducks under Percival's leg Kelly upsets Percy and they both fall to the ground. They are trodden upon by Cassi, Kenneth and Joe, who continue to pursue Chip. Regaining his feet Kelly continues the chase. When Percival recovers the little colored boy, who has looked on an interested observer, goes up to him and asks: "What time did you say it am?" Percy, thoroughly peeved, pushes the little darky into the street and begins to skip away.

Meanwhile the boys have caught Chip; they hold him until Kelly arrives and begins to spank him. Little Nell appears in the background and looks sadly on while Kelly punishes Chip to the enjoyment of the other "kids." Wiping a tear from her eye, Nell journeys up to Chip just as Kelly brutally throws him into the snow and walks off with the other boys. As Chip lies in the snow and cries, Little Nell bends over him, taps him upon the shoulder and says "Don't cry, Chip, I like you." Chip's sad face brightens into a smile and as the story ends they cuddle close to each other.

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS

OUR representatives who are constantly calling upon exhibitors throughout the country merely show their wares. What the prospective buyer sees upon the occasion of the initial demonstration is invariably sufficient to make a sale if the exhibitor is in the market for a screen.

THE salesman makes no promises which he is powerless to fulfill. He DOES promise superior projection results—and THE RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN "delivers the goods" from the very first minute of its installation. He DOES give a five-year guarantee—and a reputable company stands back of it.

Jed's indifference to her charms piques Dorothy and she sets about to accomplish his awakening.

Mary, Jed's sister, idolizes her big brother and intuitively resents the allurements of the boarder. Dorothy accomplishes Jed's awakening and for the first time in his life he kisses a woman. One day during Jed's absence, Dorothy's husband arrives unexpectedly and finding her in the hammock, kisses her, just as Jed returns. There is a fight and then comes the unmasking. the hurt Jed has received, swears to get even with Dorothy. Jed, unable to bear the tortures of his blasted hopes, shoots himself, and Mary dedicates her life to vengeance.

Ten years later, she is a changed woman and succeeds in getting introduced into Gordon's home as his secretary. She deliberately makes love to Gordon and Dorothy finds her husband and his secretary in each other's arms. Then Mary realizes that she loves Gordon, and realizes that the two-edged sword of revenge has turned in her hand and cut deep. She goes away to the little country home in bitterness.

Some time later, while attending the motor races held in that section annually, Dorothy is dangerously injured and Evelyn slightly hurt by a swerving racing car. They are carried to Mary's home, and shortly after, Dorothy overhears Gordon again confess his love to Mary, and also learns for the first time that Jed died by his own hand because of her (Dorothy's) heartlessness. She is in a critical condition at the time and the shock hastens her death. Before passing away she begs her husband's forgiveness and joins his hand in that of Mary's.

MR. JACK INSPECTS PARIS (No. 6 of "Frank Daniels' Comedies"—Vitagraph—March 27).—The cast: Mr. Jack (Frank Daniels); Paul, his nephew (Garry McGarry); Fifi (Marguerite Forrest). Author, Fred H. James. Produced by C. Jay Williams.

Upon receiving his diploma, Paul Renard, a young medical student in Paris, is cabled $5,000 by his rich uncle, Mr. Jack, of New York, to fit up an up-to-date office. Paul is delighted, but instead of using it for a new office he spends it on "Fifi," a cabaret queen. Uncle sends word that he is coming to inspect the new offices.

Rendered desperate Paul hires a furnished doctor's office on credit. But Uncle decides to arrive a little earlier than stated, in order to have a quiet peep at "gay Paree" beforehand. He does so and through a friend, is introduced to "Fifi." Paul, knowing nothing of this, has hired a bunch of loafers to act as "patients." By chance, Uncle is mistaken for one of the patients. Learning the whole crowd are fakirs, he decides to see the thing through.

Now Paul has never seen his Uncle, and does not recognize him, but Uncle recognizes him. Consequently, Uncle is greatly enlightened as to his nephew's opinion of him. Greatly enraged by the ludicrous incidents which follow, Uncle goes to Fifi for comfort. There Paul finds him and after a grand expose all around, they are both thrown out by the valet, make up and become good friends.

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

PASSERS-BY (Equitable—Five Parts—March 20).—The cast: Peter Waverton (Charles Cherry); Beatrice Dainton (Marguerite Skirvin); Margaret Summers (Mary Charleson); Lady Hurley (Kate Sarjeanston); Peter Summers (Donald Kite). Directed by S. E. V. Taylor.

Peter Waverton is engaged to Beatrice, the orphan niece of his half-sister's (Mrs. Hurley) husband. He is quite a little older than the girl, but she adores him and he is deeply devoted to her. But again and again the memory of Margaret, the woman he had loved and lost, eight years ago, comes to him.

Margaret had been governess at Mrs. Hurley's house. Mrs. Hurley discovered the love between her half brother and Margaret and decided to break up the affair, no matter by what means. Through her lawyer she manager to make it imperative that Peter should go to Europe, and intercepted the note of farewell and explanation that Peter wrote to Margaret.

Mrs. Hurley led Margaret to believe that Peter had deserted her, and dismissed the girl from the house. On Peter's return from Europe, Mrs. Hurley answered his eager inquiries about Margaret's whereabouts by showing him faked-up pictures, letters, etc., which would lead him to believe that the girl had run off with some notorious crook. Peter put detectives on her trail, but it was all to no use. Mrs. Hurley did everything in her power to throw Beatrice and Peter together, the result being the present engagement.

Returning from a ball at his fiance's house, Peter brings into his house two forlorn tramps and wines and dines them, much to their astonishment. As the butler goes to let the tramps out, he finds a strange woman on the doorstep, who has lost her way in the fog. He brings her in, and so Margaret and Peter meet again after eight years. All is explained. Margaret tells Peter of their son, little Peter, who has been her joy in life. When Margaret goes out to work in the daytime, the housekeeper at her boarding house has cared for the little boy. Peter expresses his great desire to see his son. Peter insists upon Margaret's spending the night in the room to which the housekeeper takes her.

In the morning Peter sends one of the tramps he befriended the night before to bring little Peter to him. Margaret encourages the child to be friendly with its father. The tramp takes Peter out for a walk on a wild hunt for rabbits, and the whole household gets upset, thinking the child is lost.

Beatrice and Mrs. Hurley come to take Peter to a reception. Mrs. Hurley is furious to see Margaret with Peter and the whole story of Mrs. Hurley's treachery is told to Beatrice. Little Peter is brought home and Beatrice learns that he is Peter's child. Beatrice gives up Peter, although she knows he still loves her, because both she and Peter realize that his place is with Margaret and his son.

THE BIRTH OF CHARACTER (Five Parts—March).—An alchemist, about to be burned at the stake, tells his captors that some day the teachings of the alchemists will be generally believed. The alchemist taught that the human character goes through a process of evolution and in the effort to conquer conditions about him, man finds his birth of character.

Harry is in love with Grace. She is the good influence in his life. His companions influence him in the other direction. Large losses at cards make him desperate so that at a dance he is momentarily tempted to steal a diamond-studded hair ornament. The impulse passes immediately and he returns it, explaining that it dropped to the floor and be picked it up. Unfortunately a witness to both the impulse and the quick wit in pulling himself out of the dilemma was Darby, a master criminal. Later Harry is dragged to a gambling joint by his friends; the place is raided through Harry's bitter rival, Arthur Vane, from whom he rescues Alice, a girl who assists her father in the management of the place. All the boys are arrested except Harry, whom Alice saves by means of a secret door. He thus meets her father, who proves to be Darby. This leads Harry to his becoming the tool of Darby, and he is on the downward path.

Harry and Grace become engaged. She does not know the life into which he is drifting. A dealer in objects shows them a valuable necklace. This later is procured by Harry in a successful burglary. He is then sent to a fashionable house-party by Darby to see what loot may be obtained there. Grace is a visitor at the same house party, and it is she who shoots him, not knowing his identity. Discovering who it is she saves him—the wound is What Is More Important Than Perfect Projection?

EXHIBITORS are realizing more and more the importance of perfect projection. Every day we see evidence of this. It is encouraging and shows that the Exhibition end of the motion picture industry is on a firmer basis than ever. We have contended that perfect projection is the keystone of a theatre's success.

The greatest example of the old axiom, "Penny wise and pound foolish," is the exhibitor who looks for the cheapest. The best should be considered none to good.

THE experience the Kleine Optical Company has gained in handling projection equipment exclusively for over twenty years has proved valuable to thousands of exhibitors. Our engineering department is at your service always and each installation we make has our personal attention following our aim for better projection.

Our stock includes everything for the theater—Everything that has merit. We do not exploit experiments.

only a scratch, but with scorn tells him she never wants to see him again. Harry then determines to make a man of himself, surrenders, and is imprisoned to pay the penalty of his crime. As an ex-convict he is welcomed only in the underworld. Alice, because she has fallen in love with him, unselfishly determines to help him, goes to Grace, pleads with her to overlook the past and give Harry a chance. Grace finally agrees to do so, and Alice sends Harry to her. He obtains a position and is rapidly demonstrating a real character. Refusing to have anything further to do with crooked work, he is threatened and only saved from trouble by the unselfish Alice. However, he repays this sacrifice with an open and cruel snub when with Grace he meets her on the street. Her love turns to hate. The master willingly lures him to his den, Alice maneuvres to lure Grace to the underworld, also so that she may be a witness to the punishment of her ungrateful lover. The situation works up to the dramatic climax where Darby is about to kill Harry when the police, summoned by Grace through a ruse, break in and she and Harry are saved.

FOX FILM CORPORATION.

A WIFE'S SACRIFICE (March 27).—Peppo and Gorgone, brother and sister, destroy the death certificates of Hannibal and Claudia Palmieri, and lay claim to the fortune of twenty million francs left by the elder Palmieri. They journey to Paris and place their fraudulent case in the hands of a law firm. Reduced to practically their last penny by the cost of the trip, they have to exercise their wits in order to maintain an existence until there can be some adjustment of their claim.

When Count de Mornay, a wealthy diplomat, and his wife return to Paris from India, Peppo and Gorgone, now known as Hannibal and Claudia Palmieri, decide to cultivate their acquaintance. Claudia determines to ensnare the wealthy count if possible and Hannibal is to aid her by besmirching the name of the countess and causing the count to turn against his wife.

The countess, while opening and answering the mail of her mother, Madame de la Marche, comes across a letter from Robert Burel, who claims to be the illegitimate son of Madame de la Marche. Burel demands money on threat of making known his identity to the world. The countess is at first unable to credit the statement of Burel, but she finally decides to see him in person and question him.

While she is on her way to Burel's quarters she is followed by Hannibal Palmieri, who assumes that she is going to see her lover. When the countess, satisfied that Burel is her half-brother, pledges her necklace to obtain the money which Burel demands, Hannibal concludes that she is engaging in the transaction to supply her lover with money.

Hannibal transmits the news to her sister, Claudia, and together they inform the count of what they have learned. The count intercepts the necklace, returns to his apartment and finds the countess and Burel, embracing each other. He demands an explanation from the countess, who makes a supreme sacrifice and remains silent rather than tell the truth and admit the early sin of her mother, Madame de la Marche. The count kills Burel, divorces the countess whom he believes has been guilty of infidelity, and marries Claudia.

After a lapse of time, Pauline, daughter of the count and his first wife, returns from India. She attracts the attention of Hannibal, the count's new brother-in-law, who makes known his desire to marry her. Pauline does not care for Hannibal, but her father insists on the marriage. The marriage contract is about to be signed when Drake, one of the witnesses to be, who is also a government agent, exposes Hannibal and Claudia as impostors, declaring that the real heirs to the Hannibal fortune have long been dead. In the last few scenes of the play the innocence of the real countess is established and Claudia and Hannibal pay the penalty for their sinful conspiracy.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

HER GREAT PRICE (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: Agnes Lambert (Mabel Taliaferro); Tom Leighton (Henry Mortimer); Larry, a writer (Richard Barbee); Henry, the Trinity painter (George Fauncefort); Tony, a sculptor (William Cahill); Ruth Beresford (Jeanette Horton); Mrs. Ewing (Ruth Chester). Directed by Edwin Carewe.

Agnes Lambert, an ambitious young writer, is in the depths of despondence as New Year's Eve approaches. She is deeply in debt and that day three manuscripts were returned which she submitted with hopes to as many magazines for publication. Larry, Tony and Henry, three Bohemians of the artists' quarter in which Agnes lives, invite her to their celebration, but find she is in no mood to join them. They tell her they are going out, but are expecting a friend, Tom Leighton, a wealthy sculptor, just returned from Europe. Larry returns and encourages her, saying she must write a story with "a new twist."

After she is alone Agnes determines to end her life. She is about to raise a drink of poison to her lips when Leigton unexpectedly interrupts her. He is startled and seeks an explanation. Agnes tells him of her consistent failure, and how Fate has always worked against her. Left motherless when a babe, she was adopted by a wealthy woman, with whom she lived until she was thirteen. Then the daughter in the home, her own age, filled with envy and jealousy, demanded that she be sent away. Reluctantly, the mother of the girl carried out her desire.

Agnes then explained how three artists, known as "The Trinity," found a place for her. They were attracted by her ability to weave romances and encouraged her to write. Leighton is strongly interested in the girl's story, and makes a strange bargain with her. He tells her he will advance her $50,000 if she will agree to have her life insured in his favor for that amount. Then at the end of the year if she still considers herself a failure she can carry out her original intention of suicide. She agrees to this remarkable proposal.

During the months that follow Agnes and Leighton see a great deal of each other and both find a strong fascination in being in each others' company. She still finds she is unable to write marketable stories, and Leighton induces her to take up the study of sculpture with him. It is while Agnes is thus engaged that she learns of Leighton's engagement to marry Ruth Beresford, whom he has met in Europe. Ruth is the girl that had cast Agnes adrift from her mother's home several years before. Agnes is broken-hearted and goes to Ruth to ask her to give up Leighton. She arrives at Ruth's home following an accident at a lawn fete in which Ruth is blinded through the explosion of some fireworks. Overcome with pity, she leaves without an explanation. Ruth learns the truth from Leighton later. She leaves him in rage. Leighton hurries to Agnes and confesses his love for her.

Agnes seeks seclusion from her former friends and goes among the poor, administering to them. At the end of the year she returns to the studio to carry out her bargain of death. It is here that the story takes a remarkable "new twist."

PLAIN FACTS AND TO THE POINT

ABOUT

Speer Carbons

Clarion, Pa., January 12th, 1916.

Gentlemen:—

Replying to your letter as to our opinion of "Speer Carbons" will say that we are more than pleased with them for three reasons:—First, they are cheap in price. For the past year we have been paying practically double your price for carbons. Second, they furnish a fine light, enabling us to project a clear, white picture. The carbon at all times seems to burn evenly without any of that "sputtering" effect. Third, they last far longer than any other carbons used by us. By actual test, on our Power's 6-A, one of your 5/8 x 10" carbons with 40 AMP. D. C. currents passing through it, lasted 10 hrs. and 8 min. The last three hours, carbon savers were used. Without question, our future orders will be for Speer Carbons.

Yours truly,
Orpheum Theatre,
L. V. Hepinger, Mgr.

THE BIRTH OF CHARACTER

WON THIS CRITICISM WHICH APPEARED IN THE LONDON KINEMATOGRAPH & LANTERN WEEKLY FEB. 17, 1916

" "The Birth of Character" was produced by Claridge Films, and is the second example of their work to be seen on this side of the Atlantic. We have, therefore, much pleasure in testifying to the general excellence of the photography, acting and stage management, which are quite equal to the best that comes from America. The settings include some pleasant river-side and country views, and ball room and other indoor scenes of much luxury and magnificence."

We show our pictures on a cloth of gold—the celebrated Minusa Gold Fibre Screen—the most expensive screen in the world.

Send for this free slide and show it as often as you can. If your patrons know that you have the finest screen to be had, they will better appreciate the show.

Always—invariably—the finest and best patronized theatres use Minusa Gold Fibre Screens.

Five thousand theatres throughout the U. S. A. are now equipped with these Anderson Method-Gold Fibre Screens.

These exhibitors appreciate the merit of the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen and realize that it offers the best projection surface to be had.

If this were not true, why would so many demand the Minusa Gold Fibre in preference to all others—particularly when it costs them more than any other screen?

The public are beginning to appreciate the difference in projection screens and that is one good reason why the theatre with the Minusa Gold Fibre Screen will continue to be the best patronized.

'A MIGHTY TOWER OF STRENGTH

ON the regular Universal Program every week in the year you will find more genuine stars in really fine plays than on all other programs combined. By star we mean a name that is a genuine box-office attraction. Playing a leading part in a picture or two does not make a star. Continued good work that wins the public; genuine ability and a personality that makes for an actor or actress millions of friends among the fans—that is the Universal test of a star's calibre. Look at the monster showing which follows, constituting the features for the week beginning April 17, and you will realize that to get the true star quality you must tie up to the Universal Program.

Cleo Madison in "Her Bitter Cup." Twelfth Red Feather Production. Directed by Cleo Madison and Joe King. Released April 17. A daring and unusual photodrama which gives this great emotional actress a marvelous opportunity. Poor and of lowly birth, Cleo sacrifices her womanly honor to enable her to help her friends among the weak and down-trodden. She leads a strike and rescues a miserly factory owner from his burning building. She discards the man who wrought her downfall. He is the brother of the man she loves and marries. The miser is their father. Plot, situations and scenes are unusual in the extreme. The visualization of the dope fiend's dream that he has crucified Cleo is one of the most daring scenes ever filmed. A tremendous production.

Herbert Rawlinson in a two-reel Gold Seal Society Drama, with Francella Billington. Directed by Wm. Worthington. Released April 18. Every fan knows that Herbert Rawlinson is a handsome, virile, vigorous and energetic actor who puts the punch into his work that gets over big. Herbert is traveling. He stops off to be best man for a cousin. He proves himself so far the best man that he captures the little bride. All sorts of complications keep up the interest, and the story is big enough to pad out another reel or two. A big picture, clean, wholesome and boiled down to the shortest possible footage—that's the Universal Program standard.

"Royal Love." Three-reel Romantic Victor Drama. Released April 19. When first shown this magnificent picture was in four reels packed with interest; but the film editor said "Cut," and it is on the program in three reels so crowded with action that it will prove a winner wherever shown. Fight for love and a throne; a woman's choice between duty and her heart's desire, furnish the themes for one of the very best romantic plays of the season. Realistic settings and lavish staging give an enjoyable atmosphere to the picture. An enormous production even for the Universal Program.

"Oh, What a Whopper!" Two-reel Baseball Comedy. Big U. Released April 20. You've heard of baseball nuts, of course; if you want to see one in action see this hilarious laugh producer. Mr. Baseball Nut creates a riot at the ball game and is rescued from a mob of frenzied fans by a bunch of cops who land him in a cell. His wife bails him out and he solemnly raises his right hand and says "Never again," just as though he meant it. A picture that will send any audience into spasms of laughter.

King Baggot in "The Haunted Bell." With Edna Hunter. Two-reel Imp Mystery Drama. Directed by Henry Otto. Released April 21. What would you think if you had a bronze bell of odd design but no special value; if a man offered you a thousand dollars for it; then, when you were puzzling over that fact the bell began striking the hours? If you discovered a dead man in your library, and the bell—GONE? The fans know what King Baggot can do with a picture like this and they enjoy Edna Hunter's beauty and fine acting, too. By the way, Miss Hunter was chosen from among all the famous screen beauties to represent the moving picture industry in the Shakespeare Tercentennial in New York City this coming June. Big evidence of more big value on the Big U Program.

"The Passing of Hell's Crown," with Harry D. Carey and Olive Fuller Golden. Thrilling Western Drama. 101 Bison. Directed by Jacques Jaccard. Released April 22. If the "$2 Picture" people produced this screen drama they would pad it three reels and choke it down your throat, first carefully relieving you of all your surplus cash. The public is NOT tired of Westerns. It is tired only of ham actors in cowboy clothes who can't ride, or act, posing on livery nags on the outskirts of their studio town. When Harry Carey and his band of Rough Riders appear in a Western you get the thrilliest pictures ever filmed and human stories that make friends for your house and make your nickels grow to dollar size. Book Universal Westerns every chance you get.

Ben Wilson in "His World of Darkness." With Clara Beyers and Charles Ogle. Three-reel Imp Society Drama with a heart punch. Directed by Ben Wilson. Released April 23. Let's suppose that you are happily married. Suddenly you are stricken blind. Your best friend takes advantage of you and steals the affections of your wife. You recover your sight unknown to them and learn of their treachery. If you could conceive what you would do under these circumstances you might possibly guess how it is worked out in one of the most novel and startling situations Ben Wilson has ever staged. A picture that will hold any audience spellbound. Fully up to the Universal's high program standard.

In the days of Nero in ancient Rome maidens were sacrificed to wild beasts to make sport for the populace. This unusual picture from the story by WALLACE IRWIN depicts the modern sacrifice of young womanhood to the wild beasts of lust. The magnificent staging, tense situations, fine acting and lavish production of this picture mark it as unusual.

Are You In Doubt?

You have your problems, Mr. Exhibitor, no use trying to hide 'em!

You are casting about for Pictureplays with Brains—you are searching for Productions that bring results!

Selig Pictureplays, released through General Film Service, bring results. This is not our statement but is the sentiment of many live Exhibitors.

Word of mouth advertising is the greatest of all exploitation. "My patrons are now calling for Selig pictures, they bring good business these days," is a common expression.

Try the Selig program. You've always hoped you could get hold of a program which would take things off your hands and produce results.

Experiment no longer! Take our "hunch" this one time! Try Selig productions which include "WIVES OF THE RICH," a Diamond Special, and "THE BEAUTY HUNTERS," a Curwood comedy with James Bradbury.

Standardization

WHAT IT MEANS TO THE EXHIBITOR

It means that photoplays are produced under a definite system, not thrown together in a haphazard manner.

It means that all must come up to the ideal, up to a standard quality, to be released.

It means that ALL plays must be excellent, not some good, some fair and some poor.

It means you can rely on such plays, knowing they are sure to please your spectators.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH

Across The Border

When General Pershing led the American Cavalry across the border, one of his camp followers was a HEARST-VITAGRAPH camera-man.

This insures at least a dozen more scoops within the next few weeks which will be just as far ahead of all competitors as the "fifty-four hour" beat at Columbus, New Mexico.

Couriers are already stationed along the line from Casa Grandes to El Paso in order to insure prompt delivery of this up-to-the-minute service.

———o———

When you are reading these lines, a HEARST-VITAGRAPH camera-man will be shipping pictures of the Hell holocaust at Verdun.

———o———

There is a section for peaceful people:

The smartest fashions on New York's most beautiful models.

Cartoons of "Mr. and Mrs. Joy" and "Old Man Gloom"—by Tom Powers—or, the "KRAZY KAT" adventures by George Herriman—are always ready to hand you a laugh.

———o———

War news—world news—fashions—and fun—

It is no wonder that successful exhibitors demand the HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS REEL and will take no other.

"THE BOLDEST WORD"

PERHAPS the strongest endorsement which any moving picture service can receive is the number of representative exhibitors who are using that service.

To those who arrive at facts through the medium of figures, the following record, therefore, will be more eloquent than words:

Total number of moving picture theatres in Pittsburg	120	Average number of V-L-S-E subjects shown daily in Pittsburg theatres . .	28
Houses charging 10c admission or more (approximately one half)	60	Total number of "downtown houses" charging 10c or more	5
Total number of houses charging 10c or more served by Big Four	51	Total number of "downtown houses" served by V-L-S-E	5

None but a service which is scoring, and scoring high for its patrons, could consistently point to such records, of which this is but a single illustration of conditions prevailing throughout the country.

Such evidence places Big Four features in a position where failure to avail yourself of their true and tried drawing powers is a challenge to your best interests.

Can you afford to ignore it?

We never could get any business on Monday before, so had expected to move up bookings on your features to Tuesday, so that we could draw larger crowds on them.

But now has a miracle been wrought. We find that your features will draw business even on Monday where we could never get any before.

It seems to us that this certainly is a compliment to you. Now we want you to give us additional bookings on Friday also.

Now however, we are having very satisfactory houses on this night -- in fact, outside of the serials, we have never used any pictures which have brought us better business.

"The newest Pathé serial has performed its first duty admirably; it has aroused the interest and has kept it in suspension. The story promises to be an absorbing one, and it is so presented as to make all of its points tell. The action is sharp and fast, but more than all it is presented by a cast of players which have made themselves popular all over the country. They include Pearl White, Creighton Hale, and Sheldon Lewis, and the trio is or should be enough to fill many a house where 'The Iron Claw' is shown. The serial should have a drawing power as great if not greater than any the Pathé people have yet issued."— Harvey S. Thew in "The Motion Picture News" of March 4th.

"Practice has made the Pathé Company notably pro-icient in the production of serial photoplays. Through ong experience, beginning with the renowned 'Perils of 'auline', directors and scenario writers connected with 'athé have learned the difficult art of telling a story in nstallments so that each release is complete in itself, yet n essential part of the extended plot. The impression eft by the first two episodes of 'The Iron Claw' is that it ids fair to become the most popular serial made by 'athé····We should say that a winning combination is en-aged in producing this story of mystery and thrills····no xhibitor need fear 'The Iron Claw.'"— Lynde Denig in "The Moving Picture World" of March 4th.

Facts and Comments

DURING the hearing on the Wheeler Censorship bill at Albany the chairman of the Assembly committee on education, a legislator of an extreme rural type, gave utterance to this significant remark: "We believe here that the moving pictures ought bear their share of taxation." Immediately the chairman was informed of the fact that exhibitors are slowly being taxed to death now, whereupon he intimated that the legislature proposed to go after the manufacturers. In legislative circles, which largely means in rustic circles, the opinion has taken root that the motion picture men are wallowing in currency. When the writer of these lines informed the committee that most producers were operating without profits and that scarcely thirty per cent. of the exhibitors were making more than a decent livelihood, he was met with superior smiles indicating extreme incredulity. These Solons were too parliamentary to call the writer a plain liar, but there is no doubt that they felt like it. To what extent are we ourselves responsible for this crass and dangerous ignorance of the average legislator? Frankly speaking we believe that it is the duty of the legislator to inform himself fully on every subject he attempts to legislate on. The attitude of the Albany legislator was shown by the remark of the chairman of the committee on education, when he said to the motion picture men: "I can just give an hour and no more."

THE production of films in the belligerent countries of Europe has practically come to a standstill. Leon Gaumont, in an interesting interview in this week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, says France and England have produced but very little, adding that "this war seems to have been made for America." In the last four months or so several producers and importers from Italy have been here confirming Mr. Gaumont's statements as far as Italy is concerned. The Latin-American market is suffering from a lack of films. Its sources of supply were principally France and Italy. It seems incredible that even at this moment Latin-America is still looking for its supply of films to London. It seems equally incredible that many American-made films are still reaching Latin-America by way of London. With the import of American films into Europe constantly made more difficult with the crying need of films in South America why do our producers hesitate to enlarge their market by an appeal to South America? Cine Mundial, the splendid Spanish edition of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, points the way. It is eager to be of service to the American producer and exporter of films and it is able to perform this service quickly and effectively.

IT IS most refreshing to note that exhibitors all over the country have started a tremendous "drive" against the censorship salients in Washington and elsewhere. News comes from New England that the exhibitors there, following the advice of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, are circulating petitions against the Smith-Hughes censorship bill, Pittsburgh has become the center of great activities against the Breitinger regime, and in Ohio the theaters are using the screens for a determined and concerted assault against the pernicious practice. This is as it should be. We cannot gain anything by dickering with the enemy or compromising first principles.

IS THE exhibitor "paying the damage most of the time?" A friend and reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD seems to think so. Writing. from Pasadena, California, our correspondent inveighs against the poster evil, saying that the exhibitor pays the damage. He is a successful and practical manager of a motion picture theater and this is what he says, among other things: "Some of us live and do business in communities where critics are plentiful, where agitators talk censorship seven days in the week and they love to point to the loud and sensational poster in front of the local theater, whether or not the picture represented is undesirable. Certainly the producers could help to kill this censorship bug by giving us clean pictures and unquestionable films."

Picture Composition*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE impressionist who paints may attempt to convey sensation by conflicting lights and colors irrespective of theme. He may only be in revolt against accepted principles. Whatever his motive, and he may be both capable and sincere, it will not do to attempt impressionism in moving pictures until it is better defined among the painters.

Off-hand impressions, whether of nature or of society, are apt to be superficial. They may easily be misleading when a scene is glimpsed without study of its elements, when a group of people is characterized without examination of its individual members. The dreary plain may be as true to nature as the forest and stream, as the bold shore and breaking waves, yet one may repel and the other attract. There is an exacting sense of beauty within us, and so common as to be in evidence among all classes of people.

As we are compelled to closely study the real to make the romantic plausible, so a purely technical examination of prosaic details in a scene to be pictured may well result in a general effect highly inspirational. The word "technical" need cause no alarm, nor should it be confused with the merely stilted. The idea is to acquire a certain amount of skill in applying esthetic judgment and taste to picture composition.

A lack of "picture eye" is most noticeable in news periodicals exhibited on the screen. The camera man not only leaves it almost entirely to chance where his point of view shall be taken, but his selection of material usually shows lack of judgment. He dwells on the unimportant and the uninteresting, while the vital is merely glimpsed or left out entirely. About the only time he portrays the amusing is when he attempts the tragic.

A notable example was first announced on the screen as "Awful Fire in Saint Louis." Over two thousand people in the audience watched a lot of smoke tinted red, while expectation ran high of witnessing some exciting rescues. What did the camera man find awful about the conflagration? Ah! The smoke parted and the walls of a building were seen. On them, set forth in bold print, was a sign whose only visible part was the word "BREWERY." Two thousand people roared, though the fire may have seemed a tragedy to the camera man.

Strange as it may seem, the very men who regard the burning of a brewery as an "Awful Fire" almost invariably point the camera down at the water when photographing scenery from a boat moving along some picturesque river or lake. This sacrifice of land and sky to an element which the camera man may concede to be useful for bathing purposes might be classified as a "waterscape," but his pictures have the appearance of having been trimmed too much on the top for nice balance.

If emphasis is to be placed on a character in the foreground of an exterior where a spreading scene is shown, a man in the closeup watching remote action, such as a conflict, place him a little to the right of the center, his immediate environment to the right of the picture, if the effect of that conflict on him is of first importance, while it is glimpsed to the left in the remote distance. There are virtually two lines of action demanding attention, and there is involved a question of centering interest on the more important of the two. The near figure is intensified by isolation, the idea of the closeup, yet the eye may take in action profoundly affecting the near figure, action set aside in a field of its own that it may not distract.

Millions of people have approached New York City from nearly all points of the compass by water, and millions have noticed wondrous effects of light and shade, especially among tall buildings grouped at the Battery, which seem to escape all photographers of motion. One camera man did fairly well after several trials from four view points on a Staten Island ferryboat coming up the bay. The first two were taken from the upper deck, the others from the main deck, all in slanting sunlight.

The first was of wide horizon, embracing even the badly-placed Statue of Liberty. The second and nearer one, like the first, exactly centered the Battery group and fastened attention upon it because no vessels of importance intervened. The third centered on a building made prominent by some deep shadows back of it, giving no view of the water to distract attention and preserving an ample sky. The last shot up from close in shore, still preserving the sky line and accentuating the great height of towering structures.

The passing of a white Sound steamer would have distracted attention in any one of these. It would have loomed into prominence, and the eye is often so attracted by light objects in the foreground as to give inadequate consideration to more important objects in a darker background. Such was the case in picturing a duel between principals through a break in a hedge near which some recumbent vagrants became involuntary witnesses of the affair. The scene was taken from the west side of the hedge in the afternoon and embraced both witnesses and principals. The sun shone on them all and lighted up visible portions of the hedge on either side of the picture, giving distracting prominence to it and to the unimportant vagrants.

A striking effect could have been obtained in the morning. Those secretly watching the combat would have been in the dark shadow of the hedge, and the latter would have formed two sides of a heavy frame for vital action, in the background now thrown by contrast into bold relief. Attention, doubly attracted by the center and by the high lights, would have been concentrated upon the main action while entirely conscious of subordinate details in the foreground.

Actual screen portrayals have been thus far used to show that the object of highest value in a picture should be given emphasis even to the point of sacrificing others of lower value, but there are cases where the principal object cannot be perfectly centered, as in a large ensemble, and, at the same time, be free from distracting influences. It is better to give up centering in any such case and isolate the important unit, even at the extreme edge of the picture, and depend upon this isolation and contrast, remembering that if the figure is light it is intensified in proportion to the amount of dark background against which it is shown.

The application of elementary principles to the arrangement of groups and lighting of scenes does not mean that they constitute a set of hard-and-fast rules for use in all sorts of cases, but that they may prove helpful to those who desire to convey some of the delight they feel when they chance upon some beautiful effect in one of nature's own pictures accidentally composed.

United Action Needed

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT MUST be a source of satisfaction to all exhibitors doing business in the State of New York to learn that two bills have been introduced at Albany to allow children under sixteen to visit motion picture theaters during certain hours in the afternoon unaccompanied by parents. No prediction is ventured here as to their fate. Similar bills aiming at the same relief have been introduced before and never left the committees to which they had been referred.

There is reason to believe, however, that the men behind these bills will push them with determination. Who is back of these bills? We are glad to say it is the organized exhibitor of the city and state of New York. The state and local leagues have attended to the drafting of these bills and have placed them in the hands of influential legislators in the Assembly and in the Senate. The bills were unanimously endorsed at the recent state convention at Albany.

It is well to bear in mind that the law regulating or rather forbidding the admission of unescorted minors under the age of sixteen into the motion picture theaters is a state law and therefore applicable in every motion picture theater from Montauk Point to the shores of Lake Erie. The law has not been enforced with even a semblance of fairness and consistency. In many of the smaller towns, and especially in the rural communities, it has become a dead letter. There is not even an attempt at sporadic enforcement. Indeed so much of a dead law has this act become in some parts of the state that the impression prevails in many quarters that it only applies to the city of New York.

In this city it has been enforced with a degree of severity rarely found in the enforcement of other laws of minor importance. There is not a theater in the city that is not watched and spied upon constantly. I have been to more than one theater where the box office was besieged by half-grown boys and girls begging the patrons as they approached to take them in. Most of the men or women thus approached by the children feel sorry for them, all of them are more or less annoyed and some few resent the approach. Generally an agent of some society or other is on the watch in the offing seeking whom he may arrest.

It is a law which does not seem to be ardently supported by public sentiment in this city, but while it remains on the statute books it must be obeyed to the letter. Exhibitors in other parts of the state who have been allowed considerable latitude either by the authorities or by public sentiment must remember that this indulgence may be withdrawn at any time. The entire exhibiting body of the state ought to urge the passage of the Ellenbogen Bill.

A Simple Story with a Moral

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE exhibitor who aspires to take a place in the civic and social life of his community is no longer a rarity. There are people in every community who are anxious to improve the pictures. They remind the writer of the dear old ladies who appeared in favor of the Federal Censorship Bill at Washington. One of these good women naively said to the Chairman of the Committee: "We saw some beautiful motion pictures the other night and we want you gentlemen of the government to make all other motion pictures just as beautiful." These well-intentioned persons look upon life as a perpetual rainbow. To them life is not a struggle between the forces of good and evil but one sweet grand song of optimism. They are jarred out of their pleasing contemplations by such sensationalists as William Shakespeare. The great Greek tragedies showing the pursuit of man by relentless Fate appear to them in sad need of either censoring or of complete extinction.

These optimistic dreamers are often cured by a little judicious treatment administered to them gently but firmly by so plain a person as a motion picture exhibitor.

Recently a committee of estimable women residing in one of the most peaceful sections of Brooklyn called upon an exhibitor to assure him that he was all wrong. They criticised and they analyzed until the poor exhibitor was floundering around in the depths of humility. The women had a constructive idea. They wanted our exhibiting friend to let them run a special children's entertainment Saturday mornings. They were kind enough to invite him to the performance hoping, they said, to enlighten and possibly to convert him. The women did their own booking. When they were through they had two reels of highly sterilized comedy, several pasteurized scenics and industrials and some aged and rainy fairy tale. The theater which had been donated to the women by the proprietor was crowded.

The comments of the youthful audience were painfully severe. A good deal of them were flavored with such spicy slang as had reached this suburban district. Some of the remarks uttered by the older boys were distinctly unfit for publication. There probably had never been a more unpopular motion picture entertainment in the City of Churches. A murmur of dissent ran through the audience after the announcement of "next week's program." That program was just as chemically asceptic as the one the boys and girls had just witnessed. The woman announcing the coming program spoke very slowly and distinctly and when she proclaimed such attractions as "Tea Growing in Ceylon" and "The Lumber Industry of Oregon" her audience was plainly on the verge of hostile demonstrations. A baker's dozen attended the next performance, but the promoters of a severely educational program stuck grimly to their task even when their audience was reduced to about five prim little maidens in charge of an elderly aunt. It was all very fine and heroic, but just a bit "rought on the exhib." His theatre began to suffer. Thereupon he urged the women to meet him and this is what he said: "Ladies, you have had a fair chance to demonstrate your theory of refined juvenile entertainment. You failed. Now I am going to take this thing in my own hands and try out my own ideas."

He booked and heavily advertised a film describing in pictures the unearthly astuteness of a sleuth with plenty of chases and the final triumph of the detective over the bad man. To this he added a comedy in which some young men were suddenly thrown into the water and came out gasping and puffing and in which several of the actors slipped on a banana peel. He flavored this with homeopathic doses of educational films. The improvement in the attendance on the second Saturday was remarkable. Gradually the exhibitor increased the educational part of his program, but he never obtruded this fact, and made the drama and the comedy the chief themes of his advertising. Well, Saturday morning is now the gala occasion of the week and the boys and girls have an excellent time, which is the divine right of youth.

The lesson is plain. Children resent oppressive guardianship. The moment they are told that some extra good films of high educational value are going to be offered to them to the exclusion of everything else they are just human and sinful enough to rebel. What is needed in the treatment of the child problem is ordinary common sense and the recognition of the fact that our world is not the world of the child nor is the world of the child our world.

Hearst Opens Exchanges

Plans Announced Indicate Powerful Attempt to Lead in Field—Will Start With Fifteen Distributing Offices.

RUMORS regarding a big new chain of exchanges, under the Hearst control, have been floating around town. Edward A. MacManus, the general manager of the International Film Service, of which William Randolph Hearst is president, some weeks ago moved his headquarters uptown and every day brought forth some addition to the staff which took possession. Now, their plans being complete, Mr. MacManus expressed his willingness to make known Mr. Hearst's intentions:

William Randolph Hearst.

"It is true," he said, "that we have decided to open our own releasing organization, which is to offer our own productions, and that the enterprise is but another growth of the Hearst organization. Mr. Hearst was one of the first to recognize the tremendous power of motion pictures. His conception of motion pictures is that they are another form of the modern day newspaper and magazine. He has felt that just where the newspaper and magazine entertain, inform and educate, the motion picture can do likewise and in many respects, especially in entertainment, far surpass the printed word.

"It is recognized that the Hearst newspaper influence is the most powerful force in America today, influencing the ideas of millions of people throughout the country. There have been brought into the Hearst organization leaders in the various walks of life. It is almost inconceivable that one institution can so control the literature, news and printed entertainment of so vast a majority of the country.

"It is Mr. Hearst's idea," went on Mr. MacManus, "that the International Film Service will express in motion pictures the ideas of the entire organization, as the editors, artists, reporters, cameramen, are to turn their ideas into this channel. Therefore, the International Film Service will be closely allied with the newspapers and magazines in every department.

Edward A. MacManus.

"For instance, we will begin with ten to fifteen exchanges, located in and about the cities where the Hearst newspapers are strongest. Naturally these are the big cities of the country and we feel that if we serve the places of big population that we are going to find a tremendous market. Later, when it is demanded by other parts, we will supply the service. We are not going to try to immediately cover the earth, we are not going to shoot haphazardly, but rather our efforts will be along intensive lines.

"We have not chosen a single man in this office who was not absolutely required and who is to fill some important need. And for every man here at headquarters we are going to have another in each of our cities. Each exchange office, therefore, will be as complete as headquarters. Our effort, as far as the exchanges are concerned, is to give the maximum genuine service to the exhibitors as is possible with human endeavor.

"We are not trying to do very many things, at least at the beginning, but what we do attempt, is going to be as well made as the Hearst organization is capable of. The well known Hearst principle of editing, refining and improving will be carried out here."

It was learned definitely that at least ten of the exchanges will be opened about April 1, and that the first releases will be offered shortly after.

Asked what kind of pictures the International Film Service would produce, Mr. MacManus replied:

"Our big work will be on series. You perhaps will remember the part we played in the making of those successes, 'The Perils of Pauline,' 'The Exploits of Elaine,' and 'The Goddess.' We are very optimistic of our ability to go ahead of what we have done before in the series line. Of course every organization has its prejudices and confidence in its own power, but we think that what we have done has placed us in a peculiarly impregnable position on the subject of series and serials.

"Of course we shall continue the News-Pictorial and hope to continue to improve this news reel to the standard of our ideal pictorial. We shall offer comedies and animated cartoons. At this point I might say that we are of the opinion that the animated cartoon is capable of as many variations as any other kind of picture, and we are going to have the pick of the Hearst artists—cartoonists and illustrators.

"We will make dramas of a different sort, and we are going to make an attempt not to get into the rut of doing over old ideas. I think you will agree with me that the Hearst newspapers and magazines are a veritable treasury, when you consider the authors and editors in our organization. I feel that the mere statement that these brilliant men and women representing every field of thought, are at the disposal of the International Film Service, is one of the most remarkable statements ever made in filmdom."

Among the other activities that are affected by this new enterprise, according to Mr. MacManus, are: New York Evening Journal, New York American, New York Sunday American, Chicago Examiner, Chicago American, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, Boston American, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta Sunday American, Cosmopolitan Magazine, Hearst's Magazine, Good Housekeeping Magazine, Harper's Bazar, Motor, and the International News Service, which gathers the news for a thousand other of America's leading periodicals.

Reading between the lines it is easy to see that the Hearst pictures will probably have an open road to publicity in all the Hearst organs, and according to one man who is closely allied with Mr. MacManus, the next few months are going to bring forth the most unusual and powerful big space day after day, reiteration of the International Film Service advertising.

ADDITIONS TO V-L-S-E SALES STAFF.

Gordon Laurence, formerly manager of publicity in the V-L-S-E's Cleveland office, has moved to the Chicago office. From that point of vantage, Mr. Laurence will conduct a press campaign covering the Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Chicago divisions.

S. D. Parmelee is the latest recruit enlisted in the Big Four's Cleveland sales brigade. Mr. Parmelee comes to the V-L-S-E from the Pathe Company in that city bringing with him a high reputation for ability as an energetic business getter.

That portion of Indiana covered by the Chicago branch office will hereafter be handled by R. S. Shrader. The latter was transferred from Cleveland, where he worked under the Abel administration. A. G. Galles, Mr. Shrader's predecessor in office, has been assigned to Chicago's Central District. The central section was previously covered by H. O'Brien, who is no longer connected with the V-L-S-E.

A change of territories has been negotiated by Messrs. L. C. Hartsock and M. S. McCaffrey, the former assuming charge of Iowa, while the latter will travel through Northwestern Illinois.

S. E. Bestor, a recent Chicago office acquisition, will attend to the sales wants of the Windy City's Southern District. The former incumbent, Edward Cohen, has been transferred to the Michigan block. The western and northern districts of Chicago are in the hands of I. Natkin and Charles Filkins, in the order named. F. W. Redfield still maintains charge of Wisconsin.

W. B. Nelson is the most recent addition to the sales force of the Dallas office.

Theaters Poorly Ventilated

Investigation in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx Reveals Many Violations of Ordinances.

HEALTH conditions in all the motion picture theaters of Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx are shown in a table of inspections prepared by the Department of Health and the Department of Licenses working in co-operation. This table has been prepared as a result of a recent night inspection upon all the theaters of the three boroughs. Only seventy-seven theaters had perfect ventilation; in 334 the ventilation was imperfect and the conditions found in these places by the inspectors may be regarded as detrimental to public health.

While conditions will naturally be improved as a result of the combined action of the two city departments, it is believed that by calling public attention to the bad sanitation of the motion picture houses the patrons of these places will be led to demand an improvement in the ventilation. Nearly all the theaters have the facilities for good ventilation but refuse to put them into operation, either through carelessness or because they don't want to go to the expense of keeping their heating plants up to capacity. In order to save on the heating expenses they keep the inlets and outlets covered, stop the fans from running and, as a consequence, the house is kept filled with foul air. Some of the owners of these places, while installing fans in order to comply with the requirements of the city ordinances, even stop their fans from running when ventilation is necessary, in order to save the electric power. It is the opinion of the Health Department authorities that if the patrons of these theaters insisted upon the management keeping the fans going, and questioning them in regard to the fresh air intakes and outlets, a very rapid and desirable improvement would follow.

Incidentally it is shown that 107 motion picture theaters which received licenses since July 1, 1915, were closed, a fact which may indicate that the small or old-fashioned motion picture houses, which, in some cases, were converted stores, are being driven out of business by the more modern moving picture houses and theaters which operate under regular theatrical licenses, and which present vaudeville as well as moving pictures. This decrease in the old fashioned moving picture theaters, if continued, will remove a menace to public health.

Managers of the theaters who were found to be violating the provision of the ordinance regarding ventilation will be summoned before Commissioner George H. Bell, of the Department of Licenses, and given an opportunity to explain why their theater intakes or outlets were closed, or the fans not operating. Penalties will be imposed where the explanation is not satisfactory, or where conditions were found sufficient to warrant them.

All the motion picture theaters in the three boroughs were visited, between 8 and 11 o'clock, by a force of 75 inspectors, and the results of these visits are now tabulated. The night selected was an unusually cold one for the middle of March, and as was anticipated in advance, the owners of the theaters relied on the unwholesome air rather than upon their heating facilities for increasing the temperature in their houses. Of course, they knew nothing in advance of the visits of the inspectors, and were caught unprepared for the testing of their ventilation facilities.

The total number of motion picture theaters visited was 518, but of these 107 were closed, so that reports were received on 411. Of this number 334 theaters in the three boroughs had more than one violation on ventilation, some of them as many as three. The following table shows a summary of the results.

	Manhattan.	Broklyn.	Bronx.	Total.
Number with fresh air intakes totally or partially obstructed.....	101	129	36	266
Number with outlets totally or partially obstructed.....	46	97	22	165
Number without fan operating.....	106	158	37	401
Number perfectly ventilated	29	39	9	77

In some of the theaters it was found that disinfectants or deodorants were used to disguise the smell of the foul air. These are the places which, according to Commissioner Bell and Dr. Emerson, the patrons should insist on improved conditions or complain to the city authorities.

The code of ordinances provides for certain requirements for ventilating motion picture theaters, as well as for heating and lighting them. All the theaters are required to supply 500 cubic feet of air per hour for each person, and when the temperature is such that windows or doors cannot be opened to admit of this quantity of air, artificial means of ventilation must be kept in operation. The colder the weather, of course, the more necessity for the artificial ventilation, but as the temperature must be between 62 and 70 degrees, it is found more profitable to the management to close up the intakes and outlets and stop the fans. The heads of the Health Department and License Department, with the co-operation of the public, think they will be able to make the owners of motion picture theatres keep their places in healthy condition as well as comfortably heated and lighted.

Big Four's April Releases

Varied Program Offered Includes the Edna May Production —Other Noteworthy Subjects.

MANY important and unique features are scheduled in the list of V-L-S-E releases for the coming month. Of particular interest to exhibitors and indeed all concerned in the world of motion pictures is the vehicle chosen by Edna May, "The Belle of New York" for her farewell appearance before the public. Miss May, who forsook her stage triumph ten years ago to become the wife of Oscar Lewisohn, the millionaire copper magnate, has steadfastly refused the most tempting offers to return to the footlights for a single good-bye appearance. That she should have chosen the screen rather than the stage for the valedictory adds another laurel to the ever growing wreath of tributes which the photoplay is almost daily receiving from artists of note.

"Salvation Joan," the seven reel picture selected for Miss May's debut in films, will bring back memories to theater patrons of the "Belle of New York," in which Miss May, as the winsome Salvation Army lassie, won international fame. Apart from the extraordinary interest aroused in this film by the starring of one of the most popular actresses the American stage ever knew in the past, in a role which recalls her last great success on the boards, the story outlined is in itself of sufficient strength to insure the picture's success. It also affords Miss May an opportunity to furnish a delicately shaded comparison between the luxurious, butterfly life of a socitey girl, and the stern career which awaits her, when, joining the ranks of the Salvation Army, she plunges into the stormy current of the underworld. The picture will be released April 10.

The preceding week Vitagraph will present, "The Vital Question," directed by S. Rankin Drew. Virginia Pearson, Charles Kent and Anders Randolf supply the leading roles in this picture..

Nance O'Neil, as Marika in Lubin's "The Fires of St. John," released April 10, is cast for a part particularly well suited to the talents of this famous actress.

A drama of startling realism is presented by the Selig Company in another April 3rd release. It is entitled "The Cycle of Fate," and features Bessie Eyton, with Edith Johnson and Wheeler Oakman as co-stars. This five-part drama consists of two episodes, in which different casts of character figure, each cast, however, playing an active part in the development of the tale to its sensational climax. Marshall Neilan, who wrote and directed the scenario, also plays an important role in the feature.

On April 24 the Vitagraph presents Dorothy Kelly in "The Law Decides," with a carefully selected cast which includes Harry Morey, Leah Baird, and Bobby Connelly.

CHICAGO REEL FELLOWS CLUB ELECT OFFICERS.

At a meeting of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago, Wednesday evening, March 16, the annual election of officers was held, and the following were voted into office for the ensuing year: President, R. R. Nehls (re-elected); first vice-president, Frank J. Flaherty; second vice-president, Richard C. Travers; treasurer, Wm. J. Sweeney; secretary, M. G. Watkins, and assistant secretary, Freeman H. Owens. The five members of the board of governors elected were: Watterson R. Rothacker, H. C. Miller, George Berg, Fred W. Wild, Jr., and L. A. Boening.

CAST SELECTED FOR GAUMONT'S "THE ISLE OF LOVE."

Edwin Middleton, who will direct "The Isle of Love" at Gaumont's winter studio, Jacksonville, Fla., has selected the principals who will support Miss Gertrude McCoy in this five-reel feature. Earl O. Schenck will have the role of a young sea captain. Robert Clugston will enact a wealthy man of the world. Iva Shepard will portray the belle of a fishing village, who is scorned by the sea captain. Charles W. Travis will have a chance to show how theatrical managers once treated him, since he is cast for the part of a manager. W. J. Butler has a part that smells of the sea, that of the captain of a schooner.

Miss Pickford Still with Famous

Official Denial of "Authentic" Story That Little Star Has Signed With B. B. Hampton.

IN a morning newspaper with motion picture affiliations was printed on the morning of Monday, March 27, a statement alleged to be from an "authentic source" that Mary Pickford had signed a contract for three years with B. B. Hampton. The article further said the contract was signed and the bonus accepted on March 18, and that the star was represented by Mrs. C. C. Wilkening of 220 West Forty-second street. Mr. Hampton, who is a vice president of the American Tobacco Company, has been much talked about in the film world recently. Mr. Hampton represents the capitalists who are credibly reported to be endeavoring to effect an amalgamation of the larger film interests.

When a World man called at the office of the company representing Miss Pickford he met instant denial that Miss Pickford had signed any contract with Mr. Hampton. He was told that practically all of the film companies had made offers to Miss Pickford, but that up to that minute she had accepted none. Asked as to whether any contract at present existed between Miss Pickford and the Famous Players Company the assertion was made that there is none—that Miss Pickford is free, but that she very much prefers, other things being equal, to remain with the Famous Players. It was not denied that negotiations with Mr Hampton, as well as with others, had been going on.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Company, during the day issued a statement which indicates that between his company and Miss Pickford exists a difference of opinion as to the existence of a contract. It is as follows:

"Despite the repeated rumors which have been current during the week that Mary Pickford was not bound to the Famous Players Film Company by contract and that she contemplated the signing of a contract with a newly formed combination of film interests, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players, declared that Miss Pickford is under contract to his company and is not in a position to accept any offers from any other concern. When the rumor was first printed Mr. Zukor issued the following statement in which he emphatically declared that Miss Pickford is under contract to the Famous Players and denying the rumor that she had not renewed her contract.

"'That is a decided error of fact. In January, 1915, a company was formed known as the Famous Players-Mary Pickford Company, Inc., for the purpose of producing and distributing subjects starring Miss Pickford. I am the president and Miss Pickford the vice president. That company made a contract with Miss Pickford for the year of 1915, which was renewed for the year 1916, at double her guaranteed income of the previous year, and she is now working at our studio under that contract.'

"When the report was repeated in print on Monday morning Mr. Zukor reiterated his previous statement, saying that there was no cause for amending any portion of it. Speaking about the general situation Mr Zukor said that he was heartily in favor of any merger that would eliminate some of the waste and overproduction which now exists in the industry. In fact, none of the prominent picture men who have been approached for interviews have expressed any doubt as to the desirability of some sort of combination. The difficulty seems to lie in reconciling mutual jealousies and agreeing upon the relative importance of producers, on the one hand, and distributors on the other."

Miss Pickford is still working at the Famous Players studio.

Rialto Theater to Open April 15

Director Rothapfel's Big Structure Will Contain No Stage and Will Be a Picture House in Fact.

NEW YORK'S newest theater and one of the world's most ambitious motion picture temples is scheduled to open on Saturday, April 15. It will occupy the former site of Hammerstein's Theater of Varieties, Forty-second street at Seventh avenue, and will be known as the Rialto theater. This new amusement institution, which will occupy the most costly plot of real estate in America devoted to that purpose, is being erected by the Rialto Theater Corporation and expresses in concrete form the ideas of its vice-president, secretary and managing director, S. L. Rothapfel.

The faith of the Rialto founders is eloquently demonstrated by the absence of a stage or any provision that would permit of the installation of one should occasion arise to change the policy of the house. Where the latter would ordinarily be located, there is a permanent decoration in the form of a colonnade. Its marble stairs afford an effective spot for soloists, while one of the panels of the colonnade contains the picture screen.

Concealed about this permanent decoration is the mechanism of the largest organ ever installed in a theater. Its size may be estimated from the fact that a single gong contained in its interior is 21 feet high and weighs 800 pounds. This instrument is being built by the Austin Organ Company, of Hartford, Conn. Daily recitals are promised and leading organists have been engaged for this purpose.

Director Rothapfel entertains secret plans for carrying his lighting effects into the audience, instead of confining them to a stage, and in this connection has installed a system with a greater number of dimming units than in any other theater in America.

Few details have been given out other than the meagre fact of the opening date of the new theater. Even the attraction remains unnamed. What effect, if any, its opening will have upon the policy at the Knickerbocker theater is a matter left for guessers to figure out for themselves.

The architect of the Rialto is Thomas W. Lamb and the supervising engineer Russell B. Smith. No attempt has been made to achieve a decorative exterior, and the latter is purely utilitarian. The interior combines that quality with chaste beauty. The cost of the enterprise is roughly stated at $1,250,000.

American Film Company's Activities

Many Productions Under Way at the Santa Barbara Studios.

ACTIVITIES at the studios of the American (Mutual) Company in Santa Barbara are concentrated on the production of some excellent Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, shorter dramas and "Beauty" comedies. Having just completed a thrilling three-reel drama by Karl Coolidge entitled "Four Months," Director Carl LeViness has started upon another play by the same author. This is entitled "The Lesson," and shows the remolding influence of love upon a young butterfly girl, who marries a farmer simply to inherit money she could not have otherwise. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat are in the leading roles.

Director Thomas Ricketts is busy in the production of "The Pendulum of Chance," a story by Anthony Coldeway. The drama pictures graphically the fact that the business efficiency which completely overlooks the personal element may be carried so far that it defeats its own ends. A financial crash brings about a deeper understanding between a hard-working husband and a frivolous wife. Lizette Thorne and Edward Coxen have leading roles, while George Field has the rather thankless task of playing the heavy.

Helene Rosson, E. Forrest Taylor, Harry Von Meter, Louise Lester and Harry McCabe are still working on the attractive Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition, "April," a story of mountain folk, which is being produced under the direction of Donald Macdonald. Good contrast in characterization is obtained by placing a young man of the "blue grass" region in the half primitive mountain country among the mountain folk, where he loses his heart to "April," a wild flower of the district. Helene Rosson has an opportunity for charming work in the role of the maid.

William Russell is directing, as well as playing the leading role, in a tremendous five-reel feature, entitled "The Secret Mating," a picture in which the "eternal triangle" gives way to a four-cornered affair. Hylda Hollis, Charlotte Burton and Harry Keenan support Mr. Russell.

Art Acord, Nita Davis, Dick Le Reno and Lawrence Peyton are being featured in a delightful three-reel drama which Director William Bertram is producing at the American Mutual studios, entitled "Under Azure Skies." Cattle rustlers, struggles, and a deep underlying touch of romance makes this western picture out of the ordinary and intensely human.

At the same time Jack Halloway is under way with J. Edward Hungerford's five-reel drama, "The Man from Manhattan," which will be released as a Mutual Masterpicture, De Luxe Edition; Director Edward Sloman is at work at his first picture for the American Mutual entitled "None So Blind," a stirring drama of modern feminism, and Frank Borzage is producing "Two Bits," a Western drama featuring Mr. Borzage and Anna Little.

The "Beauty" comedies, "Pedigree, Pups and Pussies," an amusing comparison, giving scope to Oral Humphry's eccentric abilities, and "Adjusting His Claim," a one-reel funny picture featuring Carol Halloway, John Sheehan and John Steppling, are being produced at present. Archer McMackin is directing the latter picture.

Leon Gaumont on a Visit

Comes to See President of Mutual and Wants to Study Conditions—Flashes of Gallic Wit and a Readable Symposium of News and Comment by the Famous Producer.

By W. Stephen Bush.

MONSIEUR LEON GAUMONT, head of the famous French house, affected a thrill of horror when I told him he was about to be interviewed.

"You want to undo all my hard work to conceal my identity?" he asked in reproachful raillery. "Perhaps you do not know that I have assiduously cultivated the popular impression that I am a very old man with a long white beard. You want me to become known so everybody will point at me and say 'there goes Gaumont.' It is not for this I have come to America."

Leon Gaumont.

A flash of Gallic wit and gayety lighted up the features of the famous man as he went through "the business of shrinking from the limelight."

Flanked on one side by an American Gaumont representative and on the other by an English Gaumont man the celebrated producer walked into the dining room at the Knickerbocker Hotel and as we sat down to eat there was a perfect fusillade of French and English conversation.

Right here I am going to unmask Monsieur Gaumont: He is not an old man, but a very young one when you consider he has been a leading figure in the industry many years. He does not wear a long white beard, but a short black moustache, just tinged with a suspicion of gray. He radiates vitality and humor. When he talks on the motion picture, when he touches his favorite topic of chrom-photography or when he discusses the talking picture you realize in a second that you are listening to a master of his craft. No student of motion pictures fails to know that Gaumont has made large contributions to the field of invention; he has won a permanent place in the encyclopedia of motion picture photography. To see Mr. Gaumont, to talk with him immediately confirms and exceeds the most sanguine expectations one might have formed from his fame. He is today and in all human probability will continue to be for many years one of the dynamic and most useful forces in filmdom.

"I Am a Trade Mark, That's All."

In regard to his present stay in this country Mr. Gaumont was not overcommunicative.

"I have," he said, "nothing of great and immediate importance in view. I expect to have some conferences with Mr. Freuler, the head of the Mutual interests, and I hope some good results for the exhibitor will follow. I think I will stay three weeks, possibly a month. Of course I will visit all my offices and my studios in this country and I surely will try to learn something of conditions here. As to my personality, please do not dwell on that. I have reached the age where the best of a man is known and what is to come after that might not be so good."

Another smile flitted over his face as he went on: "Please consider me merged in the trade mark 'Gaumont.' That is the all-important thing, the trade mark. The man who is called Gaumont does not matter at all. We are still producing in France, but of course we have been very much handicapped by the war. You lucky Americans do not know, you cannot form a conception of what this war means to Europe and especially to France. I often say this war was made for America.

"Business as Usual, Despite Zeppelins."

"While production has come practically to a standstill, the renting business is very good and I assure you the theaters are doing a good business—yes, a good business in spite of the Germans who are only seventy miles away and who send their Zeppelins every once in a while. The Gaumont Palace is doing very well, thank you. Of course you know of my studio in England. I have been producing in England ever since November and I am well pleased with the results. We have produced a feature called 'Ultus, or the Man from the Dead.' I expect this production will soon be seen in this country. It is a good deal like Fantomas. I have a very strong serial here now, a serial which has done wonders in Europe and which I hope will please the American public. It emphasizes the elements of humor and of suspense and you will probably agree with me when I tell you that these two elements are very useful in a serial story. I have built a new studio in France. It is located in the city limits of Nice with ready access to the Cote de Azure (Blue Coast) and all the scenic and climatic glories of the Mediterranean. We have also established a special studio for scientific work at Saint Maxime.

"The Screen an International Institution."

"I believe in spite of assertions to the contrary that the screen is strictly an international institution. Your market in the early days has been surfeited with foreign films with the inevitable reaction. I believe slowly but surely the pendulum is swinging back. Variety is an indispensable factor in every amusement, but in no field of amusement is it needed more imperatively than in the motion picture world."

Mr. Gaumont spoke with hopefulness untainted by unreasoning optimism on the present horrible war.

"You Americans," he said with the emphasis of modest pride, "must begin to realize that France means more than the Moulin Rouge. France has come out of the ordeal of war, stronger than ever, with her national youth renewed and quietly but unshakably confident of ultimate victory. The end may be far off. When you ask me to venture more than a useless guess I must refer you to the great seeress Madame de Thebes; she alone knows just when the end will come. Whenever it will come it will see a great revival of our industry in France. Before the end, however, it is quite possible that you here in America may yet wake up to the terrible dangers which this war imports to civilization and to humanity."

Miss Grant With Famous Players

"THE INNOCENT LIE," now being produced by the Famous Players Film Company in Bermuda, under the direction of Sidney Olcott, will introduce Valentine Grant to Paramount audiences when it is released on April 20. Though this is the first time that Miss Grant has been featured by the Famous Players, she is well known and popular among motion picture audiences by reason of the clever work which she did in the recent series of Irish films in which she appeared under the direction of Mr. Olcott.

Valentine Grant.

Needless to say, Miss Grant is a bona-fide daughter of Old Erin, as a glance at her black hair and dancing eye would instantly prove. In "The Innocent Lie" there will be ample opportunity for Miss Grant to display her ability both as a comedienne and as a tragedienne, for the story, opening under most delightful circumstances in Ireland, suddenly shifts to New York, where it as quickly becomes intensely dramatic—even thrilling.

Among those whom Mr. Olcott now has at Hamilton, Bermuda, and who will appear with Miss Grant are Robert Cain, Jack J. Clark, Morris Forster and Miss Hunter Arden.

Hearing on the Wheeler Bill

Assembly Committee on Education at Albany Takes Sides Against the Ahern Measure—Motion Picture Men Present Arguments Against the New Bill.

A PUBLIC hearing on the so-called Wheeler censorship bill was given at Albany on March 23, before the Assembly Committee on Education. The Wheeler bill, it will be remembered, seeks to confer the power of censoring the motion pictures on the Board of Regents. Its other distinctive features are a tax of five dollars for every thousand feet or less (original and copy), and no provision for an appeal to the courts.

The motion picture interests were represented by Lee A. Ochs, president of the State League of Exhibitors; Paul C. Cromelin of the Cosmofotofilm Company, William N. Seabury, counsel to the Motion Picture Board of Trade, and W. Stephen Bush representing the Moving Picture World. Only one hour was allowed to the opponents of the bill.

Mr. Bush was the first speaker. He dwelt on the fundamental objections to all forms of censorship and then threw some interesting side lights on censorship in the concrete as exemplified in the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania. Mr. Seabury followed with an appeal on behalf of the producers. He said that the motion picture had done nothing to deserve this unwelcome attention at the hands of the legislators. There was no doubt, he continued, that the motion picture had improved right along and to-day the screen was as free from objectionable features as any other medium of expression. He pointed to a notorious picture which had been wholly suppressed in the state of New York under existing laws, while in Pennsylvania the same picture was being shown despite all censorial objections. Mr. Cromelin in an able and convincing address proved that the continued interference with the liberty of development was working great harm to the motion picture not only here but abroad. He declared that at the bottom of all censorship propaganda was the unsolved child problem. He told the legislators that the solution of the child problem would never come through censorship, but through constructive work on behalf of the children who go to the motion picture theaters and above all things through parental control. Mr. Ochs as the last speaker called attention to the fact that the exhibitor and his audience were the best censors. No other censors are needed, he said. Unless an exhibitor showed clean pictures he could not last. Bad pictures might bring a big attendance on one or two nights, but a substantial investment in the exhibiting business can only yield profits if it is conducted decently. Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board made a brief address confining himself mostly to the answering of questions propounded by members of the committee.

Howard Clark Barber, an agent of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, and Senator Christman, who introduced the Wheeler Bill in the Senate, were the only two persons who appeared in behalf of the bill. Mr. Barber wanted to see a provision in the bill raising a favorable presumption in behalf of any picture which had been passed by a Federal Censorship.

The committee after a short deliberation decided to report the bill favorably. This creates an interesting situation. The author of the Ahern bill appeared before the committee in violent opposition and in favor of his own pet measure. There seemed to be some antagonism between Ahern and the committee on education and the fact of the Wheeler bill being reported out of committee in such rapid fashion is attributed to this same antagonism. The motion picture men are not worried over this dissension in the ranks of the advocates of censorship.

Censorship Protest in Pennsylvania

Pittsburgh Screen Club Announces Big Mass Meeting for Sunday, April 2.

ALL is in readiness for the great anti-censorship mass meeting at Pittsburg, April 2. The following clarion-call has been issued by the Screen Club to the public, the exhibitors and all connected with the industry in this part of the state.

The Pittsburgh Screen Club, the most successful and active organization in the State of Pennsylvania, will hold a monster mass meeting at the Pitt Theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday, April 2, at 2.30 p. m., as the opening gun in a campaign for the same liberty that is given to the press, and the legitimate stage for its principle and its acts for freedom of thought and speech, and against the un-American idea of censorship.

Addresses will be made by J. W. Binder, secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade; Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E; W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World; William A. Johnston, editor of the Motion Picture News, and others prominent in the moving picture industry, whom every exhibitor, exchange man, and everyone interested in the film industry should hear explain the absolute fallacy of so-called censorship, and the public whose rights of enjoyment and amusement are injudiciously affected. Your patrons should also be there, Mr. Exhibitor.

The American people are slow to become interested in something that is new (that is why we have censorship of photoplays), but once they become aroused to the gravity of the issue, there need be no fear of the outcome. The American public may go wrong occasionally, but it has never been known to go wrong on an issue that affects the fundamental principles of liberty; when an injustice has been done the great court of public of opinion is very quick to right it when it becomes acquainted with the facts. And the Pittsburgh Screen Club is opening its statewide campaign for justice and fair play for the film industry with the most able and prominent men to quote the facts and place the facts of the true situation before the public, on Sunday, April 2.

The Pittsburgh Screen Club believes that if the public at large thoroughly understood that there is not, and that there can never be such a thing as intelligent censorship, there would be a very different opinion of the film industry, not only in the State of Pennsylvania, but throughout the entire United States.

And we claim that those who are crying out are absolutely devoid of sincerity in any form and are most of all anxious to meddle with the business that had in a few years risen to be the fifth industry of the entire world, without any consideration of the capital invested by the manufacturer, exhibitor, exchangeman, nor of the amount of revenues paid by the industry to the states and cities. The Pittsburgh Screen Club asks the one question, If we cannot have an intelligent censorship, then why any?

The Pittsburgh Screen Club believes that "censorship belongs to the middle ages," and those who are interested in the motion picture industry are strong enough, big enough and decent enough to control the output of the film market, and have no desire whatever to be exempt from the laws that govern immoral literature, etc. All that is asked for is fair play, for the rights of freedom of thought and speech which the constitution of the United States guarantees to law-abiding citizens and legitimate business men.

You want, for yourselves and your children, clean photoplays, and we want clean photoplays. We ask you in all fairness to yourself to be at the Pitt theater on Sunday, April 2, and learn why we are against censorship.

THE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE,
Pittsburgh Screen Club.

New England Anti-Censor Campaign

Down East Exhibitors Will Circulate Petitions Against Federal Supervision.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for the campaign to stir up public opinion in New England against the proposed Federal censorship law before Congress, and the course to be pursued was decided upon at the last meeting of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, Inc.

The plans are substantially the same as those outlined in a previous issue of the Moving Picture World. The facts are to be presented to the public on the screens of the various moving picture theaters in New England, through circulars, lectures and the press and those behind the movement are confident their plans will meet with success. They are simply going to present the question to the people in its true light and abide by their decision.

The vast majority of the exhibitors in New England have the confidence of their patrons and this confidence in no small measure has contributed to the success of these same exhibitors. For that reason the exhibitors believe that when the general public is fully acquainted with the provisions of the Federal Censorship bill and its far reaching effect upon the production and distribution of photoplays and other films in New England they will voice their opposition to the measure in a manner that is not to be mistaken.

Under the present schedule 500,000 petitions are to be circulated throughout New England. These are to be offered to the patrons of the moving picture houses and each patron will be asked to sign one of the petitions provided he or she is opposed to the bill. The money for these petitions has already been appropriated by the league and when the petitions are ready they will be taken to the various moving picture houses by the road men of the exchanges visiting those houses.

The petitions that have been signed will later be sent to the Congressmen representing the district in which the signers of the petitions reside with the request that these Congressmen do their utmost to defeat the bill. The pressure of a united public opinion is something which no man in public life can afford to ignore whatever his own opinion may be and it is the general belief that these petitions will go a long ways toward having the bill rejected.

Vitagraph Program

Week of April 3 Will Release a Number of Interesting Subjects—Contributions From the West Coast Company.

THE Vital Question, a five-part drama by Joseph L. Norris, tops the list of Vitagraph releases by the Vitagraph Company for the week commencing Monday, April 3. Included in this list are "Mr. Jack, a Doctor by Proxy," a one-part comedy; "Freddy the Fixer," a single reel comedy; "Her Partner," one thousand feet of laughs, and the three part Broadway Star Feature "The Resurrection of Hollis."

"The Vital Question" is full of exciting incidents and tells of the sacrifice of a loving sister for her wayward brother.

Scene from "The Vital Question" (Vitagraph).

Virginia Pearson is seen as the wife, George Cooper as the brother, Anders Randolf as the husband, Leo Delaney as the district attorney, Denton Vane as the Secretary, and Charles Kent as the father, who on account of shady business deals ends his life early in the picture. S. Rankin Drew, one of the youngest and most capable directors in the motion picture industry, produced this Blue Ribbon Feature, which will be released on Monday, April 3.

Another single reel comedy of "The Escapades of Mr. Jack" series, featuring that inimitable comic opera king, Frank Daniels, is "Mr. Jack, a Doctor by Proxy." Mr. Jack, posing as a doctor, relieves a charming widow of an awful headache. The widow in turn "relieves" him of his watch, scarf pin and other valuable articles. How she does it must be seen to be appreciated. Ross Tapley plays the part of the widow. It is listed on the V-L-S-E program for Monday, April 3. It was filmed under the supervision of C. Jay Williams.

The Coast Division of the Vitagraph contributed "Her Partner" to the comedies of the week. The story comes from the pen of William Addison Lathrop and features Mary Anderson, Webster Campbell, Otto Lederer and Jack Mower. William Wolbert, director of the play, has introduced many funny situations. Monday, April 3, is also the day of release for this picture.

Friday, April 7, is the day on which "Freddy the Fixer" is to be released. It contains one thousand feet of laughs and shows why Freddy is responsible for the marriage of a lovesick couple who have been engaged for twenty years. Frank Currier is responsible for its direction and selected William Dangman, Lucille Crane, Virginia M. Telford and George O'Donnell for his cast.

"The Resurrection of Hollis," a three part Broadway Star Feature listed for Saturday, April 8, showing how the planning of two lovers brings about their marriage and the untimely death of a burglar who enters the house, engages in a fight, is knocked unconscious and is burned beyond recognition when the house catches fire. The girl believes it to be the body of her lover who has threatened to commit suicide unless she gives up another suitor. When the man realizes the condition of things he returns to her and is welcomed with open arms. Harry Davenport in filming the story by George Strayer Maxwell used the services of Walter MacGrail, Belle Bruce and Arthur Cozine for the leading roles.

Ernest Truex

ERNEST TRUEX, who appears opposite Dorothy Kelly in the forthcoming Vitagraph feature comedy, "Artie, the Millionaire Kid," has had an interesting career on the musical comedy and straight comedy stage. He has won particular attention because of his delineation of character comedy parts. Mr. Truex was born in Kansas City, Mo., in 1889. His father, a prominent physician, is still living in Missouri. Ernest speedily convinced his parents that he was intended for a stage career. An aged Shakespearian actor was his first teacher, and Ernest essayed a tour of the Middle West in scenes from the bard's plays. At this time he was only four years of age, but his success was conspicious.

Ernest Truex.

After various adventures on the boards, Mr. Truex played ten successive years in stock companies. It was here that he developed the sense of the comic that has made him famous. His first big opportunity was with Ethel Barrymore in "Alice Sit by the Fire." Following this engagement Mr. Truex made a name for himself in other comedy roles. He was the jockey in Lillian Russell's success, "Wildfire," played Abija Flagg in the premiere of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," was "Dennis" in "Doctor de Luxe," and won the laughter of the nation by his work opposite Madge Kennedy in "Over Night."

In 1912, Mr. Truex achieved the highest mark so far in his legitimate career. He was starred opposite Mary Pickford in the stage version of "The Good Little Devil," in which Miss Pickford played the little blind girl and Mr. Truex appeared as "Charles McLance," the Scotch boy. Upon the completion of the New York run, the play was filmed with Miss Pickford and Mr. Truex in the title roles.

"Caprice" was another production in which Mr. Truex appeared. After this venture into the land of film he returned to the stage. He was starred in "The Dummy," in "Just Outside the Door," in "Just Boys," and is now playing the lead in "Very Good Eddie." An all-star cast including Dorothy Kelly, Etienne Girarde and Albert Roccardi supports Mr. Truex in "Artie, the Millionaire Kid."

SCENARIO FOR "ANYMAN'S WIFE" ALMOST COMPLETED.

A scenario which when completed will have taken a full year to write is that of "Anyman's Wife," an original work for the screen by Jacques Kopfstein, author of such well known photoplays as, "Dwellers in Glass Houses," "Arrows of the Almighty," "Bricks Without Straw" and over one hundred other produced photoplays. Work on this play will commence as soon as a suitable cast is assembled and a director chosen.

"Exhibitors Skeptical" Says Wright

"Showing the Goods the Only Proof" Says Kalem Official in Interview on "Social Pirates."

MOTION picture exhibitors were never so wary and doubtful of statements made in advance of the release of a picture as they are today," declares William Wright, of the Kalem Company. "They won't believe the simplest statements of fact that are made in connection with a production before it is released—you have to 'show them the goods.' And, though the present condition of skepticism is unusual, I really don't blame the theater owners for their chary spirit."

It was an interesting angle on present conditions that the Kalem executive unfolded in an exclusive interview granted a Moving Picture World representative who had called to inquire as to the progress of the company's big series by George Bronson Howard, "The Social Pirates." "Mind you," Mr. Wright continued, "I don't mean that exhibitors will not believe that you have 'the greatest productions on earth,' 'a masterpiece,' and so on. That might be excepted.

"But take such a simple statement as the fact that each episode of a series tells an absolutely complete story, that an audience will not be disappointed with a 'to-be-continued' line. Aside from the fact that you can please each audience that sees one of the pictures in this way, whether they have seen the others or not, this means stronger stories since you haven't foot after foot of repeated action from previous pictures, nor weak spots because your theme has been dragged out too long. But exhibitors have so often found that advance claims that each installment is a complete story are merely a matter of form, that you have to 'show them the goods' before they will believe you.

"With skepticism in a little point like this, you will see why the producer with faith in every branch of his production will have to do as Kalem did with 'The Social Pirates,' and make every possible effort to let exhibitors see his pictures before release. That is why we made certain that every General Film exchange in the country was able to show exhibitors the first two releases of 'The Social Pirates,' many weeks before the initial release date. Wherever possible, which means in the Eastern exchanges, the third episode is also being shown though the release date is three weeks distant. Prints of this third episode 'The Parasite' are also being rushed to the more distant exchanges, and we will follow this policy throughout.

"The skepticism could only be banished by 'showing the goods,' and when the picture came up to expectations it was only natural that we should do as we have done—make a new record for number of prints in circulation at General Film exchanges and for first-run bookings. 'The Little Monte Carlo' and 'The Corsican Sisters,' the first two episodes, made more actual bookings themselves than all the advance publicity, special salesmen, etc. And believe me, with the exhibitor in his present wary frame of mind, and with the surplus of offerings, he will demand more and more to 'see before he buys' in the case of a costly feature."

Famous Players for April

Two Original Photoplays Complete List of Four Contributions to Paramount Program.

AN adaptation of a work of one of the living dramatists, a screen version of "one of the six best sellers," and two exceptionally strong original photoplays constitute the contribution of the Famous Players Film Company to the Paramount Program for April. Israel Zangwill is the playwright, "Molly Make-Believe" is the "best seller," and "The Eternal Grind" and "The Innocent Lie" are the original productions.

Marguerite Clark is the star of "Molly Make-Believe," an adaptation of the story and book by Eleanor Hallowel Abbott, which, after appearing as a serial in one of the big national magazines, was issued in book form and has been popular. J. Searle Dawley directed; it will be released April 10.

Mary Pickford makes her first appearance since creating a sensation in "Poor Little Peppina" in another original photoplay "The Eternal Grind," which, as the name implies, is a factory story. April 17 is the day set for release. Casting aside the Italian characteristics which she so delightfully portrayed in "Peppina," Miss Pickford becomes a little factory girl drudging at her task of sewing shirts. "The Eternal Grind" was produced under the direction of John O'Brien.

"The Innocent Lie," with Valentine Grant in the principal role, is a romantic drama opening in Ireland and shifting the scene of action to New York, where many dramatic situation arise before the completion of the tale. Sidney Olcott, who is directing the production, has taken the company to Bermuda where the scenic beauty of the country will be incorporated into the "Irish" portions of the story. "The Innocent Lie," while in no sense a sex play, is an exceptionally powerful dramatic story and contains many big, thrilling situations. It will be released on April 20.

Pauline Frederick follows her appearance in "Audrey" by starring in the adaptation of Israel Zangwill's gripping play "The Moment Before Death," which will be introduced on the screen under the shorter title "The Moment Before." When presented on the stage this highly original play created a sensation and there is every reason to believe that its screen version, because of the remarkable adaptability of the subject to the requirements of the photoplay, will repeat its success when it appears on the screen on April 27. The subject is being produced under the direction of Robert Vignola at Jacksonville, Fla.

Several very well known players have been engaged to support the stars, among them J. W. Johnston, Thomas Holding, John Bowers and Edwin Mordant.

Who Has Seen This Boy?

AS a last resort for finding her four-year-old boy, who so mysteriously disappeared about a year ago, Mrs. C. L. Glass of 13 Lienau Place, Jersey City, has appealed to several motion picture producing companies for aid.

James Douglas Glass was last seen in Greeley, Pike county, Pa., on May 12, 1915. Since that time his mother has been informed that he has taken child parts in several motion picture plays, among them being Beatriz Michelena in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," which was produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation.

James Douglas Glass.

The description of the child is given as follows:

Age four years, fair complexion, heavy, light hair cut Buster Brown, two crowns, blue eyes, good teeth, full face, height about three feet six inches, weight about 35 pounds.

The "California" company is now trying to locate all the children who took part in this production in hopes of finding some trace of the missing boy.

Metro's First Birthday

Great Organization Builded in Twelve Months Now Occupies An Honored Place in the Industry—President Rowland's Plans.

THE week of March 29 is big week with Metro, as the first anniversary of the organization is being celebrated at the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation throughout the United States, in Europe and Australia. The celebration is a business event made notable by a formal announcement of new and large activities and the setting forth by President Richard A. Rowland of a broad and elastic policy for the New Metro Year beginning with the final week in March.

The new plans include a rotating star system which has certain elements new to the feature picture business. Metro's first year has been one of remarkable growth from a modest but enthusiastic beginning twelve months ago, to a high place among the best elements of the great picture business. During the year Metro repeatedly stirred up the industry by the big things it announced and accomplished, and the Metro management promises a still bigger list of surprises for the coming year.

Richard A. Rowland.

Metro's first release was "Satan Sanderson," sent forth to the exhibitors on March 29, 1915, following an organization of its manufacturing and selling forces to meet a demand for feature pictures of a high grade that were box office attractions. In a few months Metro was in its full stride and its success has been the real sensation of a busy year.

President Rowland in his announcement on behalf of his associates says: "Metro started one year ago with everything brand new. We had to organize our manufacturers, our exchanges and our central body all at one time, and we built what we have practically on a general working plan formulated at that time by our group of enthusiastic showmen. I lay special stress upon the fact that they are showmen, and because of this fact they were able to anticipate the public's demand for big feature productions.

Joseph W. Engel.

"The exchange men knew the wants and the needs of the exhibitors and they have kept in close touch with the central body and the manufacturers. This brought together a winning combination, and as a result Metro made good from the start. Metro's growth has been a healthy growth along sound and safe lines. As a result Metro at the end of a year occupies an enviable place in the industry and its pictures are being exhibited throughout the world.

"The credit rests with no one individual, but is the result of the combined efforts of our enthusiastic family of showmen. We have had harmony within and have not had to spend our time and energy in battling with one another.

"In respect to our future we can promise as many surprises for the next year as during the year just closing, and we can definitely set down these few facts for consideration by those who may be interested:

"Metro will make more feature pictures than before, but it will not arrange to release two features weekly for the sole purpose of being big or of endeavoring to impress anybody. Metro will have a real business reason for presenting its pictures, and will continue to keep its organization so elastic that it will release the type of pictures that the exhibitors require to make their theaters profitable.

"Metro will put out one reel, two reel and five reel productions in keeping with the requirements of its exhibitors. Metro has adopted a rotating star system which assures pictures with stars of real box office drawing power so that exhibitors will not only have good pictures but pictures with real selling power to the public. In order to round out and complete this plan, Harold Lockwood, May Allison and Viola Dana have just been added to Metro's list of stars. Our regular star list now includes Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne, Mme. Petrova, Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Mabel Taliaferro, Lionel Barrymore and Marguerite Snow, Hamilton Revelle, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew and Mary Miles Minter. These do not include the stars in the special pictures.

"There will be more pictures with these stars and several others yet to be announced, in order that the public may see their favorites with a proper frequency in productions worthy of their importance in the world of pictures.

"The air today is full of rumors of great combinations and it may not be amiss to set forth Metro's position. We have no interest in any of these rumored combinations. Metro is in a position to go in or stay out as it pleases. We are in the business not only because we find it profitable but because we like it, and although others may have a desire to sell out, Metro sees no reason, and has no desire, for such a course.

"I can scarcely close without a word of hearty thanks to our many friends for their kindly co-operation and we hope to merit a continuation of their confidence."

Metro celebrates the reaching of its first milestone by the launching of a countrywide newspaper advertising campaign, which will embrace the smaller cities first and include the larger cities in its later placing of copy. A "family dinner" at the Hotel Astor, a Metro Birthday Celebration at the New York Theater and other events will mark the beginning of the new year's work. The big Bushman series of fourteen episodes will begin after the completion of Mr. Bushman's new feature picture, and the new Metro Travelogue pictures are now nearly ready for their first showing.

ROSENBERG VISITS NEW YORK.

M. Rosenberg president of the De Luxe Feature Film Corp. operating Film Exchanges in Portland, Oregon and Seattle, Wash., was a recent visitor in New York. Rosenberg recently purchased "The Ne'er-Do-Well" from Sol Lesser for the States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana and reports successful engagements in Seattle, Portland, Spokane, Everett and Salem. These engagements covered from one to three week runs and each case a return. Mr. Rosenberg is also interested in "The Spoilers" for several of the Southern States with Sol Lesser. This territory is being handled through the R. & L. Feature Film Co. of Washington, D. C. The De Luxe Feature Film Corporation is in charge of Mr. Rosenberg's brother, Al. Rosenberg.

PICTURES AT CLINTON PRISON.

March 11 will long be remembered by the 1,400 inmates of Clinton Prison, as upon that date through the kindness of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company and the New York Metro Film Service they were enabled to witness two five-act feature photoplays, namely, John Barrymore of the Famous Players Company in "Are You a Mason," and the Metro Production "Second in Comand," featuring Francis X. Bushman.

With their new Power Projector, Mirroroid Screen, Institutional Band and Orchestra and films of this class their entertainments are of up-to-date character and cannot help prove beneficial as well as entertaining.

ONONDAGA FILM CO. LOSES REEL.

The Onondaga Film Company of 2624 South Salina Street, Syracuse, N. Y., announces the loss of a reel of the picture entitled "Fun on the Farm" by shipment or some cause unknown and wish to ask exhibitors to keep a sharp eye out for the same.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

Big Kansas Convention

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and Amusement Association of Kansas Hold Joint Meeting at Wichita.

THE second joint convention of the Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the Kansas Amusement Association was held in Wichita, Kansas, March 20 and 21. Exhibitors commenced arriving Sunday evening, and by Monday morning at 10.30, when the first meeting was called, there were about 120 in attendance. The first session was devoted chiefly to talks from exhibitors and exchange men. E. R. Pearson of the Kansas City office of the V-L-S-E complimented the attendance and spoke of the great necessity of getting together to eliminate the great evil of the motion picture industry, namely—Censorship. He was followed by J. W. Payne, who is a candidate for the election to the office of State Superintendent of Schools. It is this officer who has charge of motion picture censorship in the state of Kansas. Mr. Payne, in a short and witty speech, made it very plain that he was a great friend of the motion pictures. He said it was his belief that even among the exhibitors there existed a great lack of information upon the value of the motion picture as an educating influence. He said that it was his practice to attend from three to four motion picture shows weekly, and that at times he attended three in one evening. This was met by hearty applause. He said that in his home town, Emporia, Kansas, he had never seen an indecent picture, and that it was his belief that the exhibitors of that city, as well as the other exhibitors in the state of Kansas, would not show such a picture.

One thing that created considerable comment was Prof. Payne's remark in which he said that the thing most needed in Kansas right now was not censorship, but a square deal. For this reason the exhibitors feel that if they are unable to repeal the present law against censorship, and if Mr. Payne is elected to the office he is seeking, the work of censorship will be in the hands of a party who is at least friendly toward motion pictures.

Election of Officers.

After several talks by different exchange men the morning session was concluded and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League went into executive session for the purpose of electing officers and determining whether or not they would continue to retain the league as an organization in this state. In this meeting it was decided that inasmuch as the league represented the "old guard" and that there is no national organization to correspond to the Kansas Amusement Association, it would be better to retain the league for the sake of national affiliation. The new officers elected are: Chris Glaman, of Wellington, Kansas, president; Harry Rogers, of Marion, Kansas, vice-president, and Frank Gerrity, of Winfield, Kansas, secretary and treasurer.

The retiring members are W. B. Moore of Galena, Kansas, who has served loyally and faithfully for several terms as president, and who has distinguished himself all over the state as being an able opponent to censorship. P. J. Connonan of Emporia, Kansas, is retiring secretary. Mr. Concannon leaves behind him an enviable record. It is largely through his efforts that the old league was kept alive and the new association, which is doing so much, was created, because had it not been for the large attendance at last convention the new association would not have been.

J. W. Binder Talks Impressively.

The evening session was a joint meeting of both the league and the amusement association. It was here that the much-anticipated event of the convention occurred, namely, a talk by J. W. Binder, secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, who came 2,000 miles for the sole purpose of meeting with the exhibitors and exchange men in the state of Kansas. His speech had mostly to do with censorship. However, he made great effort to impress upon the exhibitors, as well as exchange men, the importance of the industry which they represented. Among other things he said that it was the fifth industry of the United States, employing 500,000 people. He said there were 12,000 motion picture theaters in the United States, 486 of which are in Kansas. He says the theaters of the United States have a daily patronage of 12,000,000 people or one-eighth of the entire population, and he said that this industry, great as it is, has been subject to more unjust legislation than any other he has had experience with.

"There are three mediums of expression," said Mr. Binder, "the first is direct, namely, speech; the second is by means of writing, whereby I transfer my ideas and thought to you. Until a short time ago, there was no other method by which to disseminate ideas and thoughts. At that time and at the present time I can write and say whatever I please about anybody or thing and there is no recourse against me before having made the speech or written the article. However, a few years ago there came a new method of thought expression, the motion picture, and it had not been before the public very long before there came demands that the pictures be subjected to official scrutiny before being shown to the public. In other words, before we can put our thoughts and expression upon the screen we must show them to people who have no consideration or knowledge of our thoughts or ideas. Are your newspapers asked to bring their 'copy' before a censor before it is published? Is an orator forced to lay his speech before a committee and have parts of it eliminated? Certainly not. Then why should we be forced to put our thoughts and ideas on trial before showing them to the public? If motion pictures are indecent they can be reached in the same manner as can newspapers."

After another short talk by Prof. Payne, the evening meeting was adjourned.

Tuesday's Session.

The first session Tuesday was taken up with the election of two officers to fill vacancies in the association. W.

Convention of the Kansas Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at Wichita, Kansas.

H. Willey, of Mulberry, Kansas, was elected president of the association, and L. M. Miller, of Wichita, Kansas, was elected vice-president. Then followed a speech by E. C. Mills of the Mutual Film Corporation of Kansas City. Mr. Mills is the father of the Kansas Amusement Association. He drafted its by-laws and constitution and was the leading figure in its organization. His speech was long but took up every detail of the work before the exhibitors and exchange men.

Mr. Mills said that at the last convention he was more or less friendly with the censors, inasmuch as he looked upon them as rather a harmless evil, but that now he is bitter, and that he is ready to start the fight and carry it to the limit. "I don't mean to say," said Mr. Mills, "that motion pictures need fear intelligent censorship, but in the same breath I say 'intelligent censorship' is impossible, due to differences in opinion between people of various political belief, religious affiliation without other than financial interest in the work of censoring pictures. In the second place, censorship is fundamentally wrong and has no justification based upon the number of indecent or suggestive pictures being produced, for the number of such pictures as compared with the total output is so small as to be incalculable.

"Gentlemen, united we can win, and we will win. Divided we will never win. For every dollar you put in this organization I will save you ten. If you're for us, get in the association, and if you are not, get out of the way, so that the rest of us can go about our way unhampered. We are out to win and we are going to."

Kansas Exhibitors Win on "Motor Drive."

Mr. Collins, State Inspector, announced the first victory for the Motion Picture Association and it came as a distinct surprise to the exhibitors. Mr. Collins, in a short speech, told them that the matter of motors on machines had been taken up with the Bureau of Fire Prevention and that it had been decided that where the apparatus was modern that a motor could be used. This is of great importance to Kansas exhibitors and they have been fighting for the privilege for some time but before the organization of the Amusement Association nothing had been accomplished towards this end. Mr. Collins in his speech said that in his work he had never called upon a class of men which he liked better than motion picture men.

The afternoon session of the Association was devoted to the election of committees. Committee of Grievances consists of Fred Savage, of Hutchinson, Kansas; J. J. Marshall, of Manhattan, Kansas; H. M. Burman, manager of the Metro office in Kansas City; R. C. Cropper, manager of the Universal office in Kansas City, and L. M. Miller, of Wichita. The Legislative Committee consists of Chris Glamann, of Wellington, Kansas; P. H. Pierce, of the Wurlitzer Music Co., and R. O. Proctor, manager of the General Film Co., of Kansas City.

Propose to Litigate Censor Law.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., of the Pathe Exchange Inc., in Kansas City, created quite a stir when he announced that he was ready if the assistance of any other exchange could be secured, to immediately bring the present censorship bill before the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas, to test its constitutionality. Recent decisions in the case of the Oil Inspection law have made it clear that the present censorship law is no longer a police measure, but a revenue measure, and can be declared unconstitutional from that standpoint.

Mr. Binder ended up the convention by a most interesting talk to the exhibitors in which he made application to become a member of the Kansas Amusement Association. He also laid plans for the fight in Kansas; told the exhibitors that he was prepared to supply them with literature, petitions and slides to any extent that they needed such assistance. He also stated that if financial aid was needed to carry on the fight it would be forthcoming from the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America.

Mr. Binder also introduced two resolutions which follow:

Whereas, The operation of the Kansas State censor law has worked great hardship on several branches of the motion picture industry in the State, and

Whereas, The principle of pre-publicity legalized censorship is, we believe, a violation of the constitutional rights of the people tending to infringe upon that freedom of speech and of the press which have made America great, and

Whereas, We believe that the motion picture screen is a great public forum on which will be discussed issues of civics, politics and religion, and that, therefore, this forum must be as free from all political censorship as are those other media—speech and the press, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Amusement Association of Kansas in convention assembled, reaffirm its determined opposition to all forms of censorship of motion pictures and pledges itself to use every effort to secure the repeal of the obnoxious law now on the statute books of Kansas to the end that the presentation of motion pictures in this State may be as free from legal interference as is the press or speech. Be it further

Resolved, That in thus approving censorship, this convention desires to record its opposition to all pictures which are obscene, immoral or indecent and pledges itself to aid in suppressing these through the channel of laws now inherent in every community.

Whereas, The President of the United States has honored and dignified the motion picture industry by being the guest of honor of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America at its first annual banquet held at the Biltmore Hotel in New York City; and

Whereas, The 500,000 people of Kansas who daily attend the 428 motion picture theaters of the State, as well as the men who own and operate these theaters, desire to make acknowledgment of the recognition thus given to what is now the fifth industry in the United States by its Chief Executive, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Amusement Association of Kansas in joint convention assembled, acknowledge with gratitude the gracious recognition accorded to the motion picture industry by Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, and in return for his evident interest in, and concern for the welfare, prosperity and freedom of the motion picture, we pledge him our individual support in meeting and solving the many problems of State which confront him at this time. We commend his patience and tact which have kept this country out of the European war, and we pledge ourselves and our screens in helping him to maintain the stand he has taken and so to shape the affairs of State that when the war-crazed nations of Europe finally cry for peace, this nation guided by him shall, under God, be the arbiter which shall restore world peace and see that exact justice is meted out to the nations at war to the end that the standards of freedom and justice of the United States of America may become the standards of the world.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be telegraphed to the President at Washington and that they be spread in full upon the minutes of this convention as an evidence of the broad-minded patriotism of the men in Kansas who are engaged in the motion picture industry of America.

Resolutions were also passed thanking the city of Wichita for the use of its Council Chamber as a meeting place for the convention, and another thanking the exhibitors and exchange men in Wichita for the royal entertainment provided for them.

The entertainment of the convention was handled by the Wichita exhibitors and exchange men. Automobile rides were made through the city, theaters were thrown open to the visitors and things were made very pleasant for all of those who came to the convention. The convention was concluded with a big smoker at which there were fully 200 men.

The film exchanges were all fully represented at the convention. Mr. Berman, manager, and Mr. Skirbol, traveling representative represented Metro. The Universal Film & Supply Co. was represented by R. C. Cropper, manager of the Kansas City office; O. K. Mason, manager of the Wichita office, and Mr. Hensley, of the Oklahoma City office. C. A.

Parsons, representative and Jerome Abrams, and Geo. A. Bowles, publicity manager. The Mutual Film Corporation was represented by Mr. Kiltz, manager of the Kansas City office; E. C. Mills, assistant manager, and Jack Brainard of the Wichita office. The Paramount Picture Corporation was represented by Gerald Akers and Mr. Balsley. The General Film Company was represented by R. O. Proctor, manager, and "Ted" Morris, representative. V-L-S-E was represented by E. R. Pearson, manager, and Lester Scott, representative and J. A. Reed, Kansas representative. Edwards, Jr., Wm. Beckenstein, representative and W. E. Jameyson, representative. Chas. Hardin, manager and Wm. Wachter were here in the interests of the Fox Film Co. Mr. Edwards representing the Monarch Feature Film Co. of Kansas City, was also here. The Minusa Cine Products Co. had Nat. I. Brown at the Convention. H. J. Blakley represented the Motiograph, E. G. Olson, C. E. Olson and E. P. Abbot represented the Wichita Film & Supply Co.

MINNEAPOLIS CONVENTION.

Plans for the Big Congress of Northwest Exhibitors Progressing Splendidly—Office Opened in Temple Court.

THOSE who will attend the giant congress of the Northwest Moving Picture Exhibitors at Minneapolis, Minn., May 2 to 5, now have assurance that they will see some of the film stars at the convention. Manager Van Meter of the General Film Company has passed along the word that Essanay, certainly, and Selig, probably, would send some of their screen staff to the show. Then Gilbert M. Tyler, special representative of the Essanay company, dropped into Minneapolis for a few days and gave absolute promise that some of their people would come to the congress. Mr. Tyler said he had discussed the matter with the officers of the company and they had agreed that it would be only proper to let some of the stars go for a day or two.

As for Essanay, Mr. Tyler asserted they probably will send Miss Edna Mayo and Henry B. Walthall, stars of the "Strange Case of Mary Page," which has proved a popular film in the city. He asserted both stars had expressed willingness to come to the convention. Managers of other Minneapolis exchanges are making representations to their home offices in an effort to bring their stars.

C. E. Van Duzee, treasurer of the convention, has opened offices at 704 Temple Court and advance requests for booth rates and general information concerning the show indicate a record-breaking congress. The show is cementing the friendship of the Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors who are working together to boost it. They are holding weekly meetings at the West hotel in Minneapolis to lay plans. However, some of the meetings are to be held in St. Paul on the invitation of James Gilosky, president of the convention, and J. B. Reisman, a convention booster, both of whom live in St. Paul.

LUND PRODUCING "DORIAN'S DIVORCE."

C. A. C. Lund, one of Metro's newest directors, who produced "The Price of Malice," starring Hamilton Revelle has gone to Port Henry, New York, to make exteriors for "Dorian's Divorce," in which Lionel Barrymore is starred. The company of players appearing in support of Mr. Barrymore is an unusually strong one and includes Grace Valentine, Edgar Davenport, and half a score of prominent stage and screen artists. Many of the interior scenes were photographed for "Dorian's Divorce," in the Rolfe Photoplay, Inc., studio, before Mr. Lund and Mr. Barrymore went north, and the production will be completed immediately upon their return.

RENEWS "SIS HOPKINS" CONTRACT.

Though the original contract signed last fall had still many weeks to run, the overwhelming success of the Sis Hopkins comedies caused the Kalem Company to plan a new document to be formed last week which insures exhibitors a continuance of Sis Hopkins comedies for an indefinite period. The affixing of signatures to the new contract also insures the appearance of Rose Melville's Sis Hopkins only on the General Film program and in Kalem subjects during the time she appears before the motion picture camera.

Trade Board's Exposition Filling Up.

Over Half of Available Space Already Contracted For—Exhibitors' Organizations Praise Board.

SPACE to the value of $30,000 has already been subscribed for the First National Exposition of the Motion Picture Industry to be held under the direction of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America in Madison Square Garden May 6 to 13. It is expected the list of exhibitors on the main floor and balcony of the Garden when the Show opens will be a fairly complete "Who's Who" of the industry. A list of interesting features is being arranged. These will include a Bankers' Day, Fire Insurance Day, Projection Day, Exhibitors' Day and others.

Representatives of the American Bankers Association will make addresses on Bankers' Day on the subject of financial and banking problems as applied to motion pictures. They will have something of real importance to say to the men in the industry. Insurance problems in connection with motion pictures will be discussed on Fire Insurance Day. Talks on the erection of the present-day fireproof theater, reducing the fire risk in the studio, vault and inspection room, and the adjustment of rates will be given.

S. L. Rothapfel will be the principal speaker on Exhibitors' Day, when the problems of the men who show the pictures will be discussed. Prominent exhibitors from the principal cities will also speak from and of their experience. Among those who will be heard on Projection Day are: Frank J. Rembusch or the Mirror Screen Company, vice-president of the Board of Trade; Frank H. Richardson, one of the foremost authorities on projection, and others.

Among the daily features will be a dancing floor in the middle of the Garden, where one can at the same time see comedies, dramas, etc., on the largest motion picture screen ever built. Also motion pictures will be made in full view of the public while one of the world's greatest bands will lend atmosphere and music to the occasion.

J. W. Binder, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, when seen at the board's offices following his return from Wichita, where he addressed the joint convention of the State Exhibitors League and the Amusement Association, declared he had received many evidences of the desire of exhibitors' associations throughout the country to co-operate with the board. He said that already action had been taken by Kansas, Indiana, Illinois and North Carolina indorsing the Board of Trade and thanking it for its efforts in behalf of the industry. In Maryland, although no formal resolutions were passed, there was the heartiest cooperation between the two bodies. The Chicago local and the Brooklyn Exhibitors also have formally indorsed the board. In Illinois the resolutions were introduced by William J. Sweeney.

The following is self-explanatory:

On Sunday evening, April 2, Mr. Binder will speak at the Fort Pitt Theater, Pittsburg, at the mass meeting called for a public protest against censorship. The Northwestern Association has extended to the Board of Trade an invitation to be represented at its congress of exhibitors in Minneapolis on May 2. In spite of the date falling just before the opening of the board's big exposition it is understood one of its prominent members will visit Minneapolis.

No Palace Exposition, Says Hollaman.

When questioned by a representative of the Moving Picture World as to the plans of the Third International Exposition, advertised to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York, May 1 to 6 inclusive, Rich G. Hollaman, vice-president of the International Exposition Company of New York, stated most emphatically that there would be no such exposition.

"The whole matter has fallen through" said Mr. Hollaman. "I believed that we could secure such an exposition for the Palace, but we could not buck up against the Board of Trade, which already has matters in hand. Mr. Binder was too strong for us."

EDISON AIDS ACTORS' FUND.

Among the personal contributions received by Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the executive committee for the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund, is one from Thomas A. Edison for $250. No Trial Board, But a Reprimand for Second Deputy Funkhouser.

CHICAGO'S Chief of Police Healey and Second Deputy Superintendent of Police Funkhouser have apparently smoked the pipe of peace, and so there will be no filing of charges against the second deputy by his superior. The second deputy sent in his report to headquarters, in connection with the charge of violating Mayor Thompson's order prohibiting the exhibition of moving picture cut-outs, and although not satisfactory to the chief it was given out that no charges would be filed just now, but that the second deputy would be reprimanded.

Regarding the exhibition of cut-outs from films, prohibition could have been secured through the courts, even if Mayor Thompson had failed to issue his order to the second deputy. The second deputy as acting head of the censor board has power to make the cut-outs, but he has no legal right to confiscate them. As parts of copyrighted films the city could be compelled by law to restore the cut-outs to the makers of the films, and this action is expected in case any further retention of film cut-outs is made by the censor department.

Strand Theater Co. Acquires Colonial Theater, Chicago.

The Strand Theater Company, through its president, E. C. Divine, has taken over the Colonial Theater, and beginning Sunday, March 26, the "theater beautiful" will be run under the management of that company. This departure has been concurrent with the change in the programs run at the Strand, which henceforth will use the Triangle brand.

The Strand Theater Company won the favor of the better class of moving picture patrons in Chicago by a long run at Orchestra Hall last summer, following the plan adopted at the Strand Theater, New York, by S. L. Rothapfel, the name "Strand" being appropriated as an emblem of high class picture programs and presentations. When Orchestra Hall had to be vacated to make way for the fall and winter attractions booked there, the strand Theater Company found a home—the New Strand—in a remodelled building on Wabash avenue and Seventh streets, where another success was made, although the location is considered out of the way for moving picture patrons. The New Strand and the Colonial will henceforth take the entire weekly output of the Triangle Film Corporation.

The new arrangement was made in New York on Tuesday, March 21, Mr. Divine making the trip to close matters with H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation.

The opening of the Colonial by S. L. Rothapfel had much to do with its present success; but it is due to the persistence and faith of C. F. Hately, personal representative in Chicago of H. E. Aitken, that the house has surprised everybody by its great popularity. The location is ideal, and under the incoming management the attainment of still greater things is expected.

London Tit-Bits Bows to Paste-Pot and Shears.

E. H. Montagu, European agent in London for the Selig Polyscope Co., sent in the following letter to the Chicago office of the company the other day:

"Enclosed I send you a clipping from Tit-Bits, current number, in which you will find one of your articles from Paste-Pot and Shears. This, I believe, is one of the few cases, if not the first one, in which Tit-Bits has inserted any moving picture advertisement.

"As you know, all they require is something very novel, and they do not care to insert anything in the advertising line."

The article reprinted by Tit-Bits from Selig's Paste-Pot and Shears will also bear reproduction here:

A dressing room on wheels is the latest innovation in "movieland." Charming Bessie Eyton, the Selig star, is the inventor of the very latest convenience for the motion-picture actress, who is frequently called upon to enact all kinds of character roles in all kinds of places.

Miss Eyton has arranged her automobile into a theatrical dressing-room. Dainty curtains hang at the windows and can be pulled over the front of the car. The interior is equipped with almost every convenience essential to the work of an actress. There is a "take-down" dressing-table, many mirrors, and a diminutive shelf which holds powder-puffs, grease-paints, etc.

The interior of this "dressing-room on wheels" also possesses a wardrobe in which the garments necessary for the character to be enacted on any particular day will be found.

"I found the equipment of an automobile dressing-room necessary," said Miss Eyton. "Upon many occasions we are compelled to travel miles from the studio, and there are not always adequate facilities for changing make-ups, etc. I predict that many other motion-picture actresses will possess automobile dressing-rooms before so very long."

William Lord Wright, the founder and editor of Paste-Pot and Shears, is the able director of Selig's publicity department.

Illinois Vice Film, "The Little Girl Next Door," For Adults Only.

About three years ago Lieut. Governor O'Hara of Illinois began an investigation of vice conditions throughout the state, the legislature voting $10,000 for the expense of the inquiry and a committee of state senators being appointed to carry on the work.

Now it appears that some people are aiming at making money by filming the story of the investigation under the title "The Little Girl Next Door."

The production of the story was placed in the care of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, and the lieutenant governor, the senators and other official characters were all brought into the scenario. The first showing of the pictures was made at a private exhibition in the Essanay plant, which was attended by a select gathering, including Dr. Brushingham, pastor of the South Park Methodist Episcopal Church. The pictures were to have had their first public showing in Dr. Brushingham's church, but after seeing them he declared that they would not be shown there.

The pictures were declared good if viewed by adults only, in a letter written to the chief investigator of the senate vice committee, by the secretary of the meeting which discussed the film after viewing it at Essanay's. This letter, in part, follows:

If the moving pictures of the report of the senate vice commission for revealing what was uncovered by that committee are considered by their value in exposing the evils referred to, then they should be credited as being of great value, and they should be of great help in arousing condemnation of the evils and securing the launching of plans for their suppression.

But the pictures should not be shown to persons under age, but to mature men and women they should be one powerful means for rousing feelings of horror and wrath because of their evidence of the prostitution of so large a part of human kind to such base practices.

For this purpose of using the pictures in the way here referred to I would not suggest the cutting out of any of the scenes.

Second Deputy Funkhouser has notified the promoters that he must pass on the film before a permit would be granted for its exhibition in Chicago.

Chicago Film Brevities.

On Friday evening, March 17, "Jack" Wheeler, editor of The Selig-Tribune, supervised a private presentation of news pictures at Washington, D. C., which showed President and Mrs. Wilson en tour in the Middle Western states, when the President made public addresses on "Preparedness." President and Mrs. Wilson, the members of the cabinet and of the executive staff, and other specially invited guests were present. The news reel was specially prepared for the occasion by Editor Wheeler, and everyone present was delighted with the pictures.

Agnes Egan Cobb, special representative of Claridge Films, arrived in the city Sunday, March 19, and spent two days in the city, in the interests of that output. Since leaving New York on March 13, Mrs. Cobb visited Philadelphia, Cleveland and Detroit before touching Chicago. She honored us by paying the World office a call, just for old times' sake. Mrs. Cobb was pleased with business prospects.

During the Lenten season Wm. H. Cadoret, western manager of Elmendorf Travel Talks, Inc., and owner of several theaters in Kankakee and adjacent cities, has booked "The Life of Our Saviour" for his circuit, and has engaged Ben Francis Whitney as lecturer. This feature is a well-known seven-reel Pathe hand-colored production. Lecturer Whitney has also been engaged as one of the lecturers on "Holland Travel Talks, and he will give his first lecture on "Holland and its Dykes" at the La Petite theater, Kankakee, on April 17.

A private demonstration of moving pictures showing Archbishop Mundelein's installation in Chicago, was recently viewed by the Archbishop and a number of prominent clergymen at the residence of the Rev. W. J. McNamee, this city. The Archbishop was much interested throughout and at the close said: "I am pleased with these pictures. It is the first time in my life that I have had an opportunity to see myself as others see me. It is, indeed, a novel experience to see ones-self in moving pictures." Father Felix Coughlan accompanied the pictures by a lecture. The Portoscope was used in the projection.

W. Baker, proprietor of the Gaiety Theater, Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, recently wrote to E. H. Montagu, European agent for the Selig Polyscope Co. in London, as follows: "We broke all records on March 4th with 'The Rosary.' We ran continuously from 12:00 to 10:30 p. m., running six shows. Some people stood in the cold for over three hours, rather than be disappointed. Never before has a picture been so much talked about. It has been the talk of the trade right through the North. Selig films I have always found to go. 'Pals in Blue' and 'Ma's Girl' were the goods. I find that my people still want the Westerns, and animal pictures are another draw." "War-torn Poland," an exclusive feature production in six reels, to be handled by the Selig Polyscope Co., was recently exhibited to Chicago newspaper men and the representatives of Polish relief societies. The Selig Company will place this feature on the market on the state rights plan, and in response to the wishes of Polish relief associations in every important city in the country, the Selig Company will see that the state rights buyers will co-operate with the association and devote a certain percentage of the proceeds to the Polish relief fund.

I attended the Colonial Sunday evening, March 19, and was obliged to stand in the lobby for fully 20 minutes before gaining entrance, owing to the tremendous gathering inside. The lobby itself was crowded, but no one showed any desire to miss the entertainment inside, as C. F. Hately had introduced a "new one," in order to keep the waiting crowd in good humor. He had a harpist and a violin virtuoso playing selections in the balcony overlooking the lobby. The playing did not interefere with the people inside the theater, as the doors were closed, and it contributed much pleasure to those who listened outside. The program at this house for the week beginning Sunday, March 26, includes the five-reel Fine Arts feature, "Sunshine Dad," with De Wolf Hopper in the lead. The soloists for next week will be Alexander Gray, barytone, and Miss Florence Lang, soprano.

We need a laugh once in a while in this moving picture business, and John Kendrick Bangs has furnished it in the Chicago Herald. Here it is:

"And what is your son William doing, Mrs. Bjones?" asked the visitor.

"Oh, Willie, he's an actor, and doing very well."

"William an actor?" said the visitor, "Why, I thought he was deaf and dumb?"

"He is," said Mrs. Bjones, "but that doesn't make any difference. He's playing Hamlet this week in the 'movies.'"

Miss Izora J. Deady, formerly of Texas and now of Chicago, would like to know the whereabouts of W. K. Ziegfeld, brother of Florence Ziegfeld, Jr. Miss Deady went into the South Clark street police court, this city, recently, and swore out a warrant charging Ziegfeld with operating a confidence game. She says he obtained $500 from her on the promise that he would make her a moving picture star. "I met Mr. Ziegfeld at a musical college and he promised to make me a 'movie' star," said Miss Deady. "He said he was organizing a $1,000,000 Ziegfeld film corporation in New York. He took $500 to place me. That was last September. I never got the position. I waited a while and then asked him for the money. I asked him several times, but he always put me off. Then he disappeared and I got the warrant." Miss Deady is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Byron Deady, of Beaumont, Tex. She is a young lady of 20, and is now living with her parents in Chicago.

Travers, one of Essanay's popular leading men, has engaged in a twenty-week vaudeville tour, during which he will visit the 20 largest cities in the United States, in each of which he will give an original monologue and a talk on moving pictures. His act will include the showing of 400 feet of animated cartoons, drawn by Wallace A. Carlson, which will touch on his work in the Essanay studios. He will make flying trips to Chicago during his tour, so as to put in two or three days a week at the Essanay studio. At the end of his tour he will take up his regular work with Essanay. PLAN SHAKESPEAREAN PAGEANT.

Prominent Los Angeles Photoplay Actors to Stage Outdoor Spectacle for the 300th Anniversary of Shakespeare's Birth.

AN OUTDOOR Shapespearean pageant, staged by some of the greatest actors now playing for the silent drama in the motion picture studios of Los Angeles, is scheduled for the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of William Shakespeare on the evening of May 19, by the Hollywood Business Men's Association and the Hollywood Carnival Association.

"Julius Caesar" as a huge outdoor spectacle in which several thousand people will take part will be enacted on a natural stage covering several acres of ground, at the head of Beechwood drive in beautiful Beechwood Canyon where nature has constructed an immense amphitheater that will easily seat 20,000 people.

The presentation of the play will be under the supervision of Raymond Wells, a director of the Griffith studios, and motion picture methods will be used in some scenes. There will be a large main stage and four smaller stages, and the "cut-back" of the motion pictures will be employed to assist in visualizing scenes being related by the actors, or otherwise to help make clear the action, lights being centered upon them at the proper moments.

A large orchestra will furnish the music and some of the ancient Roman music will be adapted. An army of electricians will be in charge of the lighting. A high-voltage wire will furnish the current, besides which the Lasky company will loan its portable lighting plant, which carries twenty lamps.

The battle of Phillipi will be put on, with hundreds of men on a plateau beyond the stages, and searchlights will play upon the combatants, and a line of flares in the rear will serve to throw them into silhouette. Several hundred people will appear in the mob scene, when Antony makes his funeral oration.

A facsimile of a row of Roman houses will form a facade for the processions which will wend their way up the hill to the palace.

Dr. Frank L. Riley, the noted English scholar, lately arrived from London, will have charge of the technical and archaeological features of the production. Capt. Lewis R. Ball will direct the military operations.

The dances will be in charge of Margie E. Riley, late of the Olympic Theater in London, Raymond Duncan, brother of Isadora Duncan, and Jacques Dalcroze, assisted by Miss Capitola Holmes, and Dorothy Ball.

Among the stars who will take part will be Constance Collier, Fannie Ward, Tyrone Power, De Wolfe Hopper, Lillian Gish, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Tully Marshall, Frank Mayo, Crane Wilbur, William H. Thompson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Guy Woodward, Charles Clary, Mabel Van Buren, Courtenay Foote and Wheeler Oakman.

The stage directors under Mr. Well's supervision, will be Francis Powers, Earnest Joy, Frank Beale and Frank Montgomery.

The profits derived from this great spectacle will be turned over to the Actors' Fund.

HORKHEIMERS WORKING LIKE BEAVERS.

Balboa Producers Turning Oue Some Great Pictures—H. M. Goes East—E. D. Returns.

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa is making his first visit of the new year to New York. His is a flying trip to the metropolis in the interest of several big deals. During his absence, E. D. Horkheimer, the company's secretary and treasurer, is in charge of production at the studio. One of these brothers is always in the East, while the other is west. They alternate, thus keeping fresh and abreast of market conditions. And E. D. had no sooner shook the soot of the train from his tired body than H. M. was aboard a limited speeding to the Atlantic coast.

One of the newest Balboa productions is "A Slave of Corruption." This picture, which was put on by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, at the Long Beach studio, is interesting because of its cast. Beside Jackie Saunders the featured player, there are such well known players as Victory Bateman, Mollie McConnell, R. Henry Grey, Frank Erlanger, Ethel Fleming, Richard Johnson and Philo McCullough.

Another trio of triple-reelers from the same studio will be released as Knickerbocker Star Features during the latter part of the month. Henry King will play the lead in one called "His Boy." To be seen in his support are Daniel Gilfether, Margeret Landis, Ruth Lackaye and Myrtle Reeves.

The second is "The Witch of the Mountains," a picturesque outdoor piece featuring Marguerite Nichols, supported by Gordon Sackville, Richard Johnson, Corene Grant, Ruth Lackaye and Bert Francis.

And the third is "The Home Breakers." Margaret Landis has the lead opposite Fred Whitman, and others in the same cast are Daniel Gilfether, Madeleine Pardee and Charles Dudley.

ONE ON DOROTHY.

Dainty Gish Girl Surprised at Griffith's Studio—Owen Moore Goes East.

"How one forgets ones age" is often heard by persons who feel that they are growing old—especially women.

Now there is one young woman in films who is so optimistic and so happy and so buoyant that she forgets her age. She is Dorothy Gish, the Fine Arts star and she celebrated her eighteenth birthday on March eleventh, and on that day was showered with birthday gifts of every conceivable description.

Miss Dorothy, who is the younger of the two famous Gish sisters, upon the arrival at the studio on the morning of her birthday, found her dressing room closed, and no one seemed to have the key. The watchman, who usually opens the sisters' dressing room each morning, pleaded ignorance as to the whereabouts of the key, and poor little Dorothy became very much perturbed.

Ten minutes had passed and her director, Paul Powell, sent word to Dorothy that the "set" was ready and waiting for her. Realizing that it would be an imposition to keep the director waiting, she solicited the aid of a property man, who broke open the door. She then met with a big surprise—the room was elaborately decorated with flowers, and birthday gifts were scattered all over the dressing room. She later learned that the dressing room key was purposely hidden by her sister, Lillian Gish, who was responsible for the dressing room surprise idea.

In honor of her birthday, Dorothy bought a new five passenger French model touring car and when through work at the studio that day, tested the motor at Ascot track, where Eddie Pullen won the recent one hundred mile race.

Miss Gish and Owen Moore are almost finished with the fourth Fine Arts play in which they co-starred. Included in this list are "Jordan is a Hard Road," "Betty of Greystone," "Little Meena's Romance," and their present Triangle production, which is still unnamed.

Owen Moore, included prominently in the list of featured Fine Arts players left on a flying trip to New York, where he will confer with his wife, Mary Pickford, before she signs any of the new contracts that are being offered her.

He will probably remain in the East for a week, and then return to the California studio. Mr. Moore will also replenish his wardrobe and bring back his racing automobile.

Almost everyone at the studio asked Owen to convey their regards to Broadway, and also to kiss Times Square. A majority of the players have been away from the gay Manhattan for over two years.

Doings at the Signal Studios.

"The Girl and the Game," the Signal-Mutual Series featuring Helen Holmes, is now almost completed. In the making of the seventh, eight and ninth episodes, the Signal Company obtained permission from officials of the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad to use their prize winning Mikado locomotive which was "dead-headed" through to Las Vegas, Nevada, where producer J. P. McGowan and his players were taking the scenes.

Monster Locomotive Used in "The Girl and the Game" Series

The engine which is said to be the most powerful passenger locomotive yet built had just been received at the Los Angeles yards from San Francisco where it won the Grand Prize at the Exposition and has never been used on the road. This steam monster is eighty feet long, has 63 inch driving wheels, weighs approximately 450,000 pounds, and costs over $26,000. It was this latest steam juggernaut that Helen Holmes drove at top speed in many of the scenes of these three episodes.

The next feature to be produced by the Signal Company is ten reel picture play called "Whispering Smith" from a story by Frank H. Spearman. It deals to a great extent with railroad work but woven into it there is also a strong western strain which will make the picture somewhat different from the type of films produced by the company in the past. J. P. McGowan will play the title role and Miss Holmes the opposite lead.

The second Signal company under direction of Murdock J. MacQuarrie has completed this week "Nancy's Birthright," a five reel photoplay featuring Edythe Sterling. In this picture Murdock MacQuarrie plays one of the leading roles, something he has not done since leaving Universal studios to join the Signal. Millard K. Wilson, Norbert A. Myles and V. T. Henderson are included in the cast.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The oft mentioned Scream Club, composed of news, scenario, and publicity writers, enjoyed a most loud and pleasurable scamper at the Hotel Alexandria on the night before St. Patrick's Day. There was a total of thirty-two superhuman members present who indulged in food and drink, with a lot of dancing between times. The party lasted well into the evening and everyone expressed their enjoyment. It was decided to hold another meeting soon.

Over at the Glendale Kalem studio James W. Horne has completed the sixth episode of the "Social Pirates," which is called "The Monna Vanna." This week he started on the seventh called "The Badger," with Marin Sais and Ollie Kirkby as leads. The rest of the cast is composed of Frank Jonasson, Ed. Clisbee, Thomas G. Lingham, Paul C. Hurst, and others.

Ernest Shipman did it! Went an got his face in the paper with a fish. Ernest went a hunting for swimming beauties out at Silver Lake and came back with the record of the season. It was a black bass, weighing five pounds, and was caught on a wooden minnow. The fish put up quite a fight and got Shipman in up to his knees to escape the weeds. The fish and game officials closed the pond after he caught the big one.

One of the busiest little places in the world is the new Hollywood studio of the Vitagraph where every member of the staff from W. S. Smith down to the boy who answers the telephones is working every minute. R. S. Sturgeon is busy preparing to market his big five months' feature, and the others on the grounds are turning out pictures right and left.

This week the new laboratory at the Jesse L. Lasky studio was running full blast, and doing something new for them, turning out prints for the market. The new building is the most modern in the country and is a credit to its builders. This laboratory is completely equipped and is quite an addition to the large block of Lasky holdings.

Charles Clary, who recently was connected with the Lasky company, dropped into the World office for a little chat this week. He reported that he had been on the screens of three different theaters in Chicago last week. In "The Black List," a Lasky production; "Tennessee's Partner," and the re-issued "Adventures of Kathlyn," in which he plays the part of Prince Umballah. That is not a bad record at that.

That his faith in the newest Vitagraph feature "God's Country and the Woman," produced by R. S. Sturgeon, is strong, was proved here this week when Manager Anderson of Clune's famous Broadway theater displayed pictures of Nell Shipman, and a sign informing patrons that shortly after April 30th, the release date for this picture, the feature would be shown at this theater. That is booking and advertising a film in advance, and Mr. Anderson is confident of cleaning up with it.

At the Fine Arts studio Douglas Fairbanks planned to entertain the Scream club with a wild west dance in a large barn. He purchased many decorations, including Barleycorn and other pleasant things, sent out a bunch of cowboys to fix up the place, but they gazed upon the countenance of Barleycorn so much that they started to shoot up the place and as a result poor Doug had to postpone his party and send Bennie the famous Lubinville author out to warn Screamers to keep away. However the party will come off next Saturday night. Everyone will go dressed as cow punchers, soldiers, westerners, miners, and so on.

Mrs. Ella Woods, wife of "Spec" Frank E. Woods, manager of the F. A. studio, has left Los Angeles, accompanied by Mrs. W. E. Wing, wife of the noted scenarioist and humorous writer and speaker, on a trip to New York by automobile. The two women will drive straight to the East, bearing a letter from the West Coast studio to the principal Triangle office on the East Coast.

Ella Woods, Who Will Drive from Los Angeles to New York.

The journey is being made under the auspices of the Automobile Club of Southern California. The southern route will be used, as the club scouts advise that the northern one is in a bad shape.

Roland Bottomley, Balboa's new leading man, had a fine introduction. In his first production, he had to play the poor but honest puddler in a rolling mill. Never having seen anything of the sort, he had no idea of his duties. At a critical moment in the action, a nearby blast furnace exploded. But it never feazed Bottomley. "Remember you're British" went through his consciousness at the critical moment; and the result was a "shot" far more realistic than the scenario writer dared to call for.

A beautiful interior setting is being used this week by Director Charles Giblyn at the Ince Studios in the filming of some scenes for the Kay-Bee feature in which Frank Keenan stars. It consists of three distinct rooms and represents part of the ground floor of a modern Southern mansion. Nearly a week was required by Technical Director Robert Brunton, and his forces in the building of the set. An unusual feature of its construction is the use of genuine tapestries in the panels of the walls. The cast that is appearing in support of Keenan includes such well known Ince favorites as Louise Glaum, Charles Ray, Gertrude Claire and George Fisher. The story is by J. G. Hawks, who wrote "Bullets and Brown Eyes," starring Bessie Barriscale, which is making a hit on the local screens this week.

After a couple of weeks' fine sunny weather that even brought out panamas and flannels, the climate has changed suddenly and we find ourselves all dolled up with rubbers, overcoats and umbrellas, to say nothing of side curtains and skid chains. Unnecessary to say everyone is "at home" and sweltering under the lights. No locations for several days perhaps, unless Mack Sennett's going to make "rain" stuff.

De Wolf Hopper's name is now on the Los Angeles police record—not for a serious crime—just speeding, for he was driving his new automobile at a rate of fifty miles an hour on the Hollywood Boulevard. The star goodnaturedly paid his $25.00 fine, realizing that he was breaking the speed laws, and asserted that the experience fully compensated him for the fine.

When caught by the motor policeman, Hopper was on his way to the studio, where Director Edward Dillon was waiting for him to act in a scene of "The Philanthropist," a high brow comedy-drama by Chester Withey. In telling of his arrest the renowned comedian smilingly said "What an appropriate name for this picture. I have given away $25 already this morning and haven't even started work."

He has had his new machine three weeks and has just learned to drive. During the fourteen years he owned his other automobile, he never touched the steering wheel.

Bill Desmond is surely a most unassuming and modest chap for, the other evening while watching him and Bessie Barriscale in Inces "Bullets and Brown Eyes," we spied the star himself sitting in the loge behind us. After the show, in the foyer, we met Bill and started telling him what a good actor he is and how we enjoyed the picture, and the rascal started jollying and went on out as if we were trying to "kid" him.

Next time he makes a good picture we will roast him.

Here we have been boosting and telling what a fine feature R. S. Sturgeon must have made in "God's Country and the Woman" and how anxious we were to see the review—and now we find that they have had the first running and shipped the film east for release next month. Next time R. S. of Vitagraph makes a picture he'll know it—we won't—there now!

However, Sturgeon, while preparing for his next Blue Ribbon feature, a well-known detective story by Cleveland Moffett, is working on a unique one reel comedy that, without a doubt will be the last word in frills and fashions of the decorator's art. The idea is novel and was originated by Edgar Keller, an artists now assisting Sturgeon in the art department. The idea appealed to Sturgeon at the first hearing, and he reserved it for his own personal production.

The Fine Arts studio donated the services of some of its talent to take part in the entertainment held by Father Taylor at the Blessed Sacrament Church.

Fred Hamer was in charge of that section of the program, which included Fred Wilson, in Irish songs; Rhea Haines, selections from Gluck on the piano; and five members of the Mae Marsh orchestra, William De Vaull, guitar; George Cox, cello; John Mason, violin; Lloyd Holton, improvised traps and Harry Moody, piano. The Mae Marsh orchestra made a big hit with their choice selection of Wagner, Bizet, Chopin, Puccini, Verdi and Leoncavallo.

They wound up with the Lubinville Rag, a piece written by the Scream Club and dedicated to Bennie Zeidman, director of publicity for Griffith.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived from New York this week, making the trip to the coast particularly to see the many improvements that have been made at Universal City during the past six months, new stages, electric light studios and laboratory buildings, valued at more than $250,000, having been constructed during that period.

David Kirkland has returned to Universal, and will assume the position of co-director with Robert Leonard. His leading lady will be Gladys Brockwell in a second company, while Mr. Leonard is directing Ella Hall. Mr. Kirkland is a well known actor and for ten years played with such distinguished stars as Maude Adams and Henry Miller.

In order to secure real ship atmosphere for "The King of Broadway," a company of Universal players under direction of W. J. Bowan made a trip to Los Angeles harbor this week and took a number of scenes aboard the steamer "Congress."

It proved quite a novelty for the passengers on the big vessel to see the well known comedy star Carter De Haven being lowered into the ship's hold in a huge packing box making his bed with a dog as a stowaway and going through all the funny business called for in the script.

Some 500 Shriners with their wives and friends visited Universal City Saturday last week and appeared in a drama especially written for them and directed by Otis Turner, also in a comedy written for their benefit and directed by Roy Clemments. The play contained twenty-four scenes and required three hours to film. H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager of the Universal company, assisted Director Turner. William S. Brown of Pittsburgh took the part of a sheriff. William O. Washburn, Minneapolis, in full woman's regalia, acted the part of the sheriff's wife. Dr. O. W. Burdat of Wheeling, W. Va., was a film tramp. These were the principals.

At first there was considerable chaffing and much horseplay among the "actors," but soon the rasping commands of the directors, the constant clicking of the camera and the general idea of the play became real and the performers jumped into the work in a way that elicited much praise from the big crowd of picture fans present.

The film will be shown at all of the 139 shrines in America as soon as copies of the negative can be made. Pictures of the visiting Shriners were taken for the Animated Weekly and will be shown in all parts of the country.

J. J. Shubert of the well known New York theatrical firm was a guest of H. O. Davis, at Universal City this week. Other prominent visitors at Universal City were Senator A. F. Frudden and wife of Dubuque, Iowa, Adolph S. Ochs, owner of the New York Times accompanied by his wife and daughter and Ezra M. Lawton, American consul at Teguagalpa, Honduras, accompanied by officials of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. The consul made the statement that he has been working with the exhibitors of Honduras to get them to use American-made films instead of those imported from France. He declared it is his opinion that the American product is far superior and it is only a question of time before they will be in demand.

Paul Byron has returned to Universal and will appear in juvenile roles. Before entering pictures Mr. Byron had considerable experience on the speaking stage having appeared in William A. Brady productions, was leading juvenile for the late Mabel Hite, juvenile lead with Annie Russell and has played in stock in different parts of the United States and also Australia. Mr. Byron has been connected with the Universal before and played an engagement with the Smalleys.

Alexander Pantages, the well known head of the Pantages Vaudeville Circuit is the latest arrival in the film producing game. Mr. Pantages we are informed is negotiating for a studio here where he plans to produce comedies for his 15 own vaudeville theaters and a score or more affiliated theaters. Chris Richards, an English comedian now playing the Pantages circuit will head the Pantages company. Pantages claims Richards is the funniest man on the stage and believes that in films he will be funnier than in vaudeville.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

I HAVE always had such an abhorrence for Mr. Arthur Brisbane. He has been so cold and clammy in his remarks. He speaks so pointedly. He loves nature. He defies falsehood. He would die rather than declaim that which is advertised. He never became excited about anything. He kept his steady way. He has been receiving a steady salary. But, has Mr. Brisbane been dealing right? He goes back into ancient history. Let us come down to every day facts. Is not Mr. Brisbane buying property outside the limits of New York and improving it? Has he not bought property within sixty-five miles of New York, and is he not holding it for an advance?

Mr. Brisbane started in one time (not five years ago) to hammer the motion picture industry as he does the intemperance theme today. Mr. Brisbane owns today, at least the title is in his name, more than $30,000 worth of property that to the natives was not worth $10,000. He put cement pavements in. In fact, I believe, he got the local board of control to make every property owner put in cement pavements. He is a builder, but not of the motion picture. He is a builder at the rate of his salary. He is a great writer, but as a critic he is a miserable failure. He cannot become excited about censorship, he says. But, says he, "I believe that in the next campaign the man that studies this and uses genius to get at the facts will find it a very large factor." Then he says, "For instance, if they take what I believe you call a 'close up' picture of some of the things which may happen, you will do something worth while."

There is no artist born who could draw in paint a better picture than has been formulated by these words.

A champion of the people's rights was asked to speak. The question was "Censorship." He spoke about 20,000,000 years ago. He did not deal with the question of today. He stood upon the sands of the beach of the property he holds and controls—not as man to man. If he ever read the constitution of the United States (and he is supposed to have done so), he would go beyond his salary. The very county in which he owns property was the only one that voted for the Women's Suffrage amendment last fall.

Well, here is an influentive editor working for the Women's Suffrage movement. He believes in equal rights and priviliges. He must be an equitable man. He must be a man that the motion picture people should be able to appeal to with confidence on this statement of facts. The Women's Suffrage Movement is based upon the principle of equality. Woman, according to the propaganda, is equal with man, with the addition that woman has a finer sense as to the duties of a citizen than man has. Concede all this. The first call of Women's Suffrage is equality. What is equality under the constitution of the United States? If the present laws discriminate against woman so far as the exercise of the ballot is concerned then there is no equality. But, say, an amendment is made to the laws and the women are given the vote. They win their equality.

But take the case of the South Carolina women who constitute the membership of the Women's Suffrage Association and who have petitioned the State Legislature for censorship on motion pictures. Are they for equal rights? Do they consider the constitution with respect to ALL?

A Pittsburg manager was warned that a certain scene of a popular motion picture had been censored and he should not produce it upon the screen. When the offensive (?) part was reached he had it enacted by living characters, and neither the police, nor the censorship board interfered. In fact there is nothing to show that the WOMEN'S Suffrage movement made an effort to show that there was any constitutional discrimination.

I am very sorry to see one of the oldest of the exchange men in the moving picture business opening an exchange whereby the smaller producers may have an opportunity to put on the market, through him, what they could not land with the regular concerns. The little man should have a chance at all times—if he is entitled to it; but the little man is responsible for the censorship agitation. He will not sell, because pictures bring big returns, he thinks. He hires studios to get his pet ideas in pictures. He thinks he has a mine. Others do not think so. But he makes a picture and gets one like our "old exchange man" to exploit it on a commission. Neither he, nor the exchange man, figure the loss that may be suffered by other good productions. The "fan" counts on his commission and the exchange man his rental. In other words, "ready money." This policy cannot run long. It may bring in quick returns, but the plant must die. Meanwhile the houses suffer by poor productions. The cheap manager finds himself in a hole and "must come back." The legitimate men suffer because the patrons have become disgusted, but the cheap exchange continues.

The great trouble is that many people who think they know how to write, and have in hand a scenario that they think is worth more than its actual value, have an idea that they can make more by producing the plays themselves. I will guarantee that there is not a reputable studio in existence that has not in hand more manuscripts that will better answer the purpose than nine-tenths of those submitted by the daily contributor. For instance, some old lady will submit a title based upon the romances of her life. It does not matter that the same theme has been treated upon before. "This is based upon life incidents." The script is rejected and the old lady proceeds to organize a company to have it produced. Of course (if she has the gasoline), she finds many backers. A young man has a father (who has exhausted all other means to get something in return) calls at a studio with a scenario and offers it "free gratis" on condition that he be allowed to play the hero. That is where the exchanges get an opportunity to afford an opening to those who cannot "get in with other companies." And there is the flashily dressed and beautifully powdered young lady. No, she has not had stage experience. She is an amateur. Her friends say she is a splendid type and should make a hit in pictures. "Have you appeared in public"? "Oh! Why, yes; quite frequently. Ask Mr. Violin, of the Skipum Cabarette. I was quite a favorite there."

And so they come along. Relatives and friends who appear at all the church festivals, social gatherings, cabarettes, dances, hop-scotches, and what else. All beautiful and full of ambition to appear upon the screen. Most of them do not want money. They want experience—not a few simply wish to see their faces (and have their friends see them) just once upon the screen.

Is it surprising that the trained people of the stage keep in the back ground rather than be thrown into association with the so-called "extras"? The stage is almost a past with many capable and deserving people. Many are going into pursuits entirely foreign to their calling and their life. Others who are tied to the theatrical profession seek havens in the studios. To meet some of the class spoken of is hard, but with professional grit, if not necessity, the army is steadily falling in line and it will not be long before the line between the stage and the studio will be entirely obliterated. So it becomes quite apparent that when we speak of the "Actors Fund" we mean all who are engaged in the amusement and entertainment of the public, whether it be on screen or stage. When the ripe time comes and the stage actor and screen actress crosses the St. George Ferry and they pass through the gates to the "Home" let the cry "Did you bring your trunk, George?" apply to his screen wife as well. Every picture man can afford something for the Actors' Home.

BROOKLYN MEN ORGANIZING FEATURE COMPANY.

The Kemble Film Corporation has been organized under the laws of New York. At the head of the company is William H. Kemble. James O. Miller is treasurer and H. Clark Mooney secretary and assistant treasurer. The three named constitute the board of directors. The capitalization is $75,000, of which one-third is preferred. It is the intention of the Kemble company to make feature pictures.

Mr. Kemble is president of the Big "T" Film Corporation and the W. H. Kemble Theaters Corporation. During the summer of 1915 he presented "The Birth of a Nation" at the Brighton Beach Music Hall. The Big "T" company is the distributor for Brooklyn and Long Island and for the Triangle. Mr. Miller is treasurer of the two companies named and of the Brighton Beach Music Hall Company, Inc. Mr. Mooney is associated with Mr. Kemble in his enterprises.

Farnham-Boone Service Bureau

New Concern Will Assist Directors, Players and Writers—Offices in Candler Building.

A MOTION picture service bureau planned along decidedly original lines has been inaugurated by Joseph W. Farnham and J. Allen Boone, two widely-known picture men and publicity experts, who have opened a suite of offices in the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street. The new firm will act in an advisory capacity for producers; will serve as business managers for directors, players and writers and will exploit the higher type of motion picture attractions.

Mr. Farnham is one of the most popular men in the picture game today. For some years he was associated with the Morning Telegraph, writing the "Gordon Trent" observations. Later he was associated with The Billboard, writing under the name of "The Big Fellow." He was general manager of the All Star Feature Corporation, but resigned this position to go "somewhere in France" and secure war pictures in the interest of the Carnegie Peace Foundation. For some time Mr. Farnham was advertising and publicity director for the Lubin Company, incidentally writing his views on plays and players in general under the name of "Penn N. Pensyl." He also acted as publicity director for the Ocean Film Corporation.

J. Allen Boone is widely known as a newspaper and magazine writer. He began his writing career as a special correspondent in Newport, R. I., and his humorously frank articles on "The Four Hundred" created wide interest. Later he was associated with the Philadelphia Press and the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, as an editorial and special writer. Mr. Boone has traveled extensively throughout Europe and the Mediterranean countries as a wandering writer, and has been an extensive contributor to newspapers and periodicals, not only throughout this country, but in London and on the continent as well.

In speaking of the new service bureau, Mr. Farnham said: "We plan to make this service a big important factor in the motion picture industry. Mr. Boone and I have been working on plans for some time. We will have associated with us a number of men who are experts in every line of the profession, so that at all times we can give the manufacturer the highest type of service, no matter what he wants. We have so systematized this that we can, if the occasion arises, provide a client with a studio, get a good scenario for him, cast all the parts, engage a competent director and market his picture when it is finished.

"We are at present acting as representatives for a large number of directors, players and writers, among them being Tom Moore, Alice Joyce, Richard Buhler, Ethel Clayton, June Daye, Ormi Hawley, Alan Hale, Harry Meyers, Rosemary Theby, Lilie Leslie, Joe Kaufman, George Terwilliger, Frankie Mann, Louise Huff, George Spencer, Marshall Farnum, Jack Harvey, Wray Physioc, Rene Plaissetty, William F. Haddock, Joseph W. Smiley, Cortlandt Van Deusen, Walter Macnamara, George De Carlton, H. Allen Farnham, Harry Spingler, William Cohill, Walter E. Perkins, Charles C. Brandt, Charles E. Graham, Arthur Housman, William H. Turner, Ruth J. Bryan, Ethel Kaufman, Eleanor Blanchard, Julia R. Hurley, Tom Bret, John B. Clymer, Anthony P. Kelly, H. A. D'Arcy, Adrian Gil-Spear, Lawrence McCloskey, George D. Proctor, Shannon Fife, A. L. Stillman."

UNIVERSAL TAKES SCENES IN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

There are many people who would doubt the statement that scenes for a photoplay were made inside the sacred walls of a Catholic church, but such scenes actually were made in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Hollywood, Cal., for a feature production by one of the producing companies of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

That all denominations are strict in connection with the use of their houses of worship for anything other than religious purposes is well known, and that the Catholic church is even more firmly opposed to the use of its edifices for any purpose whatsoever outside of matters pertaining to its own particular faith, is a thoroughly understood fact the world over. However, when Vice President and General Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Company made it known to several of his close friends connected with the Catholic church that one of his companies making features required the use of an interior so that the church scenes would be perfect in every detail, permission was secured for Mr. Davis to film the interior of the Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Hollywood.

To Solve "Children" Question

Cincinnati Exhibitors Will Give Special Programs in Ten Theaters for Children Only.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.—In order to give a fair test to the plan of offering programs specially prepared for audiences of children, Cincinnati exhibitors have offered to see that not less than ten theatres, located in various parts of the city give such programs regularly until a success or failure of the idea is fully demonstrated. This was decided upon at a meeting of a special committee of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of which Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra, is chairman.

The meeting was attended by representatives of the Women's City Club and the Women's Civic League, who urged the desirability of programs for the children, and Mr. Weigel and his fellow-exhibitors promptly showed their willingness to meet the public half-way on the proposition. "This would be in the nature of a test," Mr. Weigel pointed out. "We exhibitors are willing to do all in our power to determine the value of the plan from a business standpoint. Of course, if we should find that such programs were not patronized we would be compelled to discontinue them." Suggestions will be received from the women's organizations and from local educators as to just what is wanted for this purpose, and it is expected that before long something can be done to try out the plan, which has met with pronounced success in other cities.

ETHEL CLAYTON.

ETHEL CLAYTON, for the past four years one of the leading feature stars with the Lubin Company, with sixteen big feature productions to her credit, has become a permanent member of the World-Equitable Corporation and within one hour of signing was allotted the principal female role in "The Woman of It," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Paul McAllister will appear opposite her and which will be staged at a point somewhat distant from Saranac in the interior of the Catskills and Adirondacks. Miss Clayton's contract with World and Equitable was signed twenty minutes after she arrived in New York from Philadelphia.

Ethel Clayton.

Miss Clayton appeared in no less than sixteen features during the past three years, the more important ones of which include "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Gamblers," "The House Next Door," "The Fortune Hunter" and "The Wolf," and recently completed her final appearance for her former company in "The Great Divide." Miss Clayton left the screen two years ago to play the leading role in William A. Brady's production of "The Brute" and returned to the screen later, preferring the silent to the spoken drama.

World and Equitable have an ambitious program arranged for the popular screen player. Her appearance in "The Woman Of It" will introduce her to her great following on the World program, after which, it is thought, she will be seen about every ten weeks in either a World or Equitable production. "The Woman Of It" is now in the course of construction at the Premo studios.

VICTOR DE LINSKY IN "THE KISS OF HATE."

Lieutenant Victor De Linsky, retired from the Russian army after being wounded seven times, and decorated for valor with the gold and silver cross of the Order of St. George, plays a prominent role in "The Kiss of Hate," a forthcoming Metro feature picture in which Ethel Barrymore is starred. It is a story of Russian romance and intrigue, and the Lieutenant was quite valuable to William Nigh, who directed the production, because of his knowledge of Russian official life.

Doings in Cape Town

Picture Theaters in Far-Away South Africa Report Good Business—American Subjects Popular.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

Cape Town, South Africa.

NOTWITHSTANDING existing war conditions, business in Cape Town continues to maintain its usual steady standard. The African Films Trust, Limited, which now has acquired control of practically every picture theater of any importance in South Africa with the outstanding exception of Fisher's Elite Bioscope, Cape Town, has devoted special attention to the importation of good films for their theaters, and the South African public has no reason to complain of the quality of the films now being submitted.

Cape Town has been the center of much interest to the cinema world during the holiday season. Fisher's, at the Grand theater, has been presenting some exceptionally good subjects, the result of their enterprise being that the healthy notice "House Full" is to be seen nightly. Among the best features shown at this theater recently have been World Films, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The Dollar Mark" and "When It Strikes Home," the first mentioned two featuring Robert Warwick, who at once found much favor with the Cape Town picturegoers. The Universal serial, "The Master Key," is now running to full houses, and the thrilling adventures of John Dore and Ruth Gallon are eagerly followed by hundreds each week.

Lawrence Craig, A. R. C. M., late violinist leader of the Cape Town Municipal Orchestra, is now solo violinist of the Elite Orchestra under the direction of Isidor Fisher. A feature of the entertainment at the Grand theater is the splendid rendering of the latest American and English musical selections.

The Alhambra Picture Palace, the Trust's premier Bioscope theater, has had a good run of business, and some excellent films have been featured at this large hall. Among the best have been the London Company's "Ashes of Revenge," "The Easterbrook Case" (Vitagraph), "The Pit" and "As Ye Sow" (World Films). The much discussed film, "Three Weeks," is now being shown. The Cape Town public opinion on this film is that while, from an artistic point of view, this subject leaves nothing to be desired, it is more than a pity that the undoubted art and outlay could not have been expended on something better worth while than what Justice Younger has accurately described as "a glistening account of adulterous sensuality." It is a pity, too, that the cinema, with its opportunities for the education and amusement of the masses, should be made the means of advertising a distinctly immoral book such as the one in question. Notwithstanding the outcry against the showing of this film, packed houses have been the result, and the management of the Alhambra has decided to extend the period of the showing of "Three Weeks" for another three days.

Manager Phillips, of Wolfram's Bioscope, reports good business at his theater, where also a splendid selection of films are always to be seen. The London film, "A Garret in Bohemia," was recently shown to large audiences, and several other exceptionally well produced features have been included in the program at this popular "two-houses-a-night" show.

Of the suburban theaters, Jackson's Regal Bioscope, Wynberg, is drawing large crowds nightly, and has been presenting some good films of late. The Lyceum theater, Observatory, has no cause to complain at the support of the public in this district, and it, too, has the reputation of always providing an enjoyable evening's entertainment.

Much interest is being aroused throughout South Africa over the new African Films Production Company. The public is eagerly looking forward to seeing the first picture, "A Story of the Rand," which is now nearing completion at the studio in Johannesburg. Lorimer Johnston, formerly producer for the Vitagraph Company, recently toured the country in search of suitable places and settings for future productions, and is expected to arrive in Cape Town at an early date. It is surprising to hear of the enthusiasm which is shown by numerous applicants for positions as players in the new company. From all parts of South Africa inquiries are received, and there is no doubt that at some near future date this country will be assisting the British trade in no small degree by offering some of the World's best photoplays, produced and entirely completed in one of Mother Britain's youngest colonies.

GUY HEDLUND NOW UNIVERSAL DIRECTOR.

Guy Hedlund has begun work as a producer with the Universal City forces, and for a time will stage comedies. His first production is entitled "H. Oboe Rhodes—Wild Animal King," and in this comedy Paul Bourgeois, the famous trainer of wild animals, enacts the title role, while the support includes Miss Jean Taylor, leading woman, Florence Nosat and Joe Martin, the latter being an educated orangoutang. The scenario, which was written by Frank M. Wiltermood, Universal staff author, involves the use of the entire menagerie of wild beasts at the U studios, all of which will be used to create laughable episodes.

SELZNICK HAS NEW PRESS AGENT.

L. Richard Schayer, who for the past few months has been promoting publicity for the World-Equitable Film Corporation, resigned from that position last week to align himself in a similar capacity with Lewis J. Selznick, president and general manager of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation. Mr. Schayer was formerly a press representative for the late Henry B. Harris, Henry W. Savage and Klaw & Erlanger, and at other times a prominent correspondent of the New York World and Herald.

WHERE DOES THE CHURCH STAND.

The growing relationship between the church and the moving picture is sufficient reason for our giving prominence to the view of two leaders who are writing and working for the best uses and results of the moving pictures both in theory and practice in the churches and educational institutions of the United States.

The first article is written by Mr. Orrin G. Cocks, advisory secretary of the National Board of Censors and contributed also to a leading religious periodical, and the second one by a New York clergyman who is a leader in the use of the moving picture as an aid to his church work. Every one to whom this subject is important should be given an opportunity to read these articles.

The Church, which is concerned with the sources of action, must recognize the power of this new instrument for the entertainment and the instruction of the people. Countless thousands who respond but seldom to the call of the Church and her teachings are thronging daily to the picture theaters. Here they see presented in the most vivid and gripping manner the interplay of motives and emotions. They think, as they follow the fortunes of the hero and the personification of evil. They develop habits of mind which make it easier or more difficult to venture into the experiences of life. This is no new plaything of a few persons who are amusement mad. It is an ever-changing vital force which catches people when they are care-free and relaxed. It must be reckoned with and guided in its development that it may do its share in molding character in wholesome ways.

Why is there so much inertia and dead weight of opposition to the motion picture on the part of the Church? Is it impossible for the show to be decent and wholesome, even if it is purely for amusement and for the brightening of life? Must things be frowned upon which are not serious, ponderous and uplifting? Must church people continually eye the motion picture askance and be ready to pounce upon minor weaknesses? Shall the Church lose influence by refraining from whole-hearted approval of the photoplay which is within the limits of cleanness and decency? Shall the motion picture be called the most formidable rival or competitor of the Church when it can be made to assist? It is undoubtedly the fact that the Church has withheld its sanction to this form of public entertainment. Here and there daring individuals have set themselves against the current. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, through its Social Service Department, is now granting an approval. Those daring souls who have recognized the desire of the people for the joys of life have been surprised at the returns in interest in their message and the institution which they represent.

Possible Uses: After discussing some of the principles involved, a series of questions present themselves centering around the use of the motion picture. Some of these, like the problem of the Sunday opening of motion-picture houses in cities, cannot be discussed in this article. A minister in Denver concluded that it was far better for him to co-operate with a neighboring exhibitor than to introduce the motion picture machine in his church. This arrangement began by the expressed willingness of the exhibitor to help raise the money needed to put a new roof on the church. The results of this friendly interest were so complete that little money needed to be raised elsewhere. Following the venture, the minister established such close relations with his friend, the exhibitor, that he often came over to the photoplay house for a five-minute talk after some specially good film, to drive home the moral. The results in establishing new relationships and increasing the attendance at church have been far-reaching.

Actual Experiences.

A minister in Sweetwater, Texas, arranged with an acquaintance, who was an exhibitor of another denomination, to use his house on Sunday afternoons for a combination service of music, pictures and address. When he changed his parish to Jonesboro, Arkansas, he was able to develop the same friendly relations, and now speaks to an audience of from five hundred to eight hundred and uses carefully selected films with a religious or moral tinge, which seem to be effective in changing the lives of individuals in his audience.

The junior congregation in the Christian Church in San Jose, California, have used motion pictures for three years with success. W. G. Brewster says, "We have found the service to be the most valuable point in contact with the unchurched population of our city we have ever discovered. People who could not be induced to enter a church building for a distinctly religious service can be induced to come and see the pictures on Saturday afternoon. Thus it becomes a stepping-stone to a closer affiliation; the habit is formed, they begin to feel at home in the building; their steps turn naturally in our direction, and as invitations to attend our Sunday service are always presented before our junior congregation, the closer approach is made natural and easy. Especially is this true in connection with our foreign-born population. It has been a feeder for our Bible school and was a vital help in enabling us to have a school on Sunday a week ago with an attendance of 1,149. The attendance upon our regular church services has noticeably increased with a splendid gain in our evening service."

Are Proving Attractive.

A few clergymen have recognized the value of the motion picture in attracting the people in the small villages and rural neighborhoods for community purposes. They have felt the drift toward the cities and have attempted to meet it in a manner similar to that of Mrs. Porter in her new book, "Michael O'Halloran." The lives of many persons in rural communities are devoid of amusement. Such persons lead their independent lives on farms and have little of the community feeling which makes the city so attractive. When the motion picture is introduced into the parish house, the school, or the church, immediately the people gather and find themselves neighbors and friends. This instrument, which brings the world to their door, is the means of developing community centers and a common purpose. The Rev. H. F. Robbins, of Canasagera, New York, has a thrilling story to tell for those who have ears to hear.

For the Young People.

But what of the young people? They are at the same time the inspiration and the despair of clergymen. They will have enjoyment. They will play. They will go to the motion picture whether you want them to or not. The appeal is stronger than the prohibition. With the development of self-consciousness, they determine that they will not be preached to continually. All life becomes an adventure and they will have their part in it. They desire the good rather than the bad, but they want something all the time, whether it is good or bad. Left to themselves, they will choose good, clean fun and wholesome thrill as well as judicially presented education. Nothing is gained with them, therefore, by polemics against the motion picture. When there is absolute opposition, the young person decides that this comes from narrow bias and the formal spirit. He reacts against the advice and warning which may be wise and sorely needed in other lines.

The age of transition from youth to manhood and womanhood marks the greatest falling away from the church. Possibly some of this can be arrested during this time of strain and stress if recognition is accorded to fundamental needs and support is given to such agencies as the motion picture in meeting these needs.

Their Social Influences.

People are slowly recognizing the social influences of the motion picture, which have developed as by-products of its growth and appeal. Will you call to mind the aimless wanderings of hosts of young people on week days and Sunday nights in your town? Thousands of these were on the street in small groups, searching for friendship, excitement and mates. Many of the social and moral barriers were let down and parents were given many a heartache and struggled to avoid or hide many a scandal. A certain amount of this is inevitable with every generation. But with the coming of the motion picture, another element has been introduced. All through the day in the shops, factories and stores, on the street and in the cars, the films in the neighborhood picture houses are being discussed. These same young people, in large proportion, now find their way nightly to the "movie," and are at least held under the spell of something more impersonal than one another.

Their Holding Power.

The motion picture has demonstrated in scores of cities and towns that it has a more powerful hold upon the men than has the saloon. Liquor licenses are falling off, the corner saloon disappearing, and sobriety in the home of working men is supplanting the spending of money across the bar. All of which demonstrates incidentally that human nature is good, and that when it has the opportunity to choose between the higher and the lower, all other things being equal, it will choose the higher. Here, then, is a great new art which has laid hold of all classes of people. Its ethical influences are far-reaching and vital. Whether we desire it or not it is here to stay.

The part of wisdom would seem to direct that the Church co-operate in its development, and utilize it in every possible way in religious instruction and in reaching the unchurched masses.

A PLEA FOR MOTION PICTURES IN THE CHURCH.

By Rev. Christian F. Reisner, Pastor, Grace M. E. Church, New York City.

Motion pictures are a valuable asset to the church—18,000,000 see them daily. Men who formerly patronized the saloons now go home to find a happy instead of complaining family, who are eagerly looking forward to going out with him to see motion pictures. This habit has actually injured saloon patronage and united families that were otherwise estranged.

Eye-gates let in valuable information. The stereopticon has been for years a valuable helper of the church and Sunday School. Everyone has a more vivid picture of conditions when the life is reproduced in actual motion. If there is no objection to a stereopticon, there can be none to motion pictures, for they are individual pictures run through faster than when the stereopticon is used.

Wesley would not permit a musical instrument in the church; some are still shocked by the use of an orchestra. High Price Huges got a hearing in London with a brass band, which he utilized when he opened St. James Hall. Motion pictures attract, but they also teach. If there is no intrinsic harm in them we are foolish to refuse their use.

Children have few pleasures in a great city. To give them happiness is to bring them nearer to God. If we have the lads in a church they will not fear it, but it will place itself in the center of their affection because it brought them happiness.

Prof. Wirt is installing motion pictures in all schools under the Gary System. The auditorium is utilized all day by different classes, who look upon the things they have studied in books and see them moving in actual life. City children see little chicks growing, cows feeding and being milked, plant life developing and a thousand other things which would otherwise be absolutely foreign to them.

Why should the church hesitate to use motion pictures to teach religion, such as is done by "From Manger to the Cross?" Why should the church fail to supply entertainment by utilizing the best drama and other feature reels which reproduce great literature?

Many of the great companies who make reels are organizing educational departments. The Paramount Pictures Corporation have made possible pictures more instructive than any book and compellingly attractive.

Every new church now erected is fitting itself to show motion pictures. Grace Methodist Church, in New York, early recognized the value of this, and four years ago installed a modern projection apparatus.

The Sunday School can study missions and Bible truths by its aid. For four years, thousands of children have been given hearty laughs every Sunday afternoon. People have been entertained Saturday night with clean, wholesome Paramount pictures. On Sunday nights motion picture reels are employed to give a local atmosphere to a particular kind of service. For example: When a Southern service was held, a reel depicting cotton growing, picking and handling was used while the choir sang Southern melodies softly. During the snow service, an Arctic exploration motion picture was shown. When the sermon dwelt upon total abstinence, a wonderful reel exhibiting trained wild animals was secured. When City Mission work was discussed a reel taken from actual life was secured which portrayed the redemption of a drunkard as he passed through the work of Morgan Chapel, Boston. The life of Jesus taken in Palestine and depicted in the reels called "From Manger to the Cross" was used during revival meetings, etc.

Other pastors, advised by the writer to use such pictures, write that conversions actually resulted and churches grew generally along all lines.

FILMS AND FOREST FIRES.

Wild life of animals, fishes and birds will be shown by Mr. G. D. Pratt, Commissioner of Conservation, in his address to the Commonwealth of Greenwich, N. Y. City. "The Match in the Forest," one of the films to be shown, is an actual picture of a forest fire started by a match. Mr. Pratt is a man of great wealth, who is filling the office of Commissioner of Conservation out of a pure desire to help in a good and great work and is using the moving pictures to arouse interest therein.

EDUCATIONAL EVENINGS.

Some time ago we noted the trial of this plan for the purpose of giving emphasis to the value of such a class of pictures which would repay any evening spent in seeing them. This does not necessarily mean that all pictures should be of a strictly educational character, but rather that they should be so selected that everyone would feel that not only had the evening not been wasted in a passing and perhaps unprofitable amusement, but that positive advantage had been experienced and profit and pleasure combined, so that the profit became the superior factor. In Pittsburg, Pa., an Episcopal church has tried several of these "Educational Evenings," and is now venturing on its third series with the assurances of former successes as the guarantee of future more than satisfactory results. The pictures are, as a rule, such as require the aid of a lecturer, which only enhances their value.

In Philadelphia the churches and schools are rivals for the securing of several Aclas projectors, which are being given by the "North American" for the purpose of increasing the popularity of motion pictures as educational entertainers. Whatever commercial advantage may accrue to the donors of these machines, the benefit gained by the winners will be by no means a small one, and the cause of educational kinematography will be advanced, any lawful means whereby this end can be secured should be encouraged.

NEW HOUSE FOR BEACON, N. Y.

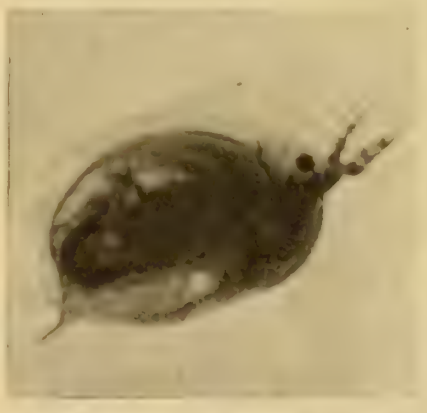
The Paragon Theaters Corp., of Beacon, N. Y., has purchased a lot in that town upon which it will erect a first class moving picture theater. Louis B. Jennings is president of the company, and the house will be operated by Miss Annie Rothery Meyer.

USES MICROSCOPE IN EDUCATIONAL SUBJECT.

Walter A. Brind of New Company Shows a Short Water-Life Picture That Will Interest.

WALTER A. BRIND is showing to exhibitors a bit of micro-cinematographic film which will provide an interesting diversion for picture goers. In the nearly 700 feet of film which marks the initial subject issued by the Educational and Scientific Film Company are shown the development of bacteria from a powdered lettuce leaf dropped in a glass of perfectly good drinking water, and allowed to ferment. Then come the infusoria—oval shaped, larger animalculae, the product of infusion of the vegetable matter in water. These consume the smaller bacteria, or such of them as they can surround.

The daphnia, or water fleas, follow. These tiny inhabitants of stagnant water in turn get after the infusoria, and for the latter there fight also the cyclops, cousins of the daphnia. The scenes of the daphnia include some unusual X-ray anatomical views of the little crustaceans. The heart, situated over the shoulder, is seen to pulsate, and the circulatory fluids performing their functions. The organs of digestion are visible.



Daphnia, or Water Flea, Magnified Many Thousand Times.

We are next introduced to the hydra, or fresh-water devil fish, which is a boneless or invertebrate "monster" (actually a scant quarter of an inch in length), possessed of five tentacle-covered "arms," radiating like the points of a star around a central point, in which is located the mouth of the animal. At the other extremity of the "stem" or body of the hydra, descending from the radiating arms, is a "root" or base, by means of which the hydra anchors itself to any stationary object, such as a stem of a plant, etc. The arms reach out continually in search of living food, infusoria, bacteria, daphnia, cyclops, etc., which are seized as soon as touched and drawn into the capacious maw of the ravenous octopus-like animal, there to be absorbed by muscular action. The young hydra is seen to branch off or bud from the parent stem, eventually detaching itself and establishing itself as a separate being.

Hydra, or Fresh Water Devil Fish, Showing Young Hydra Branching Off. Magnified Many Thousand Times.

The following scenes show how other living beings benefit by the existence of these tiny animals. We see the exquisite Mexican sword tail fish, a lovely pair of them, chasing and evidently greatly relishing the wily and elusive daphnia. The closing scene shows a superb growth of Japanese fantail and telescope goldfish, also dining on daphnia.

Walter A. Brind, who is responsible for these photographs, is the author of "Domesticated Fish," a work which has been commended by scientists. Associated with him in the Educational and Scientific Film Company are Max Beck and Frank De Maria, the latter of whom is the cameraman. Mr. Brind praised the painstaking work of Mr. De Maria. It was his knowledge of photography, combined with Mr. Brind's microscopic apparatus and researches that made the films possible. There will be more of these subjects. The temporary office of the company is at 98 Sixth avenue, New York.

When Director Eugene Nowland, late of Thanhouser, studied music he determined to be one of the head liners and eventually became a premier virtuso. And instead of stopping with two or three foreign languages he learned to speak eight of them fluently. And to-day it is not difficult to discover why he is one of the most thorough and efficient directors of the motion picture craft. His personal organization consists of himself, a secretary and librarian, camera man and an unusually complete experimental laboratory in his own home. There also he has assembled one of the largest and most valuable collections of pictures in the country. History, costumes, myth and fiction are represented and these are systematically filed for ready reference when needed. Add to this a vivid imagination with a capacity for hard work and you know what factors have made Nowland a master craftsman.

John Emerson

JOHN EMERSON, former Frohman star and stage director and now having emerged from one to the other in the Triangle-Griffith forces, once said that motion pictures were a good thing for the stage in that they were creating an audience for the legitimate drama. He believed then that people would soon tire of the pictures, and, having formed the habit of theater-going, would give their patronage to real plays. "The Flying Torpedo," a Triangle feature in which John Emerson was starred last fall before he became a full-fledged director and produced features with Dorothy Gish and Douglas Fairbanks and is now working with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree in "Macbeth"—goes out to Triangle exhibitors next week. So John Emerson has changed his mind and refers to the fullness of the ignorance with which he formerly lifted up his voice.

John Emerson.

"Having now acquired a broader knowledge and better perspective of the subject," is Emerson's conclusion, "I now think that the stage has been creating an audience for the pictures. Tremendous things are being done in pictures—bigger things than were ever dreaded of in our stage philosophy. The better directors are getting vision, and are carrying the people along with them. Those who have loved the drama and have become disgruntled at its decadence are turning in ever and rapidly increasing numbers to the broader and more inclusive art of the pictures."

Emerson's entire career has made him an acute observer of conditions, as well as a thinker. Hence the economic problem invited him to discussion.

"In a stage production," he says, "one must keep an eye constantly to the keeping down of the cost, because of the uncertainty of the returns. But where a picture is made under a prearranged program, the market is assured and expense need not be spared.

"Directing and writing for the films are the exact opposite of directing and writing for the stage. On the stage one must confine himself to three or four settings and three or four short periods of time, while the screen production may be expanded indefinitely.

"The reason, I believe, why so many dramatic directors fail in pictures is that they ignore or refuse to learn the special technique involved. But the experienced stage director, with an open mind, has the great advantage in pictures of his training in eliminating unnecessary details and building the important situations. He has the clear dramatic vision, sharpened by experience; he has a sense of dramatic values, and knows what will make a dramatic picture."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

One of the Hustlers.

THIS is Charles Decker, one of the hustlers, and manager of the Majestic, Grand Junction, Colo. We offered to run Mr. Decker's cut lately and he writes that he has the nerve if we have, so here it is.

CHARLES DECKER.

Mr. Decker adds that his first appearance in this paper was about ten years ago when it was about the size of the present Universal or Mutual house organs. In those happy times he broke into print because he was arrested every day for running a phonograph as a ballyhoo for the Luna, Akron, O. Later he went to Denver and was engaged by H. T. Noland for the advertising department of the Swanson Film Exchange and presently was put in charge of a "sick" house. In ten months he not only had the invalid on its feet but had absorbed the opposition theater, and he was then transferred to the Majestic, where he has been doing a lot of stunts that have been recorded in this department from time to time, including the overwhelming defeat of a proposition to close the picture theaters on Sunday, using for that purpose his house organ, The Movie Fan. In a recent letter Mr. Decker says:

> I attribute my success entirely to advertising. I am continually at it in the day time and sleep it at night. Many of the original advertising ideas I actually dreamed while asleep at night. I read every column of the Moving Picture World and will say that it was a great factor in winning the Sunday Movie Election here recently as I certainly "copped" some valuable information from its columns to run in the Movie Fan.

One of his recent stunts was a "red hands matinee." He sold the house to a list of slacks and gave them each space in the house organ. He ran a special entertainment in the morning for the kiddies to get them out of the way, and not only brought many strangers to the theater but showed a profit over the usual takings for the day. This differs from the old and still good merchant's matinee in that it is run but once.

This form of merchants matinee is more like the prevalent dollar day. Each advertiser offers at least one special bargain to coax the crowd and all give, in addition, the free tickets to the show. The essence of the idea is offered in this clipping:

> This day has been set apart by the Merchants of Grand Junction as a

Doing Well.

Merrit and Casazza, of the Novelty, Malone, N. Y., send in a program that does very nicely. It is done in black on heavy news stock and evidently in an office not well provided with type faces. The printer does the best he can and the titles stand out in their places because they are not required to fight a lot of other black type. We think that the house could do better to run the full program on the two inside pages and move the house talk now on page two over to the back page. If this is done, the advertisement now on the back can be run under the program if it is well separated or perhaps the house can get two advertisements to run side by side. It would also be a good plan to set these inside pages as a 2-column single page, getting a little more space and holding the announcement together better. The program does well as it stands, but would work better rearranged.

A Twelve-Page Folder.

The Regent and Colonnade, Brooklyn, send in a new form of program and, probably following earlier comment, add a line to the effect that it is the same show in both theaters. They offer some departures from the usual folder. Each day is given a page and there is, of course, the front. The other four pages are given to cuts of the players in the current films, the underline stating the play and the date. By using relatively small types the page is given a good display and yet a type page only 2½ by 4½ is used. The same holds good of the front page, where an intelligent handling of the type matter gives the proper display for the two house titles and addresses, the dates, a catchline and other material. It is not the size of the type, but its proportion to the other matter that makes it conspicuous, and we have seen programs twice the size and with type three times as large that gave less prominence to the lines needed.

Got a Governor.

H. A. Chenoweth, of the Opera House, Milford, Mass., sends in a dodger for a propaganda film showing Louis D. Brandeis and former Governor Walsh, of that State, both of whom are in the public eye at the moment. It is timely even if it is semi-advertising. He also sends in some of his newspaper work, two-column advertisements along the general lines of the cut shown. This is a two-column space, and by setting most of the matter in single column measure it stands out from the page better than would the same space filled with type. It might be an even better makeup to cut the triangle into the border instead of placing it just below the rule.

Window Cards.

M. H. Starr, of the Washington, Detroit, sends in some window cards for "Tennessee's Partner." They are well displayed, but we think that the card would do the house good if the house name rose to the top of the announcement. Instead, the top line announced that Jesse L. Lasky presents the play. The house name should be the first thing to catch the eye, but here it is buried in the body of the card. The name of the house is the most important fact to the house and that should be the first thing brought to the attention of the casual reader. After that should come the name of the play or the star, according to the relative importance, and then the date. All printing should aim to present these four facts in that order no matter how the rest of the display may lie. To the man who goes to the shows, the house should be even more important than the producer of a certain story.

A Hepworth Scheme.

The Hepworth "Union Jack" booklet has been replaced by a new form, an eight-page nine by eleven inch monthly called the Picture-Play paper. It offers a new idea in giving the bookings of its films listed by towns, the entries running:

AXMINSTER. Cinema, 16-18, L.
ATTERCLIFFE. Globe P. H., 20-22, I.

Here the date is the day or days of the current month and the letter represents the particular subject booked. It forms an incentive to advance bookings and helps the houses, since the paper is intended for general distribution to the public, on a subscription basis. It is lavishly illustrated with well printed cuts of scenes from the plays and should have a good influence. A trade supplement will be issued every other month beginning with February.

Advance Work.

The Orpheum theater, Huntingdon, W. Va., is getting ready to open. G. C. Sullivan laid in a copy of Picture Theater Advertising and then went to work, with the result that almost daily before the opening the daily paper carried from a quarter to half a column of stuff. When the organ came, instead of hiring an expressman to make several trips to the freight station six trucks were hired and the organ went up as a procession, properly plastered with banners. One section of the organ would have attracted small attention, but the six in line made people realize that it was some organ in a physical as well as tonal sense. Another day it was announced that a famous concert singer was to take up her residence there—and sing at the Orpheum, and so on, with the result that the house will open to a running start.

A Jitney Treat.

Walter Murphy has been doing stunts in Two Harbors, Mich., where he runs the New Star. His letter explains his idea:

> In advertising the "Mysteries of the Grand Hotel" we put out Teaser-cards offering a reward, etc. This got them talking, fighting and betting money. Then early this morning we put out the handbills explaining the cards. Gave free tickets to all children. Made house to house canvass and delivered free ladies' tickets. Passed out Jitney Treat tickets for the men at noon when they came from work.

The card is a straight reward card with nothing to give any hint that it was an advertising scheme, the text reading:

$1,000.00

For the Capture of the Crook who Robbed the Grand Hotel. Or for any Information regarding the stabbing of Don Lewis or the overpowering and attempt to Kill Detective Killon.

THE GRAND HOTEL.

After this had sunk in the hand bill came along with this explanation:

CAPTURED!!

The Crook Who Robbed the Grand Hotel Has Been Captured. The Ruffian Who Stabbed Don Lewis is in the City Jail and the Villain who Attempted to KILL Detective Killion is Tied Hand and Foot. All Done by the Clever Detective Who Gets the $1,000.00, and You Can See Just How all this was Accomplished in the Greatest of all Crook Detective Pictures ever made at the

The house name follows. The ticket is headed "Jitney treat for men," and announces that the ticket and five cents will admit any man to the theater that evening and adds, "All ladies free. Bring the ladies with you." Children were passed in without charge at the matinee performances. It is small town stuff, for the tacked cards will not attract much attention in a city, but a series of reward cards will set a 10,000 or 15,000 town by the ears for a few days. Care should be taken not to put them out too far in advance or the exposure will come, as interest is on the wane. Probably three to five days would be best.

Likes It Himself.

Ralph Durfae, of the Millerton Opera House, Millerton, N. Y., sends in a card he mailed to every woman in a radius of fifteen miles from his house, which shows he believes in spreading his advertising when he starts in. The card is a fine quality of blue stock, printed in a good black and from a type that simulates an engraver's script. It announces "Such a Little Queen" and we think that Mr. Durfae likes the card himself—he should. The card and envelope do not match well in color, but it was sent out to look like a personal communication instead of carrying the house stamp and no woman can resist reading anything that looks like an invitation or a wedding announcement. It was probably an expensive job, for the stock is unusually good, but it paid to go to some expense to gain attention.

A Calendar.

J. A. Carrier, of the Apollo, Peoria, Ill., sends in a monthly calendar which he distributes to business places for display and which are given to those patrons who ask for them in response to a slide which announces that they may be had. The card is four by six with the calendar in red and the titles in blue. As the date boxes are rather small, the blue covers up the red dates almost too much. It would be better to pull in the matter at the top of the card and raise the boxes to permit the numbers to be printed between and not under the blue lines. This could be done without increasing the size of the card and a change of type would give the same legibility in a smaller letter. The idea is excellent, but it should be made more nearly a calendar, though Mr. Carrier writes that the cards are in demand.

Took a Half.

Two or three years ago half or full-page advertisements in the daily papers were so scarce as to excite comment whenever they were used. Now they are so common that they have to be unusual to excite comment. The Famous Players Film Service, of Montreal, sends in a half page used by the Imperial in announcing its change to Paramount. The layout may help others in laying out their own work. In so large a space it is not always easy to hold the announcements together, but here a three-change program is given a simple division that will serve as a model to others. Either the strip announcement or the separate panel styles are good, but the strip cannot run clear across the page, as this makes the lines too long and you will note how here the length of line is broken by the cuts.

We Win.

We remarked on the first issue of The Owl that we thought it would get better, and number three has worn its newness off and is settled down to business, a worthy successor of The Trail. The Owl works for the O-Row-Nay houses in Trail, Nelson and Fernie, B. C. One of the new stunts is the weekly prize of a dollar for the best letter telling of the merits of the circuit's houses. Naturally the contestants give much thought to the house they patronize and it clinches in their own minds the various excellencies even though it may not bring them a prize. And we gather that Editor Burton has been kissing the Blarney Stone, for to open his comment on the Trail program he starts in with:

> We read of a sugar famine in the Smelter City. Trail should worry so long as there remains her bevy of feminine sweetness!

After that how can the girls stay away? And of course they bring the boys or the boys bring them.

Tallygrams.

For the longest time we did not see the Tallygram, but comes three issues all at once. One carries on its face an old idea for the announcement of "Excuse Me," appropriate for a railroad play:

But another program announces that between pictures the orchestra will play Dvorak's Humoresque while the organist plays Suwanne River. The program adds "it's going to be good." Perhaps, but this is one time we are glad that Los Angeles is some distance from New York. The programs are nicely gotten up, not exactly programs, but more properly house announcements, for they have an individuality that programs lack.

Tom North's Latest.

Seattle was tied up by a blizzard lately and the street cars and delivery wagons went out of commission, so Tom North loaded the V L-S-E features for the local houses on a dog sled and rushed them to their destinations, not personally, of course, but through a professional dog driver who used his own crack team. Mr. North is constantly urging his patrons to try stunts, but he sets the pace himself and takes liberal doses of his own medicine.

Another stunt is an effort to make Pals the official organ of the Northwestern Exhibitors' League. This seems to be a nervy effort, since Pals is openly a house organ, but Pals is bigger than that; it is a liberal education in house advertising. This, for instance, is not house organ material. He is supposedly speaking to a friend who wonders that he reads magazine advertising and he explains that to the man who understands the technique of advertising the work of other artists is always of value. Then he adds:

> Now, what constitutes successful advertising? Is it not the ability to awaken the interest of the public in whatever you have to sell them, to hold that interest, and having got a person to consider your proposition to convince him that he should unloose his purse-strings and give YOUR goods at least a trial. The two essential things in advertising are, (1) the knack of catching and holding people's attention and (2) inducing them to do what you want them to do. Advertising is primarily the art of persuasion.
> Now, in order to persuade the public you must be a psychologist with some insight. You must understand what appeals to them, what wins their confidence and how to avoid their distrust. Again, you must judge the public to whom you are catering. What appeals to the unsophisticated tiller of the soil would not hold the attention of business men for one second. Women, as a rule, demand more description and greater detail than men. The working classes and their money can be parted by the belief that they are getting a bargain, while the professional and educated classes set quality and reliability above cheapness. Very few people, no matter to what section of society they belong, will bother reading a long ad printed in small type. Big promises are necessary to win the trade of petty buyers, while the same promises would arouse the suspicion, even though they should attract the notice, of the well-to-do. But in all cases it is the clever advertiser, the advertiser who rises above the commonplace and invents catchy phrases and striking designs, who outdistances his competitors and captures the orders of the buying public.

There is a great deal in the suggestion that the advertisement must be fitted to the class of patronage catered to. Some forms of advertisement will make a general appeal, but there are always certain nice distinctions to be observed.

Something Different.

Most vest pocket programs are four pages only, but Herman Strauss, press agent for the Lyceum, Albany, Ga., sends in an eight page, wire stitched booklet 2½ by 4 printings printed in red. This is a nice piece of printing, evidently set by a shop well provided with small as well as large job faces, an unusual thing in a small town. The front is neatly framed in a border that would be too large for the page were it not so light. A twelve point border on a page that size is risky, but the proper selection of the border works well. Inside there is a page to a day, mostly the announcement and the cast, with an underline for the overture for the day. The back page gives the house staff and an advertisement for the printer, and the printer does not have to be ashamed of his work. It is good straight through. Wire stitching probably adds to the expense, but a little, though only a single staple is used, but it looks it that much. About the only suggestion to be offered is that the front page should carry the name of the house in a larger type. This would be possible if the article "the" were to be set in small type above the "Rialto." This would necessitate a smaller face for the rest lines, but the house name is the more important and should be played up.

Try This.

Anything that interests your patrons in the pictured will work for you. We clip this from Film Events, the house organ of the Grand theater, Pullman. We don't know which Pullman it is because the mail clerk did not send the wrapper along with the paper and we have not even the postmark, but it is somewhere in Tom North's territory since they quote a house organ from V-L-S-E Pals. Anyhow this publication from an unstated State brings in this good idea that others might copy with profit even at the cost of giving the druggist or stationer a free advertisement in return for the trouble he goes to in making out the list.

From Mrs. Moore.

Mrs. R. R. Moore, who runs the Ideal, Akron, O., sends in a fine circular letter on "The Miracle of Life" and adds a few comments on advertising after speaking of the house program now in its sixties. She says:

> We also have a contract with our three daily papers. We believe in advertising even a small house, and it pays, too. We are getting fifteen cents on Sundays for V-L-S-E and also got fifteen cents for "The Miracle of Life," two days, with matinees for ladies only. We are repeating it again next week. I am enclosing a letter I sent out to 700 ladies whose names I saved up from the society columns of our papers.

The house seats only 249 persons and yet runs a weekly program and advertisements in three papers, and they show big features. We reproduce the form letter because it handles so nicely the delicate subject. Probably Mrs. Moore has done better with this than any man could do. Certainly she avoids giving offense to the better class of women, those to whom the appeal can best be made:

> Dear Madam:
> "Birth Control," a subject causing considerable agitation throughout the country at the present time, is roundly exposed in "The Miracle of Life."
> This stirring drama of modern times which is bound to cause discussion among Akron clubwomen, was one of the feature attractions at the Educational Exposition held recently at Madison Square Garden, New York City, at which clubwomen, educators, sociologists and labor leaders from all parts of the country attended.
> Mrs. Clarence Burns, one of the most noted clubwomen in the East and the head of several well known women's organizations, including the "Little Mothers' Aid Society," after witnessing a screening of "The Miracle of Life," said, "I have never seen a picture like it. It is calculated to make people think. It cannot help impressing the desirability of bringing children into the world, and the dangers and unhappiness surrounding the unnatural suppression of laws of nature upon all mature people who see the picture. I think it should be taken up by Women's Clubs and given particular backing by social organizations. Quite aside from all its sermonistic qualities, 'The Miracle of Life' is a highly entertaining drama."
> This virile drama, handling the problem of race suicide with great force and delicacy, will be presented for the first time in Akron at the Ideal theater, Wooster avenue, corner Kolb street, on Monday and Tuesday, Jan. 17 and 18, and will be shown to adults only. No children admitted to any performance. Monday and Tuesday afternoon there will be matinees for ladies only, the time from 2 to 5, each show lasting one hour and the admission 15 cents. Every mother, every mother's son, every mother's daughter should see this triumph of motion picture photography.
> Sincerely yours,
> MRS. GERTRUDE MOORE,
> Mgr. Ideal Theater.

P. S.—Take a Loop West Car at Main and Exchange and tell the conductor to stop at the Ideal theater.

Mrs. Moore also sent in an excellent advertisement, not alone in the phrasing, but in the layout. There is no suggestion that the film is sensational, but merely the plea that it is of vital interest. It is just as easy to appeal to intelligent interest as to the sensation seeker and it will pay better in the long run, for there will be no comeback in the disgust of the better class of patrons.

Tells It To Jane.

John Russell of the Grand, Pittsburgh, Kan., used a fictitious character called Jane in his readers. In place of the straight reading notice he tells it to her and she tells it to the editor in something like this style:

JANE IS MYSTIFIED

> "Well, I am going to the trial to-morrow," said Jane yesterday. "What trial?" she was asked. "Tried for His Own Murder' at the Grand theater," she replied. "But if a man was murdered how could he be tried for his own murder," her inquisitor continued. "I don't know," admitted Jane, "and that is just the reason I am going to the Grand today to find out. It certainly sounds like the plot would be a keen one."

These paragraphs betray no startling literary merit. They are not intended to be clever, but the stunt lifts the curse from the hackneyed reading notice and gives it a tinge of personality that will actually cause people to become interested in Jane and what she has to say.

Mr. Russell seems to believe in advertising, as some well planned full-page advertisements prove, and he has the invaluable trick of getting out stuff that can be read without effort.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Inquiries.

Questions concerning the writing (but NOT the marketing) of photoplays will be replied to without charge if addressed to the Photoplaywright Department and accompanied by a fully addressed stamped envelope. Questions must be typewritten or written with pen and ink.

Questions as to the financial standing of concerns or the probable markets for specific or certain styles of stories cannot be answered.

In no case and under no circumstance will any manuscript or synopsis be handled and if sent will be returned without reply.

A list of addresses of producing companies will be sent if the request is made direct to the publication office, but not where request is made to this department.

Technical Terms.

MANY boobs insist on knowing all the technical terms, but one of them goes the limit when he asks where he can gain knowledge of "the thousand and one" expressions used. Thousand and one is distinctly good, though an under-estimate. We had just turned from another letter in which a correspondent wanted to know what "as out" meant. He found some script that read "starts to enter as out." No wonder he wanted to know what was meant. We had to puzzle a moment to realize that it meant that as he started to enter the picture was out or ended. Some careless workman used this obscure phrase. Some darned fool printed it in a "sample script," and now the boobs all want to know just as they wanted to know about slow diaphragming and vignetting and all the rest.

Scripts sell on idea and not on technical terms and you'll surely make an illuminated ass of yourself if you try to write the "knowing" script without knowing yourself. Scripts are written in plain English, even in the studios save by a few who like to make their work look important and mysterious.

Universal Wants Ones.

In a recent issue we said that Universal was buying few ones and twos. Joseph Brandt, general manager, writes that they are in the market for ones and twos. There is so small a market just at present for short lengths this should be good news to writers.

Selling Multiples.

To sell a five-reel story you must offer an idea that can go the distance and show in reasonably interesting action. One man lately complained that he could not sell his stories though they were as good as those he saw in the synopses of the films. To prove it he sent in a story that mostly showed people walking around the stage or on or out of the scene. He did not realize that people would not sit quietly through an hour and fifteen minutes of uneventful action. He had an ingenious plot. He knew it was a good plot. He did not know that the action was as dead as Main street in a country town at two in the morning.

And there are hundreds like him. They write ideas. They do not know that they are writing ideas only and not action and that the idea cannot be shown in action. If they do realize, then they stick in a boiler explosion and a falling aeroplane and think they have turned the trick even though the explosive boiler belonged to the hero's aunt's cousin's divorced third husband and the air craft comes into the story only because the sight of it scared the heroine's small brother. This may be a slight exaggeration, but not much.

Get action that belongs to the plot. Get action without which the plot could not be told. Get a story in which the company gets a boiler or you get a rejection slip and the boiler will belong. The sight stuff must have an intimate and vital relationship to the idea.

And even then, if you merely write as good stuff as the stories you see advertised, what advantage have you over the staff man? You must do better than he can until you become a staff writer yourself. As a matter of fact ninety-nine per cent. of the synopses submitted the feature companies are not better than two or three reel stories.

It takes enough plot for a novel to run five reels of film.

Printing.

We are looking at a letter head and it hurts us to do so. In the centre is a forty-eight point name and a thirty-six point "photoplaywright" below, with the address. To one side is "Poems and Scenarios a Specialty." On the other the reading is "Manuscripts Sent to All Parts of the United States." And this author asks a couple of questions and ends with "Hoping that I receive the above questions in a satisfactory manner."

Stamps.

One of the few women in the script writing game who goes at it with the concentration and common sense that make for success, manages to get a lot of fun out of the boobs when she does not have to chase them off her door step, as has happened more than once. Lately she attended a women's club at which the topic was to be photoplay writing. The chief speaker did not show up and the affair turned into a knockfest held by the disgruntled, one complaint being that the studio stole the complainant's stamps, though she always pinned them onto the first page of her script. She was supposed to be one of the literary lights and yet she didn't know enough to solder her stamps to a return envelope. The nice editor always did that for her. Not all the boobs are novices and some of the worst are those who might be expected to know better. Certainly they are the most offensive.

We met one not long ago. She wanted to hire five minutes of our time and wanted it bad enough to pay, so she got it free because we thought she meant business, and yet her question was: "What can a man like you tell a woman like me." How could we reply to a question like that when we knew there was a traffic policeman on the corner?

Specializing.

Billie Kuhn offers a suggestion that is only partly applicable. He writes:

> To begin with, the average beginner, particularly the "school graduate," does not specialize. I believe it is just as absurd for a doctor to do veterinary work, as it is for a successful comedy writer to attempt writing drama, and vice versa. I speak only from my own experience.
> My first efforts were confined to drama only. I never let the thought of comedy enter my head. After many fruitless attempts, covering a period of fourteen months, I came to the realization that I had as much chance of becoming Kaiser of Germany, as I had to write a salable drama. Consequently, I ceased writing "drawma" there and then.
> My first comedy script was a success, so I determined never again to touch drama. I talk comedy, dream of comedy, and in fact everything with me is comedy, comedy, comedy. In plain words, I specialize.
> A beginner writes a single reel drama. Finishing it, he submits it, and while it is under consideration, he reads a press notice to the effect that "So & So Film Co. are now in the market for two reel dramas." Immediately he sits at his machine and prepares a two-reel drama. In the meantime, another company announces it "desires comedies, for which it will pay highest prices." Attracted by the "highest prices," he sits down and writes a comedy. And so on. Advertisements are continually appearing in various periodicals as to the wants of the companies. He attempts to "please" each of the companies, by sending them "just what they want." The result is one rejection slip after another, and he wonders why the studios employ such ignorant men as editors. Summing it all up, he wouldn't have the least cause to wail, or wouldn't possess so many rejection slips, if he had specialized.
> I am positive (speaking on the strength of my sales), that I can write single reel comedies. Hence, that is all I write. If I see a script is beginning to run into a multiple reel comedy, I stop immediately, file same, and begin on an entirely new plot, forgetting the old one. No doubt when the time comes (when I shall be able to "put over" a multiple reel comedy), these filed, unfinished comedies will be of great benefit to me.

If he has suggested that the beginner stick to one style and master that, we would have agreed, but we do not think that specializing in comedy or drama of a particular sort will work for keeps. Most writers have some special bent, yet the man who writes comedies should also be able to write dramas and vice versa, but in the main what Mr. Kuhn means is to find what you can do best and then do that rather than trying to change your style with each new demand.

Hopeful.

Daniel Ellis, the Lubin Editor, sends in this brilliant effusion from a boob who writes:

> I beg to inform you that I am about to start my career as a photoplay writer and also supply the best paying producer with perfectly original stories and plots in which new characters and subjects are involved. The first reason for past silence is that I don't understand scenario writing and second because there was no demand like there is now for real good stuff and because the writers were not well paid. Answer by mail only and if interested do so promptly.

Can you beat them?

Logic.

If your stories are better than the ones you see on the screen, there must have been something about the other stories that your scripts lack. Find out what it was and add that quality to your story.

Projection Department

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive cerbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Important Notice.

The editor has recently received many samples of film which were cracked in an apparently unaccountable manner. This trouble was evidently not due to the projection machine, although the projector was being blamed. We have taken the matter up and here is the result: It applies to tinted film which splits lengthwise at various portions of its length. The defect will not be found in black and whites. It is not due to the film stock, but to impurities in the dyes used in tinting, which alter the physical nature of the gelatine of the emulsion, causing it to lose its property of remaining resilient under normal conditions of temperature and humidity and resulting in brittleness.

On account of the present scarcity of reliable dyes and the consequent use of dyes of inferior quality there is the liability of trouble in tinted films being even more prevalent than at present for some time to come.

The projection department has sent letters to all the leading film manufacturers calling attention to this particular thing, and suggesting that extreme care be used in the use of dye stuffs; also that until such time as dyes of known purity can be secured, the use of tinted film be avoided wherever possible.

Question No. 131.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Explain, in full detail, just what the phenomena called "moving pictures" consists of. Come, now, let us see how much you know about this subject anyhow!

Roll of Honor on Question No. 124.

I have been considerably puzzled as to what to do about the Roll of Honor on Question 124, but have finally decided to place certain names thereon, because, while they have not expressed the matter rightly, still I think they understand the underlying principles involved, but inasmuch as nobody has made it entirely clear that he does understand the underlying principles, I am going to answer the question myself.

The Roll of Honor is: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; A. H. Cuff, Gravenhurst, Canada; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada, Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Canada, and C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.

Of the whole Roll of Honor Brother Bryner came nearest to proving that he really did understand the first part of the question, but, like Friend McAdoo and one or two others, he fell down on the fuse end of it. Most of the answers not included in the Roll of Honor demonstrated the fact that many operators have a very weird and decidedly hazy idea of the action of a mercury arc rectifier.

Reply to Question No. 124.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

When you change connection and increase the amperage of your mercury arc rectifier what is it really occurs which causes the increase? What size fuses would you require on the A. C. supply lines of your mercury arc rectifier, using 40 amperes at the arc?

The Answer:

The current from the first passes through the main reactance of a mercury arc rectifier, which has the effect of reducing the pressure to the arc voltage. It then passes through the "regulating reactance," which is nothing more or less than a very carefully constructed choke coil, with taps taken off at various points of its winding. The current after passing the main reactance therefore has the resistance of the choke coil, the tube, the arc, and the wires composing the circuit, to encounter. Now, as you all know, the amperage flowing through a circuit will depend upon the resistance of that circuit, and if the supply voltage be steady then the amperage will fall as the resistance rises and rise as the resistance falls. The line and tube resistance is, of course, the same all the time, and for our purpose we will assume that the arc voltage is also steady. Now, if the operator wants more current at the arc, either by changing a wire connection on the old style rectifier, or on the new style rectifier by moving a dial switch, he changes the connection to the choke coil (regulating reactance), and by so doing either eliminates some of its windings, or adds to them, and since the resistance or magnetic kick offered by the "regulating reactance" (choke coil) will be directly in proportion to the number of its turns which are in use, you will readily see that the changing of the connection alters the resistance offered by the regulating reactance, and hence alters the amperage at the arc.

When using 40 amperes at the arc you might get along with 20 ampere fuses, but it is better to use 30; this by reason of the fact that current passes through the main reactance of the machine, which is, in effect, an auto-transformer, and this lowers the voltage and increases the amperage; therefore there will be more current volume at the arc than is taken from the line, the difference being the arc voltage times the arc amperage, divided by the line voltage, plus the loss in the machine itself.

I might add in this connection that the mercury arc rectifier, both the G. E. and Westinghouse, and the principles involved in these machines are very thoroughly explained and illustrated in the new edition of the Handbook.

A Live-Wire Dealer.

While in Chicago, I called upon the E. E. Fulton Company, 154 West Lake street, and the visit was a real pleasure, because I found in the Fulton Company a live wire proposition.

The Fulton Company is located in the quarters originally occupied (when I lived in Chicago), by Billy Swanson. In fact, the place looked almost exactly the same as it did when I was twisting a crank for Friend William out at 39th street and Cottage Grove avenue. It was here I came, in those days, to secure my operating room supplies which I usually did (not) get. Many things have happened since that long past day, and many changes have come, both with the editor and all those connected with Swanson in the year of our Lord 1909; but walking into that old room, still devoted to the same identical business,, and lacking only Billy's smiling face to make the picture of the past complete, was almost like coming back home.

The Fulton Company occupies the second and third floors at No. 154 and the ground floor of the building adjoining as well. Within the confines of their plant one may see and purchase almost anything in the way of equipment for a picture theater. The show room, or office, is devoted to a display of projection machines, ticket choppers, box offices, arc lights, inverted lighting fixtures, poster frames, etc., etc. The third floor is given over to the shipping department, and a machine shop in which enclosed and unenclosed rewinds, and other small apparatus is manufactured; also projection machines are repaired. The lower floor of the adjoining building is used as a warehouse for reserve stores of heavier supplies.

The Messrs. Fulton have been engaged in the supply business for a period of eight years, and the fact that they have grown to present proportions is ample proof of the integrity of their business methods, as well as the careful attention given to details of their business. As I said in the first place, it is always a pleasure to meet men who have proven beyond any question, that their business methods are up-to-date, honest and honorable, and the work of the E. E. Fulton Company in the Moving Picture Supply field shows all those characteristics.

My compliments to the Messrs. Fulton Company. May their shadow never grow less, and their tribe increase.

Automatic Safety Device.

The Charles A. Strelinger Company, Detroit, Mich., have perfected a device designed to attach to motion picture machines, the advantage of which are as follows: First: When a film breaks the device automatically breaks the motor circuit, closes a shutter in front of the condensing lens and switches on an incandescent light so that the operator can see to adjust his film. Second. If a film buckles out beyond is regular limit between the lower sprocket and lower magazine, the device automatically breaks the motor circuit, stops the machine, drops the shutter and switches on the incandescent lamp. By its use danger of fire is eliminated and time is saved. The device has a roller that rests upon the film between the lower sprocket and the magazine valve. If the film breaks, buckles or runs off the sprocket, the device instantly "gets busy" with result before described. The mechanism is positive in its action. Two of these automatic Safety Devices have been working on a two SixA Power's machines at the Forest theater, Detroit, Mich., for the past one and a half years, without having received even the slightest adjustment since the installation. The Empire Theater, Detroit, is also using them. Testimonials are on file which speak of them as having sterling value to motion pitcure theaters as a preventive against fires and damaging of films. This device is patented by the Charles A. Strelinger Company, Detroit, Mich., and it was through courtesy of Major Jones, Detroit, who is interested in the above company, that we viewed the operation of the appliance.

Brush Lighting Plant.

During my visit in Detroit it was both my pleasure and privilege to call upon Mr. Charles A. Strelinger, and incidentally upon the Strelinger Company. I say my privilege and pleasure because I have watched the operations of the Charles A. Strelinger Company, manufacturers of the Brush Lighting Outfit for moving picture theaters, for a number of years, and it gives me more than ordinary pleasure to be able to say I am thoroughly satisfied that this company is conducting a thoroughly honest business, and putting out a thoroughly nonest lighting plant; moreover, they are making good on their guarantee. Now, you may say that tuis is pretty strongly put, and it is too, but when I put a roast in this department it is because that roast is deserved, and it isn't custard pie affair either; it is just what I intend it to be, a roast. Conversely, when I find a company deserving of nothing but praise, it is but fair that I give it them with equal vigor.

The Brush Lighting Plant, by the way, is something in the nature of a pet of Brother Strelinger, who views it as the baked-apple-served-with-cream-and-sugar of his eye.

I am very much interested in lighting plants, too, because I believe that, more and more, as time goes by, they are going to come into use in theaters. I base this opinion on the proposition that the size of moving picture theaters is gradually increasing, and is, in my judgment, going to keep right on increasing until practically all city theaters seat a minimum of 500, with a maximum of possibly, and even probably 3,000, with the proviso, however, that our dearly beloved Deacon, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and his equally Christian-like associates do not continue to boost the price of gasoline until it soars beyond the planet Jupiter. True, the Brush Lighting Outfit can be operated on kerosene, but I want to warn you right now that this is not a practical thing to do in the case of moving picture theaters, because the load is variable, and if internal combustion engines be operated much below its normal capacity, using kerosene as a fuel, there will be imperfect combustion and heavy carbonization. This is claimed to be true of all internal combustion engines. The engine will run very nicely at first on kerosene, but look out for trouble later on, and trouble in bunches too. Better let the keresone game alone.

The engine is of the two-cylinder, four-cycle type, of simple and durable construction. The countershaft is of heat-treated carbon steel, the pins of which are 1¾ inches in diameter, while the main bearings are 3½ inches long—very generous proportion for an engine of this power. These bearings are lined with high grade babbitt metal, in fact, the very best the company is able to obtain.

The generator is a multipolar, compound wound machine, producing current at 65 volts. The commutator bars are of hard-drawn copper, with four sets of brushes. The engine and generator are mounted on a substantial sub-base, with a fly-wheel between. The latter weighs approximately 150 pounds, and is of large diameter, and this, in connection with the Brush balancing mechanism, has the effect of steadying the engine speed, with corresponding excellence in current regulation. The Brush balancing mechanism consists of a weight, so arranged as to counteract the weight of the engine's reciprocating parts, which tends to eliminate vibration and assists in steadying the engine speed. The engine and generator are coupled together with a rigid coupling, the bearings are carefully aligned, and everything is thoroughly tested before the outfit leaves the factory. The engine is rated at 10 horsepower, with a generator output of 4,000 watts, giving a normal current capacity of about 66 amperes. An excellent switchboard is provided, on which are mounted a volt and ammeter, field connections, rheostat, pilot lamp and switches. Engine ignition is by a Bosch high-tension magneto, a very reliable type of ignition.

The whole thing is simple, and I have been told by those who have been, and are operating this outfit, that it can be handled successfully by any man of ordinary intelligence, provided always that he either have some little knowledge of internal combustion engines, and of generators, and provided that to the knowledge be added a generous amount of horse sense, and let-well-enough-alonedness, or that he closely study and follow the directions sent with the outfit. In this connection I want to compliment the Strelinger Company on the aforenamed instructions. It is the only set of manufacturers' operating instructions I have ever seen which have met with my unqualified approval; that I know is a pretty strong statement, but it is nevertheless borne out by the facts.

I am quite sure that any man who can read English, and who has ordinary intelligence can take the Brush Lighting Outfit instructions and operate the machine with at least a fair degree of success.

With gas at 16 cents per gallon I have had reports from users of the outfit that they were producing current as low as 2½ to 3 cents per kilowatt, working at full load. When the load drops down, or in other words, you don't use the outfit's full capacity, then the efficiency will also drop, which is the case with all outfits of this kind, until your current will cost probably about 5 cents per kilowatt. But even so, there is quite a difference between 5 cents and 8, 10 or 12 cents, particularly when we take into consideration that the current is produced at 65 volts, whereas the ordinary commercial voltage is 110, which must be reduced to arc voltage at a loss of, if it be done by rheostat, considerably more than 50 per cent. in efficiency, even if this reduction is done by other means there is very substantial loss.

I believe that the managers of our larger theaters which are so situated that it is possible to place the gasolene supply outside of the building, buried, for instance, in the ground, should look very carefully into the possibilities of various lighting outfits, and investigate carefully the statements I have made. I have not said much about gas engines in the past, but I have not been asleep at the switch. I have been watching this proposition, and have intended several times to go into the matter more thoroughly. The press of other matters has been so great, however, that it has just simply been neglected. In this connection, this outfit may be operated from city gas, and with gas at 75 cents per thousand cubic feet, will be found to be just about equally economical with gasolene at 12 cents, which would mean that gasolene as it is at present at 20 cents, gas could go at least to 80 cents, and possibly $1.00 before there would be any difference in favor of gasolene. Where natural gas is available, these outfits are particularly valuable, because natural gas has about 50 per cent. greater efficiency than artificial gas, and only costs about one-third as much, so that the current may be produced by natural gas as low as 1 cent, or perhaps even less than 1 cent per kilowatt.

In conclusion, I want to say that the strong way in which I have worded this description is due absolutely and entirely to the fact that I have thoroughly satisfied myself of the absolute integrity of the Strelinger Company, both in honesty of manufacturing, and in making good, and even more than making good their guarantee. That has been brought to my attention many times in the past two or three years, and it is the kind of a proposition I like. This isn't a bunch of roses, but just a deserved recognition of business honesty, backed up by goods which make good.

The Home of the Motiograph.

While in Chicago it was my privilege and pleasure to revisit many scenes which were familiar more than seven years ago, one of which was the home of the Motiograph, where it was granted that I meet and become personally acquaitned with Mr. O. F. Spahr, the general manager.

Mr. Spahr, a map of whose handsome countenance accompanies this article, is a most pleasant gentleman, well posted on the practical points of projection, and in addition, I am told, a capable manager. Certainly under his guidance there have been, as has been, from time to time, pointed out, important and very beneficial changes made in many parts of the Motiograph projector. During my trip from New York to Chicago, I had it amply proven to me that the Motiograph, which had to a certain extent lost its popularity in the east, is coming back into favor. Particularly was this true in Cleveland, where it was my privilege to meet Mr. John E. McAuley, who is representing the Enterprise Optical Company as road salesman, trouble-shooter and general all-around-booster for the Motiograph. I don't know how true it is, but it was told of Mac. that he has a Motiograph set up in his boudoir at the hotel and says his prayers to it every night—mebby that's so and mebby not. It's up to Mac., who is the only one capable of setting us right on that particular point.

The factory of the Motiograph displayed pronounced activity; everyone was busy, and then some. Mr. Spahr informed me that the selling end is very encouraging and progress is being made, not only in the east, but in other territory as well in popularizing the new model Motiograph.

For a long time, as you all know, I did not say very much about the Motiograph, and what I did say was not overly encouraging. That attitude was due entirely to certain objectionable features contained in the mechanism, which have, it gives me much pleasure to say, been obliterated. The Motiograph is now a machine which I can conscientiously recommend to the serious consideration of motion picture theater managers who are contemplating the purchase of new projection apparatus. There are still certain points about this machine which, by no manner of means, meet with my unqualified approval, but (whisper) that same identical statement applies to every other machine on the market.

One thing I like about the Motiograph is that its lamphouse can be pulled back until there is fully 21 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the film. That distance might well be increased a little more than this, but even so, it is far better than the conditions found in some of the other projectors. In fact there is only one projector at this time, if I remember correctly, which meets the requirements of the long table, the Motiograph coming next, and one of two of them are very bad in this respect.

I am informed by Mr. Spahr that the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company is adding to its machine equipment [illegible] of grinders which same may by the way a very important part in making a satisfactory intermittent movement, because when they are in use it is possible to harden the star and cam steel and then grind them down perfectly true. The difficulties of the case in the fact that the hardening process has a warping effect on steel, and if the star and cam are finished and then hardened there is more than likely to be trouble. With the high-speed grinder however all these is avoided, and the star and cam can be made glass-hard and absolutely true.

The accompanying illustration shows the latter section of the Enterprise Optical Company's Plant. This is not of course, has no particular interest except to give one an idea as to the size of the factory, but a close corner of a single room being shown.

Mr. A. C. Roebuck, who was the inventor of the Motiograph machine, is now located at Woodstock, Illinois, where he has been engaged in developing a new typewriter, the Woodstock.

The price of the latest Motiograph equipment is $[illegible] for hand-drive and $285.00 for motor-drive.

A Few (?) More Questions.

G. L. Smith, Smithsburg, Maryland, says:

Here are a few more questions. (a) What is the capacity of different size carbons, using A. C.? I have trouble with the core burning out with 5/8 —— carbons when I use the rheostat at its maximum. Don't know how much I am using, but the rheostat coils get red hot. It is a Power's 22 to 38 ampere, and has three binding posts. We have it connected to the inside on the right and one on the left hand side. There are five contact points on the quadrant. Can you tell us whether this rheostat is working right or not? (b) Can you tell me whether or not we can run two machines off a 110 volt line, using one 110 volt 22 to 38 capacity rheostat? If not, what would we have to do? We are going to put in another machine soon, and will wish to run continuously, if possible, without stopping. Will you please tell us how to wire this, as we are no dummies with wire if we know where it is to go. (c) We have a stage curtain, the back of which is painted black, with a white center 6 x 8, and we wish to make the white spot larger in order to accommodate the picture our machine will make. Will the screen paint advertised in the Moving Picture World do this? If not, what should we do? And now I want to render thanks due the editor for favors done in the past.

(a) Well really, old man, that is a difficult question to answer, because it depends somewhat on the carbon. The experienced operator is able to judge just by looking at the carbons, when he shuts the arc off, whether or not they are working above capacity. You can use 5/8 inch carbons for 60 amperes A. C. without fear of overload, therefore, under the conditions, I don't think yours are working above capacity. There must be something wrong with the cores. Would suggest you try some other brand, say the Speer, the Reflex or the National. As regards your rheostat, why if the coils get hot enough that they look red, your rheostat is badly overloaded. Rheostat coils should not go above 900 degrees Fahrenheit, which is considerable below the red point.' You should immediately change the connection from the inner to the outer right hand binding post, which has the effect of cutting in two or three more coils or grids. If you use it the way it is you will very soon permanently injure the rheostat. The use of alternating current through a rheostat is out of date, and unnecessarily wasteful. For a full explanation of this I would refer you to the old Handbook if you have one; if not then to the new one when it is released. The efficiency of a rheostat working on 110 volt current is considerably less than 50; the efficiency of a transformer (economizer, inductor, compensarc, etc.) is between 80 and 90, therefore you would save by the use of the transformer much more than enough to justify its purchase, but the really best plan is to purchase either a mercury arc rectifier or a motor generator set delivering D. C. at the arc. In order to project a really well illuminated 12 foot picture with A. C. you must use not less than 60 amperes, and for an 18 foot picture you ought to use at least 80 amperes. (b) Yes, you can very easily do your wiring so as to run two machines off two rheostats, though you could not burn both arcs at one time. But this would be exceedingly bad practice, and the rheostat probably would not last long, that is if you are running several hours a day. The right and proper thing to do is, if you are going to use rheostats, get a separate one with the other machine, and it ought to have a capacity at the very least calculation of 50 amperes. As before stated, however I would strongly advise you to cut out the rheostat and if you cannot afford a mercury arc rectifier or motor generator set, then at least get an inductor economizer, or compensarc. You can get along with one by using a rheostat to burn the craters on your carbons. As to the one-rheostat wiring, why just wire up one lamp in the usual way and then connect the leads of the other lamp to the leads of the first one at any convenient point, with the one on the rheostat side connected between the rheostat and the arc of the first lamp. I cannot spare space to publish a drawing of a connection that I would not in any degree approve of. (c) Yes, you can do that, but first kill the black with at least two coats of white lead; the first coat one-half boiled linseed oil and one-half turpentine, and the second coat one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine, making both coats reasonably heavy. This will kill the black so that the final coat of screen paint will cover it. As to "accommodating the picture made by the second machine," why I don't understand you. The pictures from both machines should register on precisely the same space of the curtain.

Up to Ten Dollars.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Inquires:

What do you think of the practice of "switching over" from one machine to another when using 30 to 35 amperes through a 40 ampere mercury arc rectifier tube? My opinion is (although I have never made an ammeter test) that very little, if any, harm, is done the tube, always provided the carbons of the lamp burn at least one fourth inch apart just before the switch is made. I have lost my clippings made from the issues of the Moving Picture World containing the light ray articles, and am therefore waiting for the new "Complete Art of Projection"—in other words, the Handbook. Kindly put me on the waiting list, and if I am not projecting bullets in France by that time I'll forward the necessary, and what is more I will be very glad to remit whatever the price is going to be up to ten dollars—yes, when I come to think of it I guess I would be willing to pay even more than that, for the old book, rather than be without it, so we will have to put a sky limit on the new one. Will you be good enough to enlarge a little on the rectifier matter, as I can find out absolutely nothing from the local branch of the General Electric. I suggested that it would be possible to use the main reactance of the rectifier as a transformer in circuit with the lamp, but he says no, so of course I am at sea. Kindly, for very obvious reasons, omit my name.

No. We have not put a "sky limit" on the new book. You will find an announcement of it at end of this department.

As to the rectifier matter, tests made on a 50 ampere rectifier operating a D. C. arc at 40 amperes, and an A. C. arc at 43 amperes, show that this can be done, but it is necessary to use ¾ of an ohm resistance in series with the A. C. arc in order to maintain its stability; also there is a tendency of the D. C. arc to flutter. The experiment has been made of placing a contactor resistance in series with each arc during the time both are burning. This has been tried out in a theater for a period of six months, and seems to be the best way of burning two lamps from one outfit.

The experiment was made by the General Electric Company and I have not myself witnessed the result, but they pronounce it to be the best scheme there is of burning two arcs from one rectifier. I don't think, under the conditions named, there will be any appreciable damage done to the tube, provided the operator uses ordinary care not to hold his carbon together too long in striking the arc. You see the regulating reactance acts to chase back the current and protect the tube from overload to a considerable extent.

Just Great!

W. W. Brumberg, Tucson, Ariz., says:

> Am giving the Speer carbons a try out, using ⅝ cored on 38 amperes D. C., through a G. E. rectifier. I find that the upper carbon needles, while the lower is normal, the carbons being one-eighth of an inch apart at the above amperage. There is, however, a continuous though slight sputter; also considerable refuse and sediment, from which I get the idea that the carbons are too hard, and not perfect. Same results were found in two other theaters, one using a Wagner converter, and the other a rectifier, amperage 38. Am waiting patiently for the new Handbook, and think our department is just great.

Brother Brumberg, I believe I told you that the Speer carbon will not stand overloading. I am of the opinion that if you get either 9-16 or ¾-inch cored upper, with a ⅝-inch lower, your objections will promptly vanish. Try this out, please, and report results.

Get My Number

Brother Griffiths and I have had a little correspondence with regard to Table No. 2, October 16th issue. I said, in effect, I was not so deeply interested in Table No. 2 as Table No. 1, since I believed the average operator would not take the trouble to dope out the real meaning of Table No. 2. Griffiths comes back at me thusly:

> As you say, the average operator will simply see, in Table No. 2, a bunch of figures which convey no meaning to him. But there are nevertheless a good many of the men now who are decidedly above the average, and to these men a little study of the tables will show exactly where the crater will be with any given set of condensers and a given distance between the condensers and the aperture plate, and while the condensers named in Table No. 1 are in a general way correct for the distances named, improvement may in some cases be made by departing somewhat from the table, always provided the operator understands the exact effect of the change he proposes to make. Personally, I have made a chart which gives me the position of the crater under any condition to be met within practice. This chart is designed as one of my working tools when I begin doctoring up the optical system, it being my intention to go into that particular proposition as a side line, helping out, for a moderate fee, in unusual cases where the tables don't fit. Having gone this far into the optical subject, and realizing that we have only made a beginning. I think I will keep at it until I really learn something about it. By-the-way, I think that by using 75 amperes A.C. is a decided improvement over 60, and recommend it to the boys who have two transformers. (I have been telling them that for these many moons, Brother Griffiths. You have made a goodly number of discoveries, but this particular thing is not in the "discovery" line. I will go you one better than that, and say 80 amperes were much better than 75—ED.)
> I am looking forward to the articles by Friend Martin. They should indeed be good judging by his answer to Question 112. and his subsequent article in which the ground glass idea was put forth, for, although this latter was not practical, it does show that he has a good knowledge of the subject in hand. In closing here's hoping we make as much progress in 1916 as we did in 1915; also hoping that the cops don't get your number on that new 1916 model Harley-Davidson Get-There.

Brother Griffiths is absolutely right, and I was entirely wrong. I spoke too hastily when I wrote him that Table No. 2 was not of so much importance. It really is true that the operator who understands Table No. 2 has a very much more comprehensive understanding of the whole light system of the projector.

The Martin articles are coming along. He is springing some stuff that really has got me corraled on the top of a stump, but nevertheless it looks good, and if he is wrong in any particular there is yourself, La Grow, Armstrong and others who will, I am sure, very cheerfully assume the task of cleaning his chronometer balance and cylinder escapement, oiling up his works and starting him off in the right direction.

Cream of the Industry.

William H. Pahl, Parkersburg, West Virginia, says:

> I have the second edition of the Handbook, and must say that it is the cream of the moving picture industry. I have a little stunt I have been using for three years. It is useful and convenient; consists of a small lamp placed inside the mechanism so that in threading up you can frame the picture. Am a constant reader of the department, and literally could not afford to miss it for a single week.

I am glad to know that you like the department and the Handbook, but the framing lamp stunt has already been published several times; therefore, while we thank you for submitting it, it is hardly worth while republishing it at this time.

Arc Controller and Other Things.

Sister H. Meusner, licensed motion picture machine operator of Newark, N. J., a map of whose smiling countenance is appended, sends in forty cents for both sets of questions, and says:

> I am the proud owner of your last Handbook, and must admit I am growing anxious to own the new one, even if it does cost a little more. I guess it is a fact that many an operator, who probably won't admit it, would have been up a reasonably tall stump a good many times if he had not been able to fall back on our "first aid to the injured," the Handbook. Is it true that a New York City playhouse has installed a permanent lamp, latest invention, to take the place of the carbon-fed arc? If true, what is the name of the lamp? Many thanks for your hearty welcome to the department. I want to take this opportunity of assuring you that I am not like the pretty polly who talks too darned much.

We are sending you the booklets, Sister Meusner. As to your inquiry concerning the "latest invention," I don't quite get you. If you mean the arc controller, why yes, there are a number of controllers working successfully in New York City theaters—a very considerable number. They automatically feed the carbons and do the job perfectly. I heartily favor their installation. If, on the other hand, you mean, as I think you do, the new nitrogen filled incandescent lamp, why, no, I do not think there are any yet installed in New York playhouses, though experiments are being carried on and I am informed that one of the lamps is to be installed in a New York City theater, where it will be shown to the editor. I'm from Missouri on that particular thing, however. Below an eight foot picture, yes; above that—show me. I have seen one lamphouse experimentally equipped with these lamps, one at either end of the lamphouse, so that if a lamp burns out, you simply whirl the lamphouse around and proceed with the other lamp. As to your query about the institution on 17th street, why I know nothing about it, but would caution you to investigate very carefully before investing money.

Miss Meusner had quite some considerable trouble in securing her license, only receiving it after she forced its issue by demonstrating her thorough competency as a moving picture machine operator. The objection to a woman operator is primarily very largely a matter of clothing. It has been repeatedly pointed out that in case of fire a woman's clothing would be extremely dangerous to—her. This objection could, however be overcome in a number of ways. For instance: she could adopt a sort of a bloomer costume, which would be practical, sufficiently modest, and no more dangerous than the costume of a man, or she could wear a skirt and outer dress that had been soaked in a solution of one pound of ammonia phosphate and a gallon of water. This renders the fabric non-inflammable, and to all intents and purposes fireproof. Miss Meusner expects in the near future to become a theater owner, in which new capacity we wish her every possible success.

Power's Intermittent.

Bert Meester, Hobart, Indiana, and H. G. Grose, Gary, Indiana, submit the following:

> The adjustment of the intermittent sprocket, at least on a Power's machine, depends upon the condition of the cam shaft bearings. Before adjusting the intermittent for circumferential play, the operator should carefully note the amount of wear in the cam shaft bearing. In the Power's machine you should raise up on the fly wheel and see if there is any play in the intermittent sprocket, then if the sprocket shows no play when you raise on the fly wheel, but does show play ordinarily, it will do no good to set the intermittent up close, as it will immediately wear down again. We believe a great deal of this intermittent trouble may be eliminated, or at least remedied, by the use of an adjustable cone bearing or its equivalent, on the cam shaft, so as to take up the wear and prevent the cam from playing on the cross pins.

You have got me up a stump on this proposition, brothers. You are working with Power's machines every day, and ought to know what you are talking about. I am going to submit your proposition to Mr. Power and request him to look into the matter. If you are found to be correct I have no doubt but what the change suggested will be made in due course of time. Later: Powers says it is not practical.

Another One from Martin.

R. W. Martin, Los Angeles, California, contributes the following:

> In Fig. 1, the optical system is shown in working condition. The objective is properly focussed, so that the aperture and screen are at conjugate foci. Therefore the picture in the aperture is sharply focussed on the screen.

A scioptic slide picture is now placed in front of the condenser at A A and a small screen, A' A', is moved about in front of the lens until A A becomes sharply focussed upon it. Therefore A A and A' A' are at conjugate foci of the lens, and their ray system is shown by the rush lines which are filled in by hatching.

Now if A' A' is moved forward toward the permanent screen to the position B' B', the definition of the lantern slide of course becomes blurred on B' B', but if now A A is also moved forward, it will come to a position at B B, at which point B B and B' B' will again come into conjugate focus and the definition will be restored on B' B' and the ray system shown by the dash lines will be altered accordingly as shown.

If this process is continued further, then when B' B coincides with the permanent screen, B B will be at the aperture and all the former dash line systems of rays will have changed, until they now coincide with the full line system. Therefore, when the aperture is in focus with the permanent screen there is just one system of rays (the full lines) which passes from the aperture to the screen. With other things remaining stationary the back focus of the objective is determined wholly by the length of the throw.

If the lantern slide is removed and A A is moved slowly from the lens to the screen every phase of the back focus can be observed from the image of the condenser to the well defined picture in the aperture.

In theory there are an infinite number of ray systems each with its own back and front focal planes but they all combine and work in harmony to form the ideal single system.

To operate the arc illuminate the screen with one machine, and working with the other one place a small piece of ground glass in the aperture. From the objective the sharp image of the illuminated crater appears upon the ground glass, and if the carbons are properly trimmed it will exactly fill the aperture. Provided with maximum projecting power the crater should be made high enough to clear the field on the screen.

Because the crater is in focus with the screen and must therefore produce the brightest possible illumination on the screen.

Also the aperture is in focus with the screen, so in final effect the sharply defined image of both the crater and the picture at the aperture will coincide at the screen, and which is the condition to be desired.

Whether the focus of the axon is apparent or not, the experiment proves that. Since the crater is in focus with the screen and the aperture is also in focus with the screen, the two are in focus with the same thing and are necessarily in focus with each other.

We are in doubt which condition causes the greatest illumination on the screen. Whether it is because the crater is in focus on the screen or whether this condition merely allows the maximum number of light rays to pass through the aperture.

The first part of this article is principally valuable in giving the operator a more clear idea of why he must "focus" his objective, and what happens when he does focus it.

With regard to that part of the article "to position the arc," why I will refer that to our readers, particularly Brothers Griffiths and Armstrong. I am not quite sure that Brother Martin's plan is the most practical one, though his deductions are undoubtedly correct. What I mean by this is that I am not sure that the operator will find it to be best to put the crater in focus exactly at the plane of the film. However, there seems to be one great, big outstanding thing worthy of very, very careful study and experiment. If Martin's ground-glass-at-the-crater stunt will work, then it will, it seems to me, show the economic limit of crater size and hence the economic limit of amperage.

Insufficient Data.

J. A. Wollam, Walters, Oklahoma, says:

> Have been in the business since 1896, and here I am up against something I don't understand. Have examined the Handbook but cannot find anything covering it, nor can I discover the seat of the trouble. I have a Power's Six A, a 6½ and a 7½ condensing lens, projecting a 13 foot picture at 104 feet. Have always had a clear cut good picture until recently, but now there is a very small spot in center which is out of focus. It covers about three or four letters when a title is on. The objective is a French lens which projected the first picture that was thrown on a screen in Milwaukee, Wis., twenty years ago. I have used it ever since and it is a good one. Current is 110 volt D. C.

In a matter of this kind, Brother Wollam, I ought to know exactly what you have and have not been doing. It looks very much to me as though you had had your objective apart cleaning it, and had touched the center of the lens with your finger in process of re-assembling. It is also possible that the glass itself has "gone wrong" at one particular point. Optical glass you know sometimes does that—not often, but sometimes. First, assuming that you have not changed the other conditions in any way, take your objective apart, and examine it very closely. If you have two machines, however, before you do that, switch the objectives and see if the trouble switches with it. If it does that fixes the trouble in the objective lens, and it is up to you to discover what has gone wrong with it. If it does not, then probably there is a very slight buckling of the film over the aperture. More than that I cannot say from the data in hand, and even with full and complete information it is sometimes very difficult to locate trouble of this nature with any considerable degree of accuracy.

Gets Better Each Week.

Leon Brantley, Nacogdoches, Texas, sends reply to Question 120, and says:

> The "Projection Magazine" (known as the Moving Picture World) gets better each week. I cannot begin to express my thanks for the good it has done me. Although I am "just an operator," I want you to know that you have my sincerest approval and thanks for the good work you are doing. May Dame Fortune smile upon you always, but never her daughter, "Mis-fortune."

Well, Brother Brantley, we try to make the Moving Picture World the best we know how. It is a source of much satisfaction to know our efforts in this direction are appreciated. I must take exception to your remark that you are "just an operator," because putting it that way would tend to belittle the importance of the profession, a view I cannot at all agree with. I long ago took the position that the operator was one of the corner stones of the moving picture industry, and I have had no reason to change my mind.

Making a Small Portable Developing Outfit.

The following small outfit which has a capacity of a little more than 50 feet of film at one time will go into a space about 32 x 32 inches by 8 inches thick, including a dozen racks.

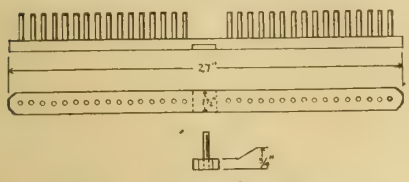

Fig. 1. Developing Rack.

Figure 1 shows the construction of the arms of the rack, which are made of some hard close grained wood like maple, the pins are made of what is called dowel-pin stock, small rods of hard wood used by cabinet-makers to pin the edges of boards together in fine cabinet work. They may be obtained from almost any lumber yard or mill. The ones used in the rack described were 3/16 inch in diameter and protrude two inches from the rack arm. Two rack arms crossed make a rack on which a little more than 50 feet of film may be wound spirally, beginning at the center. They are fastened together with two screws so that they may be readily taken apart for greater convenience in transporting.

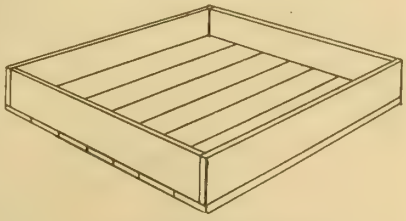

Fig. 2. Wooden Developing Tray.

By a little calculation, if one wishes a rack of larger capacity, a 75 or 100-foot rack may be constructed in the same manner. A rack of 100 feet capacity is about the limit of this form of developing apparatus, as anything larger becomes too cumbersome, and the swelling action of the developer causes the film to loosen and gives trouble, as the film seems bound to stick together, although racks of larger capacity have been made with four cross arms instead of two. This only reduces the trouble to a slight extent, so that it is not advisable even in the hundred-foot racks, unless the film is stretched very tightly, for one is apt to experience trouble from slack strands adhering and stopping the action of the developer where they stick together.

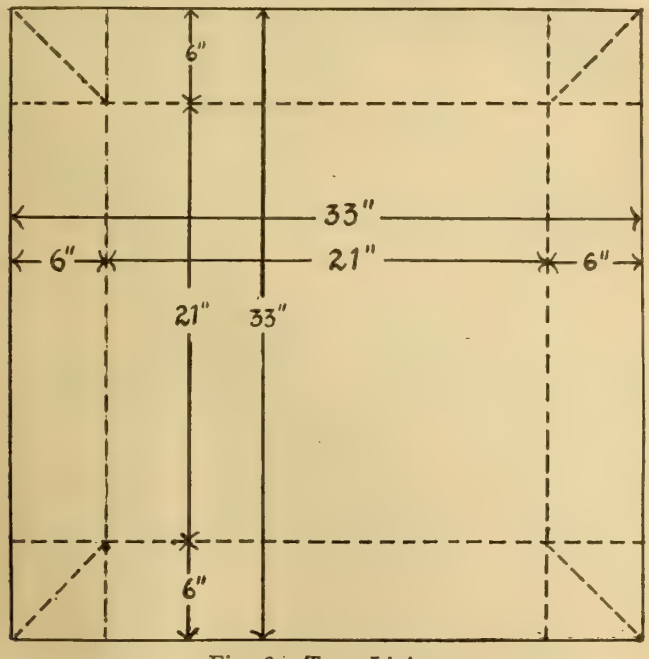

Fig. 3. Tray Lining.

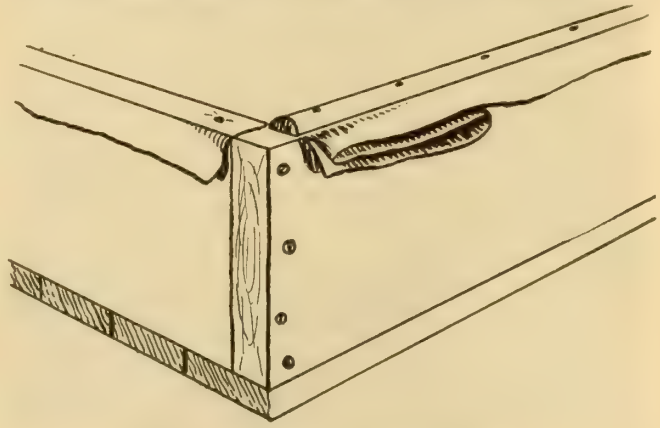

Fig. 4. Lining a Wooden Tray.

If the maker is an amateur metal worker, he may make an apparatus quite a bit more compact by constructing it of square brass rod stock, with smaller brass pins, which on account of their size may be set closer together than the wooden dowels.

A developing tray 21 inches square inside measurement and 4 inches deep will accommodate the diagonal cross arms of the 27-inch rack. The trays may be made of wood, but by getting a sheet metal worker to construct the trays of sheet iron, a much lighter and more compact nest of trays may be made. A set of three trays is necessary, one for the developer, one for the Hypo and one for a washing tray. Each of these in succession is just enough larger than the one preceding, so that they will nest together for packing.

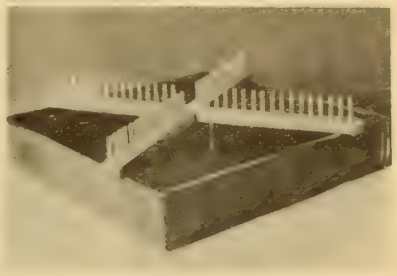

Fig. 5. Rack and Tray.

For those who wish to construct their own trays of wood, Figure 2 shows a wooden developing tray which may be constructed of any sort of wood which may be at hand. It is not advisable to try to make this tray water-tight since the action of the water and developing fluids will inevitably warp it, so that it would leak too badly to use. Wooden trays are easily rendered water-proof by lining with rubber cloth, or in the case of hypo and washing trays, with ordinary table oil cloth. Oil cloth cannot be used in a developing tray unless it is covered with a good coat of Probus paint, as the alkali in the developer dissolves the water-proof coating on the oil cloth.

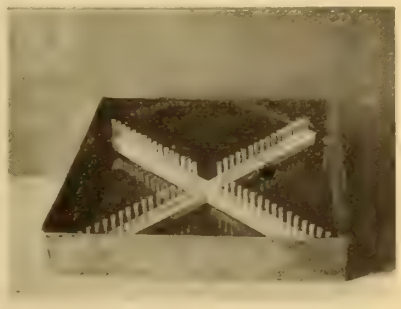

Fig. 6. Rack in Tray.

Figure 3 shows a square of rubber cloth cut for lining the developing tray. Use surgeon's white rubber sheeting, which may be obtained from any drug store. This rubber cloth is impervious to the action of the developer, and by turning the folded corner as shown in Figure 4, a smooth water-proof joint can easily be made. Place the cloth inside the tray with the rubber surface up, spread it smoothly inside and turn the edges over the edge of the tray, a two-inch overlap being provided for in the diagram. Fasten lightly with tacks until the cloth is smoothly arranged, cutting down the corners just far enough to meet the top of the tray, and then fasten permanently by tacking half round beading along the top edge of the tray, after which the small amount of cloth protruding may be trimmed off, leaving a neat cloth-lined tray which is water and solution proof.

Metal trays should be painted thoroughly inside with a coating of Probus paint, which is a paint impervious to the action of either acids or alkalies, and which may be obtained from any dealer in photographic supplies. Sheet iron is better than galvanized iron or tin, as the coating of tin or zinc is liable to peel off after short use and expose the metal underneath to the action of the solutions.

Figure 7 shows a cloth-lined hypo tray and a similar washing tray in a home-made wooden sink fitted up for using this outfit. The size of tray described here requires about 5 gallons of developer to cover the rack sufficiently, and if the developer is one not easily oxidized, such as Metol-Hydrochonon the developer may be used a good number of times by keeping it in an air-tight glass carboy, as shown at the right in Figure 7. Films may be dried upon the racks after washing, but as the pins cause a kinking of the film it is better to construct some sort of a drying drum upon which the film may be wound for drying after washing.

Variation in the Width of Film Stock.

Optical, Denver, Colo., writes:

> Why is the width of film in raw stock different? Eastman's is the widest, Lumiere and Pathes next, Austin Edward's and Agfa next. The difference will be about 1-64 to 1-32 of an inch. The thickness also seems to vary from 1-1000 to 1-100 of an inch, also the perforations seem to vary and the amount of shrinkage seems to very when developed under the same conditions and dried under the same conditions. This difference in width, perforation, thickness, does not seem to interfere when passing same through the camera, but when printing I have experienced a great deal of trouble and feel that it must be the shrinkage of the negative causing a difference in perforation. It will not match so as to allow finger to enter properly at the same time in perforations of the negative and positive film, so I have made an aperture pressure gate which works automatically to give perfect contact when the light shutter is open and to automatically release pressure when finger or pins enter perforation to draw the film down, thinking that this would overcome the difference in perforation, by allowing both film to slip a little so as to have the bottom perforations exit when the pin leave perforation. I have fixed the sprocket pins on intermittent movement take up and film guide so they are in perfect line to a 1-1000 part of an inch. I also have allowed the rollers on sprocket to roll free so as to allow play when films is on the sprockets.
> Kindly explain to me how they overcome the shrinkage, also mis-frames caused, I think, by the difference in perforation of the negative and positive when passed in printer. Also inform me as to what width they make guide way in printer to overcome difference in width of film.

It is a difficult matter to state why or to account for the variation in the width of raw stock from different makers. It is probably caused first by shrinkage, second by the manner of standardization of measurement; that is, while there is a standard measurement for the width of film; in conversion to the metric system, and the allowance made for shrinkage, the calculations of the different makers do not tally.

Celluloid film is subject to very considerable variations and the different celluloids used by different makers are manufactured in very different ways. Variations in perforation is also accounted for by shrinkage and the different perforaters used by the different companies. The general rule in this country is that positive stock should have 65 perforations to the foot, and that negative should have 64, it being assumed that the negative film would shrink to correspond with the positive by the process of development.

It is probable that the dry conditions of your altitude cause an excessive shrinkage of the film also which is not ordinarily met with in the motion centers which are located in lower altitudes.

The problem which concerns you is one which even the large companies have not been able to solve when they were compelled to use various brands of film indiscriminately. However, at the present time very few factories use more than one brand of film, and they become acquainted with the variations under their particular conditions and as they perforate their own stock they are enabled to adjust their perforators accordingly.

Your device for relieving the tension on the film while it is being drawn down is the same as is incorporated in most makes of good printing machines and should take care of any slight difference in the perforation gauge. It may be that you have not allowed a sufficient throw for your fingers, in which case instead of entering the perforation freely and then engaging the lower edge as they travel downward, the pins force themselves against the edge of the film as they travel inwards, which might account for this device not being able to take up the variation in perforation.

You were correct in relieving the rollers so that they do not come into actual contact with the sprocket. I do not know of any way to overcome shrinkage, and I have never heard of any one who did. When your printer mis-frames, it must be either the fault of the printer or of defective perforation of the negative.

To make sure that the perforations in a piece of film of any kind are uniform, make a loop at the beginning of the film, superposing the first end of the film upon a point about three feet from the beginning; then pull this loop through the fingers with the two films together. Wherever there is an imperfection in the perforation or a mis-frame in the negative, you will see it will immediately throw the frames out of register. When you come to such a defect, cut it out and very carefully make a new joint.

As for the overcoming of the difference in width this is extremely difficult where the negative and positive stock are not of the same width. In some printers the side guides are arranged like the sides of a parallel rule held in place at a slightly narrower gauge than any film you might possibly have by a spring, the tension of which keeps the side guides parallel and in contact with the edge of the film at all times.

Another method is to have one side guide stationary and the other with two springs which keep the film constantly to one side of the printer, thus avoiding side-weave, but in extremely narrow bands causing the frames to be a little to one side of the center of the film. It is almost impossible to avoid side-weave when there is a great variation in the width of the positive and negative. I have seen, however, a machine with an adjustment for overcoming this, which had a separate slot for the entry and exit of the two films under the pressure gauge. A small roller with a spring behind it, pressed against the edge of the film and kept each film pressed toward one side of the guides, thereby eliminating to a considerable extent the side-weave which often occurs when narrow film is printed.

Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen.

Eric E. Mayell, director of the Pathe News, writes to this department:

> I thank you for your notice regarding booklet, "Hints to Newsfilm Cameramen," which we offered to give free to anyone. Had I known you had such an army of enthusiastic readers I certainly would not have made the offer. I have been absolutely inundated with requests for the booklet and my stock was exhausted the first day.

It is too bad that there were not enough of these very valuable little booklets to go around to the numerous inquirers.

Cameramen's Correspondence Club.

The following readers of the department have requested that their names and addresses be published with a view to corresponding with other cameramen. They are isolated from other members of their profession and doubtless there are many others in the same position, who would be glad to have letter chums with whom they could exchange experiences. If you want to correspond send in your name.

Photographic Developing Agents.

Mr. Samuel Wein, chief chemist with the Universal Film Company at Fort Lee, New Jersey, sends a list of photographic developing agents giving their chemical name and symbol. More than twenty-five of the best known developing agents are listed, and the leaflet should find a valued place in the formula scrap book of any earnest worker. Mr. Wein's address is 25 E. 115th street, New York City, and he very kindly offers to send a copy of this leaflet to anyone who will send him a red stamp for postage. Mr. Wein's name is becoming more and favorably known from the many valuable papers which he has contributed to the photographic press. Some of his articles appear in recent numbers of the Photo Journal of America, Photo Times and Wilson's Photographic Magazine.

Released March 20 by the Metro Pictures Corporation.

SUGGESTIONS PREPARED BY S. M. BERG.

By special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.

This "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is intended as a partial solution of the problem of what to play for the pictures and to assist in overcoming that chaotic condition encountered when the film is not available until almost the hour of showing, resulting in the first performance being a mere rehearsal.

For the benefit of those readers of the Moving Picture World who are exhibitors of Metro films, the following suggestions for an accompaniment to "Her Great Price" were prepared by Mr. Berg, who is associated with the Photoplay Department of G. Schirmer, Inc. This advance publication will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film story he is to portray with his orchestra.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 40½T, "I'll do it," is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 59½ D, "Fireworks," is a description of action.

Agnes Lambert, a young writer, is despondent as the New Year's Eve approaches. She is in debt and her manuscripts have been returned. Larry, Tony and Henry, the "Trinity" artists, endeavor to get her to join them in a celebration, but she is in no mood for this. Before leaving they tell her they are expecting Tom Leighton, a wealthy sculptor just returned from Europe. In her despondency Agnes decides to take her life, but Leighton interrupts. She then tells him the story of her life and they agree to a remarkable proposition. At the end of the year she returns to the studio to carry out her bargain, which is her postponed suicide. It is here that the story takes a new twist, which raises it to a classic among screen productions.

The whole character of this picture is intensely dramatic, but with few exceptions. Note particularly: New Year's Eve celebration at 10¼, when toy trumpets and drums must be used. Piano and accordion at 16. Fireworks, hissing sounds, at 59½. New Year's Eve celebration, chimes, bells and whistles at 86½. Telephone bell at 87. Clicking of typewriter at 90 is very important. Toy trumpets at 90¼.

The theme selected is "A Love Song."—Bartlett.

From the Sublime to the Ridiculous.

By S. M. Berg.

Rialto Theater—Sublime.

On Saturday, March 18, there was thrown open to the general public at Flatbush avenue and Cortelyou road, Brooklyn, New York, the Rialto theater, an entirely new building especially designed and constructed for motion pictures, with a seating capacity of 1,800. At this initial performance, Doctor Brenton, chairman of the National Board of Censors, and Mr. W. Stephen Bush, one of the leading authorities on motion pictures, addressed a packed house on facts associated with the film.

It is promised that a serious attempt will be made to fittingly present motion pictures, and if the same standard is continued in the future as was presented at the opening performance, successful financial results will be the return to those interested in the theater besides giving to Brooklyn residents an entertainment second to none in the whole of Greater New York. An interesting announcement is, that two performances a day will be given; a matinee at two and finishing at five, and an evening performance at seven and closing at eleven, with the exception of Sunday, when it will be continuous. The price of general admission is 15 cents with 25 cents for the smoking loges. The same program is run on Sunday and Monday, changed for Tuesday and Wednesday, and again for Thursday and Friday, with a special program for Saturday.

The whole of the musical arrangements including the engagement of the artists are in the hands of that well-known impressario, Mr.

George W. Beynon. His idea with regard to the orchestra is quality of musicians, not quantity, and it is made up of director, two violins, flute, clarinet, cello, bass, piano, drums and tympani.

The program consisted of a ten-reel feature, "The Ne'er-do-Well," a scenic and educational subject, a Hearst-Vitagraph weekly, a selection "The Raymond Overture" by the orchestra, vocal solos by Miss M. Reiner, soprano, and Mr. F. W. Myers, basso. One could hardly believe that this was the opening night, for the music, solos and the projection was as smooth as though the performance had been running for an indefinite period. Such an entertainment as given in the Rialto theater and presented in such an excellent manner is a credit to everyone connected with this enterprise.

Park Theater, Ridiculous.

The Park theater, Columbus Circle, New York City, was reopened on Sunday last with a wonderful film featuring the marvelous Maciste, the giant of Cabiria, and it was fittingly described as "an amazing modern melodramatic comedy" with "a gasp and a grin in every scene." However, it isn't to the film I wish to draw attention, but to the music which was presented with it. The whole of the story lies in Italy and, to sum it up, the music required must be allegro (lively, brisk, rapid), with considerable action which can only be interpreted by galops, intermezzos and agitatos.

The following description of what was presented in the theater is neither imaginative nor over-drawn, but is a truthful account of the musical offering. The writer entered the theater at about 7:15 P. M. The end of the last reel of the featu e was being projected with the accompaniment of a piano only, and within one or two minutes the performance closed. The house lights were turned up and the audience sat up in expectation for what would next happen.

An orchestra consisting of two violins, viola, piano and harmonium organ drifted in and started to tune up. Four or five minutes elapsed and then the musicians played a march. At its completion the lights were turned down and there was projected on the screen a Mutual weekly without music of any kind, though when half through the reel the orchestra played a short waltz. At the finish of this there was again silence and as the weekly closed there were a few scenes of American soldiers, so they started a march of which they played about ten bars, and as the picture finished, they finished, too.

Then the feature was thrown on the screen. More silence and then they played some little composition in no way appropriate to the action. During the picture they played an old-time deKoven selection, a waltz, one or two pathetic intermezzos, one tango and one allegro movement. The character of the music selected was mostly German, which certainly was particularly inappropriate for an Italian subject. After each selection, they simply rested and no music of any kind was offered. There was but one situation that had fitting music, though I am inclined to believe that even this was more luck than forethought. The music I refer to was the tango.

While the film was being projected, for some reason or another the operator was forced to stop and throw on the screen that old stand-by, "One Moment Please." This incident happened twice, and at both times the orchestra stopped their music, making no attempt to tide over this unnecessary delay. It is hardly credible to believe that a modern theater situated in the heart of the great metropolis of New York would present to an audience such a musical interpretation of a film as was offered in the Park theater on Sunday night. The audience laughed and gasped at Maciste but with a fitting musical interpretation that would have heightened the illusion, I firmly believe that the audience would have been held spell-bound in their seats and would have left the theater recommending the film as a thrilling and exciting novelty.

Important Notice.

The Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet published March 25 is for the Mutual Masterpicture "The Flight of the Duchess." By printer's error it was headed Musical Setting for "The Heart of Tara."

Mr. Berg desires to thank Miss Estelle Deputy for calling this to his attention.

Vitagraph Beefsteak

More than One Hundred Attend Festivities at Castle Cave Arranged by "Vic" Smith.

CASTLE CAVE was the sceen of a vivacious Vitagraph gathering Saturday night, March 18th. Arthur Victor Smith, Manager of the Vitagraph studios, was chairman of the committee on arrangements and made a reputation for himself as a magician. Not that he picked flowers and rabbits from a hat, but because he had several delightful surprises up his sleeve that were not on the bill.

Hughie Mack, the Vitagraph heavy in the laugh department, aided digestion by arousing the risibles of the roast-beefers. Dick Leslie entertained the gathering with a number of his popular songs, sung in his interesting and entertaining manner.

Garry McGarry, former Vitagraph juvenile lead now with the Shuberts, was secured at the last moment by "Vic," as Mr. Smith is affectionately known to the Vitagraphers. Garry brought with him his troupe of Hawaiian singers who entertained the party with their Hawaiian music. Then Garry sang a few songs himself greatly to the delectation of his old friends. It was Garry's treat to Vitagraph.

Among the hundred and more guests present were, Earle Williams, Antonio Moreno, Harry Morey, Edward Dunn, Harold Foshay, Donald Hall, John T. Kelly, Richard Leslie, Hughie Mack, Thomas Mills, Anders Randolf, Templer Saxe, William Shea, Doc Stark, E. A. Turner, Denton Vane, William Lally, Charles Burton, George E. Hedden, William Watkins, Sam M. Spedon, Doc Dunahue, Walter Arthur, Leonard Smith, Herbert Schmidt, August Wenz, William Blackton, Max Held, Fred Held, Frank Brule, Frank Lawrence, Harry Waldron, Archie Stuart, Arthur Cozine, Doc Kleine, James B. French, Walter Bunyon, Joe Schelderfer, Frank Shaw, George Baker, Paul Scardon, Lawrence Semon, Charles D. Chapman, Edward Thomas, Edward Wentworth, Wallie Van.

Florence Lawrence Has Paris Gowns

IN SPITE of the fact that a recent visit to the Universal studios at Fort Lee, N. J., discovered little Miss Lawrence in the woeful attire of a slavey, torn red calico bodice, black skirt of a rather rapid fit on an already slim form, much beholed stockings with yellow tops that started a bit below the knees, golden hair pulled straight back from her forehead and fastened with a fragment of black and white check ribbon at the back, she has tucked away in her wardrobe two new, really truly Paris gowns. It might be well to add by way of explanation that Miss Lawrence, when taken unawares by a visit from a press representative, was figuring in a comedy production in which she has just begun work, her first picture since her return to the screen, "The Elusive Isabel," having been completed a couple of weeks ago.

Florence Lawrence.

The Maison Maurice establishment is responsible for the two newest creations added to Miss Lawrence's wardrobe. One of these is an orchid gown of quaint design, as seen in the accompanying cut, with hat and shoes to match. The skirt of this gown measures no less than eighteen yards around the bottom hem. The entire costume is of a rich silk material, with quaint, low cut bodice, which fastens at the back with crystal buttons of the same orchid shade, and resolves itself at the waist into a girdle effect, terminating with a huge bow which extends partially over the full-gathered skirt in front. From one of the bow ends hangs a tiny bunch of fruit among narrow streamers of orchid and blue. Gracefully arranged over the shoulders is a double collar of white material of chiffon texture; while down the front of the costume is displayed the tiniest peep of the same white material from between the folds of the silk, with a two or three-inch display of the delicate white used also as a lining, adding a pretty excuse for the invertion of a hand-embroidered hem proper on the bottom of the skirt. The hat that goes with the costume is of the same shade of silk, hand-embroidered about the brim, where it meets the white chiffon which forms the under side. The front of the pretty, broad-brimmed shape which droops gracefully both back and front is decorated with a bunch of exquisitely shaded roses, from which daintily narrow streamers of harmonious shades of a deeper orchid and pale blue extend over the brim at the back. White kid, high vamp, Louis heeled shoes finish one of the daintiest of costumes.

Gown number two, for evening use, is of cloth of silver, trimmed profusely with passementerie and rhinestones, of which latter hundreds are in evidence. The full ankle length skirt, given a dainty flare at the bottom by a scrupulous use of featherbone, is finished with a silver fringe. An accompanying garniture consists of a white tulle scarf which is laid about the throat, crossing at the back with one end fastened to the wrist by means of a passementerie and rhinestone buckle, her own idea by the way, and the other disposed of in an accordingly original fashion. The shoes that go with this costume are of cloth of silver, and laced considerably above the ankle with silver ribbons.

Some April Triangles

Frank Keenan, De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks and Other Leading Players Will Appear.

TWO five-reel comedies starring Douglas Fairbanks are announced by the Triangle Film Corporation in its April release chart, which includes also the reappearance after long absences of Frank Keenan and De Wolf Hopper. As there are five release dates during the month the list of Triangle stars is materially increased. H. B. Warner, previously seen in "The Raiders," has a new Sullivan story, called "The Beggar of Cawnpore." Ince also presents William S. Hart, Jane Grey and William H. Thompson. Lillian and Dorothy Gish have new pictures from the Fine Arts studios and Mack Sennett will contribute ten Keystones.

The opening program introduces Fairbanks in "The Habit of Happiness" and Miss Grey as the slum heroine of "Waifs." William Desmond, last seen with Billie Burke in "Peggy," is featured with her. He has the part of a young clergyman who goes astray and is redeemed by Rags, a piano player in a waterfront saloon. Carol Holloway, Robert Kortman, J. Frank Burke, Fannie Midgley and Truly Shattuck have the principal supporting roles. A big cathedral set is one of many provided by Ince for this production.

Scene from "The Aryan" (Triangle).

As indicated by the title, the Fairbanks comedy has a strong undercurrent of sociology. Sunny Wiggins spends his father's wealth on Bowery derelicts and is so successful at making them happy that an eminent specialist engages him to make a millionaire grouch laugh. Sunny's theories work out as expected, cures the grouch and wins his daughter and satisfies his father that he is not so worthless after all. George Fawcett is the millionaire, Dorothy West the daughter and Grace Rankin, Macey Harlam, George Backus and William Jefferson have congenial roles.

For the following week, April 9, "Little Meena's Romance" and "The Aryan" are underlined. Dorothy Gish is Meena Bauer in the Griffith feature, and Owen Moore plays the Count Rudolph von Ritz. A new film field is invaded by this picture, which presents life among the Pennsylvania Dutch. Margaret Marsh, Kate Toncray, James O'Shea, Fred J. Butler and Robert Lawler are in the company.

William S. Hart in "The Aryan" presents a new characterization of his familiar western "bad man." While on his way home with the riches of years of hard work in the mines he awakes to find that his fortune has vanished in a night. He swears vengeance on the western whites who have swindled him, takes away the woman who had engineered the plot and makes her his slave in a vile community in which only the scum of the district are tolerated. A pack train of Mississippi farmers, lured by gold, is lost in the desert. Hart refuses their requests for aid but Mary Jane, a young and innocent member of the party, fearlessly goes to his settlement and wins him over. Bessie Love is the youthful heroine. Her experience is an example of the possibilities of the Triangle system. One of the film finds of the year, she was first seen in "The Flying Torpedo" with John Emerson. From this Griffith feature she joined Hart at the Ince studios. Now she is back at Fine Arts with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good Bad-Man."

Week of April 16 marks the reappearance of Frank Keenan in "The Stepping Stone," the story of a weak man's rise through the aid of a good woman and his fall after he has discarded her. Mary Boland, for many years John Drew's leading woman, has the principal feminine role. Robert McKim is the weak husband and Keenan the powerful who helps him, ruins him and later when he has committed suicide marries the widow. Lillian Gish and "Sold for Marriage" furnish the other dramatic entertainment of the week. The star appears as a young Russian girl and is supported by Frank Bennett, Walter Long, A. D. Sears, Pearl Elmore and many other Griffith players.

Toward the end of the month comes Hopper in "Sunshine Dad," in combination with "Civilization's Child," which presents William H. Thompson for the first time as a Triangle star; then Fairbanks in "The Good Bad-Man" and Warner in "The Beggar of Cawnpore."

Actress to Do Double Time

Clara Kimball Young Will Work Simultaneously in Two Pictures Under Two Directors.

WHEN the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation begins the production of its features with Miss Young as the star on July 15, a new record for activity among motion picture actresses will be established. Most film stars consider it arduous enough to work in one picture at a time, but the ambitious and talented Miss Young has worked out a system by which she can produce two features simultaneously.

The selection of the two directors who will devote their talents and energies to the new corporation's productions will be announced within a week or two. It is proposed to schedule the work of these directors in a systematic manner so that what ordinarily would be Miss Young's idle hours in the studio will be utilized. While one director is having the sets built on the studio floor for some of his interior scenes, Miss Young will be out on location working with the other director in the other picture.

There are also many hours when Miss Young would not be actually engaged if she were producing only one picture at a time, such as the time spent by a director in "shooting" the scenes in which the star does not appear. The operation of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation studio will be so systematized on an efficiency basis as to save much of the waste in both time and money, now one of the greatest sorrows of the motion picture producers.

Florence Reed in Pathe's "The Woman's Law"

IF ANY doubt existed in the minds of the critical as to Florence Reed's right to be entitled one of the two or three most talented leading women on the screen today, Pathe's "The Woman's Law" will remove it. Miss Reed displays in this Gold Rooster play a sense of values, a depth of emotional resource and a versatility that is as rare as it is fascinating. Her part is an exacting one. She must play the unhappy wife whose husband is of fickle temperament and whose ways are such as to cause her constant worry and sorrow. Only at the end where with her husband dead, a victim of his own folly, she is enabled to come into her rightful heritage of happiness, does Miss Reed have an opportunity to free herself from the necessity of calling upon her emotional resources to an extent that must constitute a severe tax upon her strength. "The Woman's Law" is the first Gold Rooster play made by the Arrow Company. Lawrence McGill, the director, has staged and produced it most ably, and it is considered one of the best features that Pathe has released.

Tie Vote on Pallas Picture

Opinion of Newspaper Committee Evenly Divided Over Endings for "The Heart of Paula"—Lenore Ulrich Tosses Coin and Happiness Wins.

"THE Heart of Paula," the latest Pallas production, will be shown with a happy ending, and the star of the picture, Lenore Ulrich is very well satisfied in consequence; for the happy ending, rumor says, is Miss Ulrich's favorite, though she was ready to abide by the verdict of a jury of newspaper men.

The Pallas company conceived the novel idea of presenting the picture before an invited audience, first with a tragic climax, then with a pleasantly sentimental termination. Following the exhibition, on the afternoon of March 24th, Miss Ulrich was the hostess at a dinner party in the Hermitage where Pete Schmid—an expert on balloting since he ran for sheriff last fall—superintended the voting on the two endings. Twenty-four ballots were cast and after they had been counted it was found that opinion was evenly divided.

With this problem to face, B. A. Rolfe, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Miss Ulrich, E. Victor Wilson and Mr. Schmid, comprising a board of elections, decided to leave the matter to fate. Miss Ulrich tossed a Spanish coin, heads for happiness, tails for tragedy. It fell heads, meaning that the Strand audiences and subsequent audiences will not see a dagger plunged into the heart of Paula.

During the course of the dinner, Caroline Cassels sang "The Heart of Paula," written by William S. Charles with words by Palmelia Woodruff. It carries a pleasing, catchy air. Those present were:

Miss Lenore Ulrich, B. A. Rolfe, Manager, Strand Theater; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Pallas Pictures; E. Victor Wilson, Strand Theater; Pete Schmid, Pallas Pictures; Patrick Kearney, Motion Picture Mail; Arthur J. Miller and Ernst Schmitz, New York Staats Zeitung; Thomas C. Kennedy, Motography; Bert Ennis, Manager Screen Reports; Harry Ennis and J. E. Farrell, New York Clipper; William C. Stickles, Caroline Cassels, George W. Beynon, Geo. W. Beynon Inc.; Fritz Tidden, Morning Telegraph; Lynde Denig, Moving Picture World; Helen Duey, Woman's Home Companion; Fred Smith, New York Eveniny Globe; W. Forrest, New York Post; H. F. Rendall, New York Review; Willard Holcomb and E. P. Smaney, Dramatic Mirror; R. W. Baremore, Every Week; Gerald C. Duffy, Picture Play Magazine; Jack Edwards, The Billboard; J. Hesser Walraven, Paramount Pictures Corporation; Charles E. Moyer, Paramount Press; Wid Gunning, "Wid's"; Ewing Galloway, Collier's; Oscar Cooper, Motion Picture News; George Kaufman, Tribune; E. E. Essanay for May

A Number of Notable Releases Have Been Scheduled—William Gillette to Appear.

ESSANAY has scheduled a number of notable releases for May as announced by George K. Spoor, president of that company. "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," written by Howard McKent Barnes, will be one of the early five-reel releases. This is a story with a beautiful sentiment, full of pathos and also of sunshine, that reaches every heart. It deals with the little girls of bargain row from whose lives the light and sunshine have been crushed out. It deals with the little shepherd who brings them out of their misfortunes into clean green fields of open life.

Other strong multiple reel features include "According to the Code," by Charles Michelson, and "That Sort," taken from the celebrated play of Basil MacDonald Hastings. "Secret Service" with William Gillette, the famous stage actor starring, will be produced as a multiple reel feature. "Sherlock Holmes," also featuring William Gillette, now is nearing completion and will be released shortly.

The three-reel photoplays announced include "The Danger Line," "Once a Thief," "The Frame-Up," and "The Man Who Couldn't Be Kind," the latter written by William Merriam Rouse.

Among the two-reel plays to be released are "The Double Cross," "Dregs of Gold," "The Little Samaritan," and "In the Moon's Ray," the latter a re-issue featuring Francis X. Bushman.

Two more of George Ade's fables also will be released this month including "The Fable of the Undecided Brunette." The public is also offered two of Vernon Howe Bailey's "Sketch Books on American and Foreign Cities," each accompanied by five hundred feet of scenic.

KALEM PLAYERS BACK FROM TRIP.

A company of fifteen Kalem players producing "The Social Pirates" returned last week to the Glendale studio after a trip by boat and rail to Seattle. The players made the journey to secure marine views and special locations needed for the George Bronson Howard series. In addition to Director James W. Horne and a technical staff, the party included Marin Sais, Ollike Kirkby, Paul C. Hurst, Frank Jonasson, Thomas Lingham and Edward Clisbee. To date "The Social Pirates" company figures that it has travelled close to a thousand miles to secure the exact locations for different episodes of the fifteen week series.

Brooklyn's Triangle a Fine House

The Transformed Crescent Now One of the Best Picture Theaters in the Country—Projection Room on Orchestra Floor.

IT COST many thousands of dollars to transform the Crescent Theater of Brooklyn to the Triangle Theater—from a house where stage shows had been given exclusively to one where pictures were to be exhibited. There was no more occasion for the expenditure of this money than had been the case with many other stage theaters. The Crescent was up-to-date. The Kemble Theaters Corporation aimed, however, to make its structure a picture theater in fact as well as in name. With this object in view the first step was to remove twenty-one seats from the center rear of the orchestra floor and there install the projection room—at a height where the lenses would be opposite the center of the twenty-foot screen, ninety-six feet away. Concrete pillars reaching down to rock foundation support the room, so that it is independent of the structure itself. The screen was inclosed in a black sunken frame. The orchestra pit was lowered, so that by no chance could stray beams of light strike the curtain. Huge portiers were stretched across the rear of the auditorium so the screen might be protected from the rays from opening doors.

A fine painting was placed across the front portion of the dome of the house. Its size may be estimated from the fact that 200 pounds of canvas were employed. The system of lighting installed is of the semi-indirect. There are 1,666 chairs. The prices are for the evening performances 50 cents for the four front rows of the orchestra, 75 cents for the next four, $1 for 192 seats, and 75 and 50 cents for those behind these. The balcony prices are 50 and 25 cents, and for the 60 wicker chairs in the loges $2 each—and by the way these are well patronized. The chairs in the gallery are 25 cents each. The balcony chairs are upholstered in leather. On the orchestra floor they are of the best type of theater seating and are 34 inches from center to center of rows.

The men's smoking room is 40 by 11 feet and is most comfortably furnished with chairs and lounges upholstered in tapestry. The walls are in the same material. There are two women's reception rooms, one on the orchestra floor and the other in the rear of the balcony. These are elaborately provided with lounges and reading and dressing tables. Each room is in charge of a maid. There is also a reception room for the entertainment of prominent guests—and the Triangle has its share of these. Here, too, is a piano as well as other appurtenances that go to make the fortunate visitor feel thoroughly at home. The social side is not overlooked at the Triangle. This is made particularly evident by the large number of organizations taking advantage of its entertainment and social factors. It is not an unusual event for a society to take over the entire house for an evening and then by selling the seats at an advanced price to its members materially increase the sum in its treasury.

W. H. Kemble is president of the company controlling the Triangle Theater, James O. Miller treasurer and H. Clark Mooney secretary and assistant treasurer. Edward Trail, formerly of the Montauk Theater, is house manager. A World man who visited the house one afternoon last week met Mr. Trail just before the opening of the show. He noted with interest the faultless attire of the manager, his frock coat and silk hat, as Mr. Trail before the coming of the matinee audience inspected arrangements for the afternoon performance. Cut flowers in deep vases were in the lobbies; the young women ushers, in their picturesque garb, were at their stations. The program was William Collier in Keystone's "Wife and Auto Trouble," Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in Fine Arts' "Hoodoo Ann," and H. B. Warner in Kay-Bee's "The Raiders." Royal Dadmun, soloist for the spring tour of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, sang three songs—and these constituted a feature in themselves. It was all genuine entertainment, the kind of which Brooklyn citizens should be proud. That they are is evidenced by the 12,000 weekly paid admissions to a theater that has not yet been five months under its present regime.

The theater program of the Triangle is printed under the supervision of Edward O'Donnell, publicity representative of the house. The publication will rank with the best. Of its twenty pages, eleven are advertisements and the remainder devoted to the theater. The Triangle keeps in close touch with its patrons. Every week announcements are sent to the 2,500 names on its "preferred A" list. The Blue Book has been circularized, as well as 10,000 names from the telephone book. Secretary Mooney outlined another scheme the details of which will interest exhibitors. At one of the large department stores Triangle seats are on sale. Customers with accounts may select their tickets—and oftentimes it is done on the spur of the moment—and the price is charged on their monthly billl. When the theater representative calls at the store at the close of the day he takes away the unsold tickets and also a check for the sales. So popular has been the innovation that on some days the theater has been obliged to quadruple the number of tickets allotted to the store.

Durham Continues with Horsley

HIS portrayal of the heavy character in "A Law Unto Himself" having been so satisfactory, Louis Durham, the ex-baseball pitcher, has been retained by David Horsley to enact similar parts in future productions.

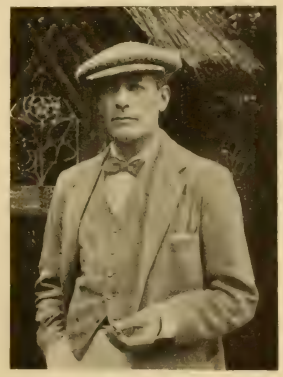
In "The Hidden Law," a current David Horsley release as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition, Durham plays a "heavy" along the lines of his character in "A Law Unto Himself," and in "The Conscience of John David," a Crane Wilbur starring vehicle, he enacts the part of the gambler, which, though dissimilar to his two previous impersonations, gives him ample scope for his talents.

Louis Durham.

Durham's name, while he was pitching ball for National, American and other league clubs, became well known to followers of the diamond, and his present connection with motion pictures will very likely serve to add interest among those who remember him in any production he appears.

Lewis Waller in Universal Picture

LEWIS WALLER, the famous English actor, makes his bow to Universal spectators on April 10 in the five-reel Red Feather feature, "Brigadier Gerard," Sir Conan Doyle's well known comedy-drama of the Napoleonic period which was first produced at the Imperial Theater, London, in March, 1906.



The Late Lewis Waller.

Some wonderful sets and backgrounds are introduced into the picture which tells the story of a braggart soldier adventurer in Napoleon's army, who, unlike most of his kind, is willing to back up his extravagant boasts with his sword. Napoleon engages the adventurer to recover some papers of state which he had left in the Tuilleries. Talleyrand also endeavors to recover the papers, but his emissaries are put to rout by the quick witted Brigadier. When Talleyrand himself attempts to take a hand, he is discomfited and outwitted by Napoleon's secret agent in some dramtic scenes which are all the more appealing because of the comedy element which enters into them.

In the film, which was produced abroad for the Universal, Mr. Waller makes his last appearance either in the flesh or on the screen. Upon Mr. Waller's death about a month ago a carved wood bust of the actor as Brigadier Gerard, presented to Mr. Waller by Sir A. Conan Doyle, was sold for £17 10s, to an agent of the Universal in London.

Raver Sells World Rights

Kino Publicity, Ltd., of London, Takes His Productions for Distribution—United States and Canada Excepted.

PERHAPS one of the most wide-scope purchases made by any English film company since the start of the present European war was consummated last week by J. W. Anderson of the Kino Publicity Ltd. of London with Harry R. Raver, president of the Raver Film Corporation.

The deal involved the world rights—with the exception of the United States and Canada—of the Raver production "The Other Girl" from the famous Augustus Thomas play, starring James J. Corbett and Paul Gilmore and the Ocean pictures "The Fortunate Youth," adapted from William J. Locke's well known book and featuring Wilmuth Merkyl; "Life Without Soul" taken from the book "Frankenstein" by Mrs. Mary W. Shelly; and "Driftwood," adapted from the stage success written by Owen Davis starring Vera Michelena.

Mr. Anderson recently visited the States with the purpose of buying the best on the American market and returned to England with the contract for his company on these four productions.

With the marketing conditions as they presently exist in the belligerent countries this is considered a rather large contract to enter into. However, Mr. Anderson is of the opinion that he has secured productions that will retain their value for years to come. Each one is founded on a big principle. They have famous names connected with them and prove themselves high class offerings made by craftsmen who are thoroughly familiar with the art of motion picture making. It is his belief that in the producing of these subjects they have struck themes that will have a wide wave of popularity. Each is dissimilar from the other and each has its separate peculiar appeal to the theater going people of the world.

The Kino Publicity Ltd. is recognized as one of the foremost powers in the motion picture industry in Europe. Its aim has always been toward the better class of productions and its achievements have accordingly been of the higher grade.

Mr. Anderson is a man of keen perception whose judgment in the past has proven a splendid asset to his company and it is his belief that he has returned to his country with a valuable acquisition for his organization in the pictures he has purchased from the Raver Film Corporation.

At the recent trade showing of several of these subjects they were received with considerable enthusiasm and commended by the trades people present as productions of a nature that should leave a wide wake of satisfaction behind them wherever shown. They already possess the popularity necessary for pictures in the well known names they have connected with them.

Each one was made by men well versed in the craft of motion picture building, men that have had wide experience in the direction of motion pictures for the past number of years. Each one has specialized in his particular line of picture making and knows thoroughly the things necessary to make a successful photoplay from both the market and public standpoint.

It is Mr. Anderson's intention to launch these pictures in the very best London theaters for their initial showing and it is his anticipation that they will be accorded the appreciation and attain the success that subjects of their merit deserve.

"BATTLE CRY OF PEACE" WELCOMED IN CANADA.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is aiding recruiting in Canada. It made a tremendous impression at Toronto. The chief recruiting officer of the Province of Ontario made a speech indorsing it after viewing it in a private exhibition. The 83d Battalion, C. E. F., attended the showing of the picture en masse at the Strand Theater.

T. L. Church, the mayor of Toronto, issued a letter to the citizens of that city indorsing the picture and urging them to see it. Mayor Church said:

"This picture, although its warning is primarily directed to the United States, cannot be viewed by any true Canadian without arousing in his breast an intense and burning indignation of the wrong suffered by hapless Belgium and at the same time an intense desire to serve the cause of his own King and country. The incidents depicted in this picture are a reproduction of what actually happened in Belgium. It is only preparedness and power behind preparedness that can avert such a thing from our own loved Country."

"Gloria's Romance"—May 22

George Kleine's Billie Burke Picture To Appear on That Date—Story by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes.

MAY 22nd has been selected as the release date for the first chapter of the new motion picture novel by Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, in which the international stage favorite, Billie Burke, is to play the stellar role. The title chosen for the new screen novel is "Gloria's Romance" and the story, as already announced, is to be a society drama in twenty feature chapters. Miss Burke will appear as Gloria Stafford, a wealthy society girl, and will wear gowns especially designed for her by Henri Bendel and Lucile.

The film production is already well under way at the Kleine studios in New York City, the company having returned from Palm Beach, where many of the exteriors were taken amid the wealth and gayety of that famous resort, as well as in the celebrated Everglades located in the same vicinity.

George Kleine, the man responsible for the film production, is sparing no money to make "Gloria's Romance" the most elaborate motion picture novel ever presented and the authors of the story, Mr. and Mrs. Rupert Hughes, have been given carte blanche in arranging the incidents of their story amid surroundings befitting such a tale.

Mr. Hughes, who is known and admired by readers of Cosmopolitan Magazine, the Saturday Evening Post, the Red Book and other periodicals in which his stories have appeared, has time and again in the past shown his skill in reading the public's pulse and appealing to its likes, so that this, his latest story, has been written around a "sure fire" theme. It is a society play that involves every day incidents in the life of a society girl. Its heroine, Gloria Stafford, is of a vivacious type, youthful and hoydenish at times, but always sweet and charming. And surely there is no star better fitted to portray such a part than Miss Burke.

The new film novel will not be a play that will depend for its success upon any other feature than its literary quality, for both Mr. Kleine, the producer, and the authors are determined that, from the start, the picture must present life as it is—that the situations must be logical. Surely hundreds of thousands of persons can be interested in a good play of modern society life and their attention can be gained and held by a sensible theme such as charactĕrizes the best productions of the speaking stage. With the stellar role in the hands of so bewitching a person as Billie Burke, with a supporting cast headed by Henry Kolker, and with a director of the caliber of Walter Edwin, exhibitors may be sure that an offering far out of the ordinary is being prepared for their patrons.

Kleine exchanges throughout the country have already been flooded with applications for early bookings on the latest screen novel, and now that both title and initial release date have been determined upon, it is sure that scores of other requests for an early showing of the film will be made.

Metro Begins Newspaper Campaign

Lee-Jones, Inc., of Chicago to Place Advertising in 500 Cities Regularly for 12 Months—$250,000 Involved.

THE nation wide advertising campaign in daily newspapers which was announced by the Metro Pictures Corporation after its annual meeting a few weeks ago will begin in the first week in April and contracts have been signed with the Lee-Jones agency of Chicago for the placing of the entire business.

It will begin simultaneously in 500 cities and will continue for a year. The appropriation approximates $250,000 for newspaper space alone.

The contracts signed by President Richard A. Rowland on behalf of Metro and by O. J. Gunnell, on behalf of the Lee-Jones provide that the agency will work under the direction of Metro's publicity department and in conjunction with the Metro exchanges throughout the United States.

The advertising will continue regularly and large amounts of space have been contracted for in a chain of newspapers reaching from coast to coast. Metro's advertising has been the subject of enthusiastic comment since last August, at which time a series of inserts in color were inaugurated in the important journals of the trade.

W. A. S. Douglas, director of production for Pathe, is now at the Balboa studios in Long Beach, California, supervising the production of an important release for the Pathe program.

Directors Figure in Coincidence

Maurice Tourneur in Producing "The Hand of Peril" and John Ince Making "The Struggle" Start Pictures in Same Day and Return Completed Prints in Same Hour.

MAURICE TOURNEUR, the noted producer of the Paragon Corporation, and John Ince, one of the Equitable stellar producing lights, were handed scenarios on the same day. That is, Tourneur was given the completed scenario of Arthur Stringer's "The Hand of Peril" and John Ince was given Harry Chandlee's fictional document, "The Struggle." This was on January 23. These two subjects were announced for release March 27, which allowed practically nine weeks for the completion of the stories.

"The Struggle" locale called for tropical atmospheric detail; "The Hand of Peril" is an underworld tale calling for the construction of many mechanical contrivances, such as are always described in Arthur Stringer's detective stories.

John Ince and his company, headed by Frank Sheridan, Arthur Ashley and Ethel Grey Terry, left for Miami, Florida, on January 26, and upon arrival there chartered the steamer "Miami," and set sail for Manaos, Brazil, an eight day sail across the Gulf of Mexico, through the Caribbean Sea and up the mighty Amazon River. At Manaos, Brazil, John Ince secured license from the Brazilian Federal Government, through Dr. Oswald Cruz, for the use of the leper colony,

Scene from "The Struggle."

"Lazarette," which lies just off of Manaos, a small island two miles out, in the center of the Amazon.

Maurice Tourneur's story called for the construction of a complete nine-room house with the surface removed so that the action could be shown in the nine rooms, simultaneously. It called for the construction of special mechanical devices, such as stereopticon X-rays, panel houses, secret passages, through which a camera might trail the action, and lastly the reconstruction complete of an abandoned pier in South Brooklyn. The Ince picture required four rooms, a saloon, a companionway, smoking and dining room of an ocean liner, which had to be constructed in the cabinet-making quarters of the Flushing studio, transported by water to Manaos and built in dry dock there.

A week was lost at Manaos securing permission from the red tape Federal Government of the Latin Republic, before consent was given to photograph the interior of the Leper hospital. Tourneur lost nearly a week sending representatives to Washington to secure permission to photograph several counterfeit plates which he had borrowed from his friend, W. J. Burns, and thus while Ince worked in tropical America, Tourneur labored incessantly in South Brooklyn. A typical West Indies typhoon kept Ince and his company indoors on the island of Sabor Rock, and the storm of February 21 necessitated Tourneur's company remaining idle three days.

Thus it will be seen that the two directors lost practically the same number of working days and on March 19 the completed negative of "The Struggle" was received at the World Film offices, and forty-five minutes later Mr. Lichtig of the Paragon brought the completed negative of "The Hand of Peril" to the Equitable offices. The difference of forty-five minutes was caused by the greater distance of the Paragon studios from the parent office. The two five-reel subjects were completed in seven weeks and five days actual working time and ten days of lost time credited to both directors through no fault of theirs.

The negatives were shipped from the studios at practically the same time and, strange to relate, each picture contains 307 individual scenes. "The Struggle" has one more title than "The Hand of Peril," while "The Hand of Peril" offsets this by having one more character introduced at the beginning.

Two Horsley Features Coming

Each Production Made on Big Scale and Played by Popular Casts.

AN ANALYTICAL survey of the David Horsley productions to be released during the month of April as Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, draws the conclusion that in these offerings something exceptional in merit may be expected. This conclusion is natural, of course, in view of the fact that more than the customary amount of money spent for five reel subjects is invested in them.

The feature releases of the month from the Horsley studios are "The Leopard's Bride" and "The Conscience of John David," scheduled for distribution, respectively, April 13 and April 24.

The former production is of an Indian story by Theodosia Harris in which the author has succeeded in combining all the mediums of successful playwriting. Studio advices proclaim it the best effort to date of this writer, who has a large number of scenario successes to her credit.

An elaborate production has been given the play, which is enacted by an especially fine cast. The leading roles fall to Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, two popular artists, while the other principal parts are interpreted by such well known players as Brooklyn Keller, Nan Christy, Frederick Montague, Fred Goodwins, Edward Gordon and Paul Machette.

"The Conscience of John David" marks the reappearance of Crane Wilbur in another play of his own creation. In subject it is psychological. The treatment given the theme takes the story away from beaten paths and makes it of uncommon interest.

By reason of the locale, which for the most part of the picture is laid in the fashionable circles, pretentious mountings form an agreeable atmosphere. Mr. Wilbur has the titular role and is ably supported in the enactment of the story by Mae Gaston, Alice Rinaldo, Frederick Montague, John Oaker, Louis Durham and Francis Raymond.

With these provisions "The Leopard's Bride" and "The Conscience of John David" will undoubtedly register as successes.

MABEL TALIAFERRO IN NEW METRO PICTURE.

Miss Mabel Taliaferro has just concluded work on "Her Great Price," which the Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., made for the Metro program. Her next starring vehicle will be "The Snowbird." It is the first time that Miss Taliaferro has appeared in a story dealing with the northland, although she has played in almost everything, ranging from comedy to the Yeats Irish plays in Ireland. She is enthusiastic over "The Snowbird," aside from the novelty of working in the production.

At Leading Picture Theatres

Programs for the Week of March 27 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Audrey" at the Strand.

PAULINE FREDERICK was the star of the Famous Players-Paramount Picture "Audrey," a screen version of the celebrated novel by Mary Johnson, adapted by Harriet Ford and E. F. Boddington, which was the main feature at the Strand theater last week. Robert Vignola directed "Audrey," in which Miss Frederick was supported by Charles Waldron, Margarete Christians, E. Fernandez, Helen Lindrith, Henry Hallam and Jack Clark.

An extremely interesting picture was a trip with Ray Knabenhue in his dirigible airship. These pictures were taken from the airship as it passed over beautiful California towns and country. Another unusual picture illustrated the manufacture of poisonous gases used by the Germans in the war. The Strand Topical Review contained newly arrived pictures from Mexico and the European battlefields. A new comedy and the Pictograph were also shown.

The following soloists appeared; Katherine Gray, soprano; Helen Scholder, cellist, accompanied by Harriet Scholder, and Bruce Weyman, baritone.

Hazel Dawn at the Broadway.

"The Saleslady," a Famous-Players Paramount picture, with Hazel Dawn in the title role, was the leading attraction at the Broadway Theater last week. A New York department store is used for one of the settings, and Miss Dawn's celebrated violin also plays an important part in the drama. The star appeared as Helen Shirley, a country girl who comes to New York, finds employment as a clerk in a department store, and finally becomes a footlight favorite.

A two-reel comedy, the Broadway Weekly, a colored scenic and a cartoon completed the program.

Triangle Program at the Knickerbocker.

Frank Keenan and Mary Boland in "The Stepping Stone" were the principal attraction on the Triangle program last week. The Kay-Bee picture is a romance of middle age and Mr. Keenan has one of those strong character parts for which he is famous. The supporting company includes Robert McKim, Joseph Dowling, J. B. Sherry and Margaret Thompson.

"By Stock Delivery," is the title of the Keystone comedy on the program. Mack Swain, May Emory, Vin Moore, Marie Kiernan, Joe Lee, Ivy Crosthwaite, Bobby Dunn and Polly Moran complete the cast.

A visual visit to Bruges, nature studies and pictorial news of the world, were also on the bill. The soloists were Marie Maurell and Alfred De Manby.

Kick From Old Newspaperman

Objects To Amateurish Manner In Which Extracts From Newspapers Are Shown in Pictures.

Rochester, N. Y., March 23, 1916.

To the Editor Moving Picture World:

Those of us who like the "Movies" are greatly indebted to the producing companies for their zeal and expenditure in presenting their photoplays with such fidelity to detail as characterizes many of these productions. Beautiful homes, exquisite interiors, gorgeous dresses and other accessories are necessary to the atmosphere of some of these plays, while the squalid home, the shipwreck, the railroad collision and other scenes are most carefully presented apparently down to the last item of detail. Expectancy is more than satisfied by the staging of the best of these photoplays, and nothing has seemed too big or too exacting to baffle the fertile efforts of the producers.

There is one detail, however, wherein the producers—one and all alike, so far as my observation has gone—are not as careful as they seem to be about other things and wherein there is still room for improvement—that is if they would have their productions as true to life as possible. I refer to the way in which items from newspapers are reproduced. I assume that the producers are not and never have been journalists, for if they had had the slightest experience in regular routine newspaper work they would pay more attention to this detail than they do. I have seen many photo-dramas where these items from newspapers have been thrown on the screen, and all of them, to my best recollection have been crude, amateurish as to the English used, and so far from what any well-regulated newspaper would be expected to print, that it is a wonder someone has not called attention to it before now.

Now, every newspaper has a style of its own in the presenting of news. To see a page or part of a page from a paper like the New York Herald used and then to throw on the screen the assumed extract from this paper written in anything but journalistic terms, is amauterish, incongruous and sometimes laughable. If the Herald is used why not throw on the screen a news item written as it would be written in the Herald, with the same type for headlines and body matter as if it were an actual reproduction of something that had appeared in that paper? Most of the news items used, so far as I have been able to see, would be a disgrace to that most slip-shod country weekly in the country known to inner circles as the Podunk News. And how easy it would be to have this detail looked after by someone who knows how to do it right.

This may be a knock, but it is intended as a boost. Producers should be glad of any criticism or suggestion of this kind that will help along the illusion. A Queen Anne front never yet went with a Mary Ann back, and "Movie" newspaper extracts will fail to be convincing to me until they look and read like the real thing.

Edward Jose, Producer of "The Iron Claw"

EDWARD JOSE, who is producing Pathe's serial, "The Iron Claw," has had about as varied and extensive stage experience as any person in the business. As a motion picture actor Mr. Jose became very well known through his work in such pictures as Pathe's "The Stain," "The Corsair," "The Leech of Industry," and "The Taint," and through his work as co-star with Betty Nansen in the Fox pictures, 'The Celebrated Scandal" and "Anna Karenina." Mr. Jose then became a director for the Fox Company and made "The Resurrection." He also starred in "A Fool There Was," and showed his ability as a scenario writer by writing the script of "The Resurrection" from Tolstoi's work, and also the adaptation of "The Children of the Ghetto."

Edward Jose.

Returning to the Pathe Company as a producer he made the Gold Rooster features "The Beloved Vagabond," "Simon the Jester," "The Closing Net," and "Nedra." He then formed the Feature Film Corporation of which he is director in chief. The value of his name is recognized by the board of directors of that corporation to the extent that steps are now being taken to change the name of the company to the Edward Jose Feature Film Corporation.

Mr. Jose has taken out citizenship papers and will live in the United States for the rest of his life. At present he is making New York his home. With a large fund of interesting reminiscences at his command gathered in all parts of the world he is one of the most interesting of men to talk to, and as actor and producer his achievements justly entitle him to consideration as one of the ablest in the business.

Margaret Landis

MARGARET LANDIS, whose screen career covers but a little over a year, is making rapid strides to the front, and will be featured in the coming Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Spell of the Knife," released on the General Film Program, April 21. Miss Landis will be seen in a heavier part than usual, and comes well up to the demands of the drama. Miss Landis is a Tennessee girl, and unlike many of the screen stars, has never been on the stage. The entrance of Miss Landis to the studio was due to a singular turn of fate. Being much interested in dancing but not expecting to make it her profession, her work came under the observation of Mr. H. M. Horkheimer, who, needing a fancy dancer for certain scenes in a feature production then on hand, secured Miss Landis. Her work was a gratifying surprise to all concerned, she was immediately retained, and thus began a meteroic career which has resulted in making her a screen star and a real favorite. Miss Landis will be remembered as being featured in the Knickerbocker Star Features, "Mismates" and "The Home-Breakers."

Timely Bluebird Photoplays

"The Great Problem," Starring Violet Mersereau, Deals With Prison Reform—"The Yaqui," a Mexican Story.

BLUEBIRD Photoplays register another bulls-eye in timeliness of their subjects with the introduction of Violet Mersereau in "The Great Problem," released April 17. The question of prison reform, that is agitating public interest these days, is treated from a new angle in "The Great Problem." While Tom Brown of Auburn Penitentiary believes that a healthy environment after crime has been committed is the proper way to start the unfortunate on a new course of life, "The Great Problem" is based on the theory that it is environment previous to and during criminal development that causes nearly all crime.

General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird, seems to have awaited the most opportune time for releasing this subject. The trial of Warden-on-Vacation Osborne will fill the newspapers with an abundance of material on the subject of penology just about the time "The Great Problem" will get into circulation, giving exhibitors a considerable advantage in capitalizing public interest.

The release of "The Yaqui" just when the Mexican situation came to precipitate culmination in the campaign against Francisco Villa was another piece of good fortune both for Bluebird and for exhibitors. As "The Yaqui" was photographed on Mexican soil, within a couple of hundred miles of the raided town of Columbus, New Mexico, there is authenticity in its topography and in the battle scenes which employed real Mexican soldiers in the photoplay.

"The Great Problem" was written by Rex Ingram with Violet Mersereau in mind for the leading role. Mr. Ingram also directed the production and it contains some of the most realistic and faithful reproduction of slums ever pictured for the screen. Miss Mersereau makes her first appearance as a Bluebird star under most favorable auspices, for there is opportunity in "The Great Problem" for abundant display of her talents both as a comedienne and an emotional actress in the widely varying scenes as the story unfolds.

PEARL WHITE SENDS CHECK TO ACTORS' FUND.

Pearl White, one of the best known stars of the film world, has been added to the roll of honor of the individual contributors toward the half million dollars to be raised through the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund before May 15 as a permanent endowment for the Actors Home on Staten Island. Her check was for $100.

Edgar Lewis

EDGAR LEWIS, one of America's best known photoplay directors, who joined the Lubin Company of Philadelphia a few months ago to produce special features for the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay program, has had a remarkable career and greatly deserves the success he has achieved as he has overcome many difficulties which would have staggered a less persevering man. Shanghaied to England when but a small boy, he worked at every conceivable job from doing chores with a circus to waiting on tables, and in fact did anything and everything always with one end in view, and that being to become connected with some kind hearted theatrical man who would give him a chance on the stage. His ambitions were finally realized and he rose until he became recognized as one of the most clever stage directors in the profession.

Edgar Lewis.

Starting his picture career with the Solax Company, Mr. Lewis made his first picture and he admits it was bad, very bad. But Madame Blache, head of the company, gave him encouragement by remarking that "he showed occasional illuminating moments," so he persevered and since then his rise has been nothing short of phenomenal. He was with the Reliance Company for about one year and a half and left only when Mr. Griffith went to the coast. Since that time Mr. Lewis has made nothing but multiple reel features and within the past twelve months has made in quick succession "The Littlest Rebel," "Northern Lights," "Captain Swift," "The Thief," "Samson," "A Gilded Fool," "The Plunderer," "The Nigger or New Governor," "The Bondman," "The Great Divide," and "Souls in Bondage." Each of these plays has been pronounced artistic and financial successes. Many were made for the Fox Film Corporation and starring William Farnum. At the present time Mr. Lewis is under the Lubin banner with a long time contract and what the future will bring forth can only be judged by noting his past efforts.

CHARLES A. TAYLOR WITH METRO.

Charles A. Taylor, a gifted and prolific playwright, who has written more than fifty successful plays, including "Yosemite" and "Held for Ransom," has joined the Metro scenario staff, and will devote his talents exclusively writing for that company. Besides his numerous personal successes on the speaking stage, Mr. Taylor is responsible for the success of a host of other plays. With his fertile imagination and remarkable ingenuity he has been able to suggest and direct startling big scenes for other dramatists, making sensational hits out of plays that otherwise would have been failures. Many prominent playwrights admit that their early success was due to Mr. Taylor.

Among the first works of Mr. Taylor on the screen for the Metro Company are "A Corner in Cotton," in which Marguerite Snow is starred, and "What Will People Say?" with Mme. Petrova in the stellar role. He has also served in an advisory capacity in the making of other Metro plays.

CLARA WHIPPLE A STAR.

Clara Whipple, who made her debut with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation in "A Daughter of the Sea" and who was later seen in Roy L. McCardell's "The Question," has been elevated from a featured player to stardom. If ever hard work and an absolute faithfulness to the "job in hand" earned reward, the efforts of pretty Clara Whipple with the Equitable Company has done that very thing, for on April 3 she will be seen as co-star with John Mason.

Selznick Branches Out

Organizes Distributing Company to Handle Clara Kimball Young Features—Will Abandon Present Contract System.

THE organization this week of the Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Incorporated, dispels any lingering doubt as to the manner in which the features to be produced by the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation are to be distributed. The announcement is of even greater interest to the motion picture industry in that it embodies the first intimation of the ambitious plans formulated by Mr. Selznick to build a great system of exchanges and enlarge his field of activities.

Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc., is the result of its founder's recent trip to Cleveland, Ohio. It is the beginning of a chain of exchanges that will embrace every big city in the country and through which all pictures produced by Miss Young after July 15th will be handled. By the time the first of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation pictures is ready for release in October, the Selznick exchanges will be in active operation and will have exclusive control of these universally demanded features.

In addition to the pictures of Miss Young, the Selznick Productions will include the annual output of a number of the most successful film stars. Each of these will be distributed as a separate proposition. The exhibitor will be able to book the C. K. Y. features by themselves or the pictures of any of the other stars they may choose.

This is a direct departure from the customary contract system of booking and in explaining it Mr. Selznick had this to say.

"I have been accused of being the founder of the present contract system. I don't claim this honor, but I plead guilty to having developed the system to its present form. And now I frankly admit that I see where the contract system is all wrong, that it works against the interest of the exhibitor, and I am determined to adopt revolutionary methods of reform in conducting the Selznick's Productions.

"As the contract system works today, the exhibitor must buy gold, silver, brass and tin at the same price. The producer lumps all these metals together and to get the gold the exhibitor must buy the tin as well. In other words, under the present system the exhibitor in order to get features like the Clara Kimball Young pictures must also book a lot of pictorial junk that does not draw a dollar to his box office. That this is unfair to the exhibitor anyone can see at a glance.

"My new system will be this. The Selznick exchanges will handle the Clara Kimball Young pictures as a group. They will be sold at a price commensurate with their box office value. The Selznick exchanges will also control the annual series of pictures of other stars. Each of these can be obtained by the exhibitor as a separate and distinct proposition and at various prices, arranged according to the actual value of the pictures.

"I realize that in taking this step I am going directly contrary to the system I developed during the past two years, but I also realize that I was on the wrong track before. The new plan, revolutionary as it may be, will work to the advantage of the exhibitor and I know that unless I can make an exhibitor a success I shall be a failure."

SAN ANTONIO CONTRIBUTES TO ACTORS' FUND.

With the entire force represented in the contribution, the studio of the Vitagraph Players at San Antonio, Texas, has sent a check for $109 to Samuel Goldfish, chairman of the executive committee in New York for the Motion Picture Campaign for the Actors' Fund.

The contributors include: Theodore Marston, Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Ben. N. Hirsh, Edwin Lee, Arthur Rankin Davenport, W. A. Ross, Charles Wellesly, Fred H. James, Edward M. Kane, Dorothy Kelly, Ned Finley, Arline Pretty, A. Lloyd Loeb, L. F. Lonsdale, Walter McComb, Jr., E. R. Jersey, H. D. Thomason, William Dunn, Wm, Johnson, R. J. Partschmum.

PATON'S WOODEN WEDDING.

The Universal ball, in its bringing out of Big U Eastern stars, had little on the recently celebrated wooden wedding anniversary of Stuart Paton, director of Florence Lawrence. Between scenes in the production of "Elusive Isabel," the first of the Lawrence "return" features, Mr. Paton managed to arrange for a celebration befitting the dignity of an old married couple of five years' standing. Every Eastern Universal star not working out of town was on hand at the Paton residence on Morningside Drive, New York, on the red-letter night.

Raymond B. West

RAYMOND B. WEST, Thomas Ince's star director, right-hand man and photographic wizard, is credited out in Santa Monica canyon with the major part of the production of "He Who Returned," the big twelve-reel N. Y. M. P. feature which is expected to create a greater sensation upon its release in the near future than did "The Birth of a Nation."

Although only just turned thirty years old, West is Ince's most valued director. He writes many of his own scenarios, designs his own sets, figures out his own effects, directs with his agile feet while he turns the crank of the old moving picture camera with which he has filmed a million feet of picture plays and then turns in, in a pinch, develops his film, dries and prints it, cuts it to suit himself and writes in his own titles. West is known out on the coast as a "jack of all trades" in so far as moving pictures are concerned.

Raymond B. West.

West started with the New York Motion Picture Corporation in 1907 as a prop man. He had not been long on the job when he was transferred to the scenic department. When it was learned that he was a crack still photographer West was put to work behind a view camera. He then began to tinker with a movie camera, obtained promotion to the job of assistant movie cameraman and not long afterward became a full fledged cameraman. Soon afterward he was made assistant director and then director with his own company. About this time Tom Ince began to sit up and take notice of West, for the youngest director in his employ was a young man of ideas and initiative.

"He Who Returned" is West's masterpiece, but his fame as a producer does not depend solely upon the big feature. West directed George Beban in "The Sign of the Rose," "Rumplestiltskin," the specacular romance, Bessie Barriscale in "The Cup of Life," and "The Mating," all the spectacular effects in "The Wrath of the Gods," in addition to the following N. Y. M. P. feature productions: "The Child of War," "From the Shadows," "The Sea Dog," "A Barrier Royal," "The Circle of Fate," "The Right to D[illegible]," "Banzai," "In the Cow Country," "The Heart of a Crook," "The Defaulter," "A True Believer," "The Golden Goose," "The Rightful Heir," "The Squire's Son," "The Wearing of the Green," "Widow Maloney's Faith," "The Flotsam," "The Banshee," "The Ghost," "Mario," "A Highland Romance," "The Heart of Kathleen,' "The City," "Mother Hulda," "The Filly," "The Girl That Might Have Been,' "The Mystery of the Wooden Leg," "A Romance of the Sawdust Ring," and numerous one-reelers too numerous to mention.

"He Who Returns," his latest picture, took six months to make. The massive multiple reeler required 121,000 feet of raw stock which was exposed and cut to 12,000 feet in its final form. One set cost $35,000 and required thirty carloads of lumber and $4,000 worth of glass besides tons and tons of cement in its construction. The picture is designed to demonstrate the utter futility of war and its spectacular effects are said to excel "Cabiria," and "The Birth of a Nation."

NIGH TO STAR WITH MARGUERITE SNOW.

William Nigh, Metro's versatile director, announces that his next production will be a five part feature called "Cassidy." Mr. Nigh will not only direct this production, but will be starred in it, besides being the author of the story. Marguerite Snow, the charming and gifted artist, will be co-starred with Mr. Nigh in "Cassidy."

H. H McCollum

WITH the exception of Harry Watson himself, probably no figure in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" has attracted more attention than H. H. McCollum. In the Kleine studios he is generally regarded as one of the best all-around character men in the business. Successful character men are usually first-class make-up artists, and this is not the least of McCollum's endowments. To his credit in "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" he already has fifteen different roles ranging from a silk-hatted "Ham" actor to the Wild Man in an amusement arcade. His versatility and inventive genius have been largely used by Producer Myll in providing ideas for the various episodes of the series.

H. H. McCollum.

McCollum is remembered for two splendid years with Charles Frohman in two of the most prosperous Frohman productions of the past decade, "Fires of Fate" and "The Speckled Band," in both of which McCollum acquitted himself with high honors. Then followed two years more under the David Belasco management in "The Drums of Oude." This was followed by another lengthy period with "The Man Inside." McCollum, shortly before his engagement by George Kleine, had spent a year with Henry B. Harris in the New York production of "The Arab."

Captain Robert McGraw

WITH an empty sleeve, a tribute to the marksmanship of a sniper in France, Captain Robert McGraw, of the King's Own, arrived in New York a few weeks ago. Captain McGraw was turned down when he applied to be again assigned to service in the army. "They want only whole ones over there now," is his terse way of putting it. The captain, finding business opportunities much restricted in England, came to the United States in the hope of making an alliance with a motion picture concern, believing his knowledge of stage and picture work as well as his military training, and especially the latter, should prove a combination that will give value to his services.

Captain Robert McGraw.

The captain served through the South African war, being wounded and invalided home. It was an expanding bullet that knocked him down. After the operation and while on his way to England it was discovered another operation was necessary. The exploring surgeon informed him, after he had extracted the casing of the bullet which had escaped the probe of the original surgeon, that while a part of his appendix had been removed by the entering bullet he had taken the opportunity of removing the remainder.

At the outbreak of hostilities in 1914 the captain rejoined his regiment and on November 30 crossed the Channel. After a wait of seven days in Havre the regiment was sent to the front. On December 12, after having been in the Armentieres trenches scarcely twenty-four hours, the captain started for the firing line without taking the precaution of passing through the communicating trenches. Out in the open he was an easy mark for a sniper behind a hayrick. It was another expanding bullet this time, too, and it caught him just above the left elbow. Gangrene, in the germs of which the soil of Northern France is so prolific, developed. The captain was a year in the hospital and seven times was operated on.

Captain McGraw was for four years on the legitimate stage and also had had experience in picture work. He has a striking personality and physique—and is a good man to "meet up with."

Mabel Normand in Wider Field

AS frequently rumored within the last few months, Mabel Normand, the "Keystone Girl," is to have a wider field of motion picture activity. This is the announcement from the offices of the Triangle Film Corporation, with which she has recently signed a new contract. She is to be a star in comedy drama. A director all her own will select plays for her, and it is said that the first will follow the lines of "Peggy," in which Billie Burke made her film debut under the direction of Thomas H. Ince.

Mabel Normand.

Whether Miss Normand will make her first picture in this brand new field in the East or on the Coast has not yet been determined. She is now in New York resting after strenuous Keystone activities.

Outside of Miss Normand's personal ambition to make the change to the larger sphere three reasons are given by the Triangle in its announcement of the new move. It is held that her dramatic ability has burst the bounds of Keystone comedy; that she is too good a comedienne to be allowed to get away from that field entirely; and that she undoubtedly has a large personal following of film lovers who will be eager to see her in productions that afford more scope for her talents.

It is true of Miss Normand that, despite her funmaking penchant and her willingness to risk her life if necessary to get the desired effects, there has always been a distinct appeal to her work apart from the laugh or the thrill. There has always been drama in her comedy, and it seems not unreasonable to assume that there will always be comedy in her drama. After four years at Keystone she is looking forward with unbounded enthusiasm to her new work.

AUSTRALASIAN FILMS, LTD., IN NEW OFFICES.

Millard Johnson, manager of the New York office of the Australasian Films, Ltd., announces the removal of his office from 15 West 26th street, to 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. Johnson is the American purchasing agent for the Australian Company, and is considered one of the best judges of motion pictures in America.

AGNES EGAN COBB BACK FROM WESTERN TRIP.

With a record of six big cities in ten days Agnes Egan Cobb, representative of the Claridge Film Corporation, has returned from a whirlwind trip to the principal western cities in the interest of Claridge pictures. Miss Cobb reports business good and that she had "a perfectly lovely time."

BURTON KING STARTS NEW METRO PICTURE.

Burton King, who has just finished the five-part Metro picture "Souls Aflame," started on Monday, March 27, on another five-part feature with Edmund Breese in the leading role. Harry Revier has joined the Popular Plays and Players Company and is working on a five-part production.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard.

A FILM worth while is "Kennedy Square." It is clean, superbly acted throughout, thoughtfully staged; picturing the sunny South in every detail. I have not seen a better adaption this season, or better team work. Then, too, it starts right in mentioning the late author, F. Hopkinson Smith, and his work as constructor, notably the foundation for the Liberty Statue at the entrance to New York Harbor, and which made an effective slide. Among other "stills" shown was the old home of Edgar Allen Poe. But the play itself struck a high note, and was enjoyed by the most representative audience seen at a film theater in the Hub. The new Fenway is a winner, the program delightfully varied, with short stories, unusually good music (orchestral and organ), and an atmosphere of refinement most conspicuous. To go back to this play of plays: Has there been a finer interpretation of a lovable old Southern gentleman than Charles Kent is giving? He seems made for the part, and Antonio Moreno fills the eye as a manly chap, with a compelling personality. Little Muriel Ostriche was dainty as Kate. Near me sat Mrs. Arthur Godfrey, better known to theatergoers as Gertrude Hitz, who, until her marriage last year, was the youngest leading woman on the American stage when supporting William Hodge. She is an ardent fan, and makes up jolly parties for the Fenway theater, so accessible to Back Bay people. Mrs. Godfrey is doing good missionary work for the silent drama.

Photoplaygoers are indebted to Stanley Sumner for giving reissues, especially those directed by David Griffith. The other day we saw for the first time "The Lady and the Mouse." It was wholesome, and, like good plays, the ever-changing public likes "repeats" of this sort; furthermore, all of us were not attending the picture houses to any extent when these were first presented, so they are new in a way. That day we saw "Vultures of Society," and it is some film, directed by that finished actor, E. H. Calvert, who has quite a part in it. Lillian Drew we liked, and the portrayal of conditions all around us was not overdone. Ernest Maupin, despite his queer whiskers, did good work. The settings were unusually rich, and great attention was paid to detail. While the play disclosed various forms of immorality and crime, there was not a scene that jarred, so well was the varnish laid. It is most pretentious and ought to draw. There was a delicious short subject on the program, "Virtue Triumphant," a Selig gem, with Fritzie Brunette and also Jack Pickford in his best part seen here, for the young man is quite a hero and has much to do.

The Exeter on Sundays calls out a large class of patrons, including the middle-aged and elderly, because Mrs. Ayer is sure to give them what they like best—clean, amusing, educational, and always with a good five-reeler like "The Little Mademoiselle," a World film, with dainty Vivian Martin and that clever actor, Arthur Ashley. In the play he had offended his father by not sticking to Greek verbs and the like at college, preferring mechanics. As the story goes on, we find one benefit resulting from college studies, for when the little heroine is lost and finds refuge in a village she is further helpless, not knowing English. Enter the college man who came to her rescue when she says "Parle vous Francaise?" Their many adventures before both are restored to civilization and respective families are many and worth recalling. On the same program was "The Man in the Sombrero," evidently an old release, but well worth repeating. Harold Lockwood and May Allison are some pair, and the play was novel, picturing Lockwood in parts he best enjoys. We look to see him in still better plays. I do not like reptiles, but did manage to gaze upon some films showing lizards which were colored and not so repulsive. Following this came "A Clever Collie's Comeback," put on by the Falstaff Company, and quite remarkable, showing the possibilities in training intelligent animals like those shown in this picture. There was applause in plenty.

No wonder "Poor Little Peppina" is playing to overflow houses everywhere, for it is an unusual piece of work and gives Mary Pickford opportunities for showing her versatility. The Italian atmosphere is compelling and there are so many delightful side bits to enjoy. Our old friend, Edwin Mordant, again makes good, and I like to see Jack Pickford playing with his sister. When he took the scissors to clip her curls, a murmur of disapproval was heard, one young girl with hair dressed a la Mary saying, "Ain't that fierce, for it will take an awful long time to grow them curls. Guess I know—I was two years raising mine." I explained that she saw only one cut off, and more than likely that was false or one which could be spared for the sake of the play. Kate Jordan, the author, and Sidney Olcutt, the director, deserve more than passing praise for their joint work. Mary Pickford eating spaghetti, Italian fashion, was a sight, but it was not necessary for the man behind the screen to introduce gurgling sounds or any other during a performance of the silent drama. It is cheap claptrap and should be roundly condemned by the Paramount and public generally.

Miss Anita Stewart is the latest Vitagraph star to join the Film Club here, and is a very welcome addition. The Hub is looking forward to a reissue of "The Christian," with Earle Williams as the star, and the club will turn out in large numbers, he being a member. At the last meeting, a bureau was established for scenario writers of plays for children, there being a demand for suitable stories for special matinees. Another matter for action was an appeal to theater managers to make an effort to control sundry nuisances like audible conversation, reading of titles, beating time to the music, humming the airs, etc. Accompanying the plea was a suggestion as to the wording of a slide to cover these nuisances, putting the request on the shoulders of patrons. As seats are not numbered as at the speaking play, why not move along as in church? I am continually annoyed by six or more persons rising in front to let someone pass, thereby cutting off the view of the screen when it would be more courteous and less troublesome to move along a peg.

The Hub had a visitor the other day in Marguerite Snow, who made a personal appearance at two theaters running the Metro's "A Corner in Cotton." In addition to making a hit with the house, she met new friends and received social attention. Miss Snow is a member of the Film Club.

"Springtime" is the fool name given a long subject for Sundays. It has no bearing on the play itself, and the outdoor scenes were more like midsummer than spring. Florence Nash, the Aggie of "The Unwritten Law," was the star, but she failed to register and her forced smile indicated screen fright. Then, too, she has a bad habit of toeing in, which is fatal these days of short skirts. The spectacle of a young girl, supposedly moral, chasing a man whom she had known less than an hour, down a long road through woods, and on to the sea provoked only laughter with the audience, which finally became hysterical and would not take any situation seriously (which was the purpose of the dramatist). There were needless repetitions of letters shown, and the introduction of a lot of volunteers of a nondescript sort detracted greatly and made a burlesque of what might have been good work. I felt sorry for W. J. Tooker, that experienced actor who was superb in "The Fool's Revenge," and was glad he could not hear the derision caused by the play in spots. It was well staged and acted, but far-fetched and too long by three reels. We were regaled at the close with a slide stating that it had been passed by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors. Well, we wish they would confine such films to their own boundaries. Life Photo Films was responsible for this infliction.

Well, after all I have said to friends, fans, women's clubs and elsewhere about Marguerite Clark's films being absolutely clean and safe to take young folks to see, they have given her a play with the sex problem introduced and which does not fit at all, though young Courtleigh did the best he could with it, and his regeneration went well, leading to the happy ending. "Out of the Drifts" is splendidly staged, and the "snow stuff" is great, looking for all the world like Canadian wilds. There are some scenes which might as well be left out, but, happily, Miss Clark does not figure in them.

"New York" was excellent and ought to please all of us who love "dear old Broadway." Pathe has given us a stunning series of views, and Florence Reed has done nothing better in her film career. There were several thrillers, like the fall of a woman (intoxicated) down a long flight of stairs, resulting in her death; a murder, and other melodramatic scenes. The story, however, was good, the characterizing brilliant, especially the work of John Miltern as Oliver King. Ouida Bergere deserves all praise for the scenario, which discloses an intimate knowledge of high life in various phases in New York. That evening we saw "Gold Dust," an Essanay with John Cossar and Nell Craig. It had much in little as a short subject, and was a mighty interesting story.

Also on the program was a Kalem offering, "When Hubby Forgot," featuring Ethel Teare, somewhat of a newcomer here, in a little comedy, a satire on the forgetfulness of some "hubbies," and this was well done. We had the Drews in "Diplomatic Henry," and it was a big laugh, wholesome and a genuine comedy. To show the character of the program on one day we had Lubin's "The Dragoman," a splendid short story, with Arabian atmosphere, shifting to America. Then for other Vitagraph treats we had an episode of "The Strange Case of Mary Page" and Frank Daniels in "Mr. Jack Wins a Double-Cross," a neat little comedy, in which Kate Price is featured as a cook.

"God's Great Picture Book" is what a Cambridge clergyman calls the photoplays, which he advocates, even from his pulpit. I will tell you more about him next time after an interview. Isn't that a fine thing to call the films?

"Barbara Frietchie" ought to be a good seller everywhere, not only for the story worked out from the poem with which every child is or ought to be familiar, but for the acting and staging. So much has been said and so well that it remains for me to add, "Them's my sentiments, tew." Mary Miles Minter stands unique. Lucky Metro.

Fannie Ward has a winner in "For the Defense," put on at the Park by the Laskys. Strikes me this is her best work, though as a play it cannot compare with "The Cheat," one of her first efforts, and by the same author. The plot unfolds well and it shows Miss Ward's versatility rather better than ever. "Jack" Dean, Miss Ward's new husband, is the hero.

* * *

"To Have and to Hold" has atmosphere enough to carry it along with its settings of long ago and picturesque costuming. Again we see an ingenue in a leading part, who does not fill the bill at all. Mae Murray is dainty enough for "goody-goody" parts, but lacks experience sufficient to bring out the strong character of Lady Jocelyn Leigh as told of in the Mary Johnstone novel. Wallace Reid had the best part in the play, and stood out prominently, but why select an undersized young girl to play opposite? The Lasky Company is surely not "shy" on women who look the part, for I have seen many such in its pictures. Poor Wallace must find it tame after playing with "Jerry" Farrar in "Carmen" and Cleo Ridgeley in "The Golden Chance," etc.

"The Lure of Heart's Desire" is most pretentious in the settings—that is, there is a variety which called for strenuous work on the part of all concerned. Edmund Breese, whose name and face are known to all playgoers, certainly had stunts, but there was needless repetition, and it needs pruning. Adirondack scenery was used, but the dog sleds suggested Alaska sure, and did not the dogs register? The contrasting scenes, including a cabaret and gambling hell, were splendidly staged, but Evelyn Brent did the best work of all as the Indian girl.

VIOLA DANA JOINS METRO.

Viola Dana, one of the most winsome and accomplished young actresses in motion pictures, has signed a long time contract with the Metro Pictures Corporation, to be starred exclusively in Metro wonderplays. She has already begun work on her first production, which is as yet unnamed. Miss Dana has taken the studio floor space where Ethel Barrymore just completed "The Kiss of Hate," an early release on the Metro program. Miss Barrymore will be given other quarters for her next picture when she returns from a brief touring engagement on the road.

Until recently Miss Dana was the principal star of the Edison Film Company. Before she went into motion pictures she won an enviable place upon the speaking stage, her most notable starring role being in "The Poor Little Rich Girl," produced by David Belasco. This play had a successful run on Broadway and was presented in every city of any prominence in the United States and Canada.

After receiving an attractive offer from the Edison Company, Miss Dana decided to make one feature production as a personal experiment. This was "Molly, the Drummer Boy." It proved such a tremendous success wherever shown that she was induced to sign a contract for other features. Miss Dana was then starred in many notable features, among them "The Blind Fiddler," "The Slavey Student," "The Stone Heart," "The Stoning" and the role of Thelma in "The Portrait in the Attic," and "The Innocence of Ruth."

BRITISH NOTES

THE provision of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to include in the impending financial budget an additional impost upon the moving picture industry is a foregone conclusion. Definite statements now made show that the new tax will be solely a theater tax and will only affect the retailing section of the industry, the exhibitors. Henceforth, in common with theaters and music halls, a tax of one penny per head will be collected for every patron who pays for a seat at a moving picture show to the value of one shilling or under. Upon admissions above one shilling in value an impost of twopence will be charged. Although these amounts have been announced as the basis of the tax, it is not unlikely, as in the case of the film tax, that they may be revised. The majority of picture theaters in England possess no shilling seats and there is a strong opinion in the trade that ninepence will ultimately be fixed as the limit for the penny impost. The method of collecting the tax has not yet been announced; the many diverse courses open to the Government for its administration makes conjecture difficult. The existing amusement tax in France demands from the showman a charge of ten per cent. upon each paid admission. This impost is added by the showman to the usual price for tickets, so that the patron bears the burden, although the proprietor is responsible for its collection. There is considerable talk here of the tax being collected by means of adhesive stamps which the exhibitor would have to purchase in quantities from the post office and surcharge by this means each ticket issued to the necessary amount. A better scheme has been submitted by a Scottish manager which places no responsibilities upon the patron. This is for the installation in every theater of an automatic ticket-issuing machine which numbers and records every ticket issued. This would furnish the Government officials with an accurate monthly or quarterly return of takings as required and the tax could be paid by the exhibitor in very much the same manner that income tax is paid: by the production of the periodical returns, duly certified, at the office of the collector. It is too early to speak of any ultimate effect of the tax, probable or possible. One thing certain is that the Government cannot collect the exhibitors' money twice and much that is gained by the admission tax will find a set-off the first quarter day income tax assessments are due.

BAGGOT COMPANY GOES SOUTH.

Henry Otto, director, King Baggot and a huge Universal company have left for Savannah, Ga., to take exterior scenes in "Half a Rogue," the Harold MacGrath story. Besides Baggot and Otto, of Universal note in the company are Clara Beyers, Ben Molter, Howard Crampton and Edna Hunter. Clara Beyers will play Katherine Galboner; Miss Hunter, Patty Bennington; and Mr. Baggot, Richard Warrington. Director Otto wrote the photoplay adaptation himself.

FRANK BORZAGE A DIRECTOR.

Frank Borzage will replace Thomas Chatterton as director of Mustang two-reel dramas produced by the American Film Company, Inc., at Santa Barbara.

Mr. Borzage's success in a large variety of roles has established his ability as an actor and director. He will play leads in his "Mustang" films opposite Vivian Rich, supported by Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat.

"The Woman's Law"

Gold Rooster Play of Excellent Quality Again Features Florence Reed—Produced by Arrow Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

MARAVENE THOMPSON'S novel has filmed well. The story is an unusual one, of which a very careful and artistic adaptation was made by Harvey Thew of the Motion Picture News, and Albert S. Le Vino. It has been delicately handled with its human side uppermost, its best situations have been played upon discreetly, and above all the psychology of the play has been well developed. In making the production the director, Lawrence B. McGill, has paid special attention to the setting of the picture, which is not only elaborate but tasteful and pleasing.

The star of the production, Florence Reed, does what is expected of her. The role of Gail Orcutt, wife of the man who murders his friend in a quarrel over another woman, in her hands becomes a character of forceful outline, and Duncan McRae, playing a double role opposite her, does exceptional work. It is unusual that a more correct example of double exposure work, technically speaking, appears on the screen than in this production.

The story treats of how a wife whose husband has already lost her love through careless and we may say reckless living succeeds in shielding him from the law when after the murder of his friend he rushes home to hide behind the woman's skirts. Having aided in hiding, she goes to consult her friend, the district attorney, and on her way back, after discovering that the district attorney, although her friend, must do his duty, she comes across a man in the park who is the exact double of her husband. She takes the man, who, by-the-way, is mentally deranged home with her, passes him off as her husband to the authorities, who pronounce him insane and commit him to an asylum for the insane. Complications of course arise when the man recovers his mental equilibrium, but with all memory of the past blotted out. Gail, finding herself obliged to bring him home, gradually learns to love the man who firmly believes himself to be her husband. At the same time Orcutt, who has been in hiding nearby, hounds her for money and is shot one night in an attempt to depart from the house unseen, leaving the situation free and clear for a happy ending of the story.

A clever little boy actor figures in the production as the child of the Orcutts, and for the sake of whose future Gail Orcutt decides to rescue his father from being branded as a murderer.

"Hubby Puts One Over" is the title of a one-reel Joker comedy which Allen Curtis is staging at the Universal City studios. The story was written by Allen Curtis and will be produced with the regular Joker cast of Gale Henry, William Franey, Milburn Moranti and Lillian Peacock.

IN "Paths That Crossed" Director J. Farrell Macdonald has made an acceptable picture, in which the plot is carefully developed to realize the best possibilities of a story introducing characters that have long been popular with writers of photoplays. The faithful wife, devoted to her daughter, is contrasted with the philandering husband, who becomes infatuated with an actress, deserts his family and soon tires of the extravagant woman, who for a time appeared so charming. This much of the story, filling about one reel, affords little opportunity for originality, but with the lapse of some fifteen years and the introduction of the second generation—the daughter of the pair who have separated and the son of an intimate friend—the plot becomes a bit more intricate.

Director Macdonald's choice of locations is to be commended, as is his handling of scenes on the stage of a theater and in a cabaret restaurant where two of the characters are brought together in an unconventional meeting. An involved situation is satisfactorily righted in the concluding reel, perhaps the most interesting of the three in point of rapid action and dramatic conflict. Charles Mailes as the husband, Adelaide Wood as the wife, Claire McDowell as her intimate friend, Vola Smith as the daughter, Jose Ruben as her admirer and Hazel Henderson as the actress responsible for the family rupture, comprise an entirely efficient cast.

"The Man Who Called After Dark" is a two-reel drama with a good plot that might have been presented in more convincing fashion. As it stands the picture seems a little too cut-and-dried, a little too conveniently arranged to carry the illusion of reality. After an ordinary opening, in which a young spendthrift is cast upon his own resources we come to the real idea of the story, an idea that cleverly handled would serve for an entertaining photoplay of even more than two reels. The youth, badly in need of funds, goes to the city editor of a paper in a town much exercised over a murder mystery, and suggests that interest may be kept alive if his reporters are given clues to the identity of the murderer. The plan being accepted, the boy plants the clues, all pointing to himself as the culprit, and at the trial the expected support of the editor is not forthcoming. Then the secret is revealed. The editor killed the man.

If Director Walter Coyle failed to impart the spark of life to this production, he at least introduced a suggestive idea. The cast is competent, with Jack Drumeir, Ivan Christy, Jack Mulhall, Vera Sisson and Gretchen Hartman in leading roles.

"The Bondman"

Hall Caine's Famous Story in a Fox Picture with William Farnum, Makes an Interesting Five-Reel Offering.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE story told by this picture from Hall Caine's "The Bondman" has a compelling quality that will make the offering popular with all kinds of spectators. It is a picture of heroism, devotion and self-sacrifice and it will stir and please. Edgar Lewis put the picture on for the Fox company and William Farnum takes the leading character in it, a double role of father and son. He is ably supported and there are no noticeable weak spots. The photography as projected in the Academy of Music in New York is, while adequately serviceable, not of the best. The central figures are clear; but the backgrounds in many of the scenes have a feathery lack of sharpness that now and then keeps one reminded of photography rather than of action.

There is a Saga like swing to it. Set in Iceland, with a few scenes on the Isle of Man, its hero (or both heroes; for in the second generation the son is like the father) is on the "Gritter the Outlaw" pattern, as though one of those tremendous men of the past had been born again into modern life. The date is about 1840.

An Iceland vagrant of marvelous strength attracts the daughter of the Danish governor of Iceland. She runs away with him and is cast off by her father. Her husband and her mother-in-law are not easy to live with. She is deserted and brings up a son. The vagrant comes to the Isle of Man and there is led into another marriage and has another son. Each of these in time learns his father's story and the picture interestingly handles the different actions in the situation of these two men with different characters and brought up differently. The love story is high grade and freshly interesting. Both men love the same woman and it is her influence that softens the hard nature of the older son, the Iceland man, though she marries the younger, the Isle of Man son. The growing humanity shown by these three as hard times and great troubles come upon them, till the great climax of the story, sets the closing of the picture on a high plain. It is certainly worth while seeing.

"The Hand of Peril" Is Ingenious Melodrama—Some Stirring Scenes in "The Struggle."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"The Hand of Peril."

THE Paragon Company's production of "The Hand of Peril" is a pleasant surprise. It is a story utilizing familiar material—government agents and counterfeiters—in an unfamiliar way, for which we may thank the author. Arthur Stringer and Director Maurice Tourneur, who, in turn, are indebted to House Peters and Ralph Delmore for vivid interpretations of the two most essential characters.

First attention goes to Director Tourneur for his revival of a method of staging used in early French pictures, but new to American productions and conspicuously serviceable in presenting a story of this description. At a crucial point in the action, where all of the characters are brought under the same roof, the director, to all appearances, removes the front wall of the house and allows the audience to follow the happenings in the hallways and rooms just as they occur. While one man enters the front door something else is transpiring on the two upper floors, altogether a strange effect, which contributes materially to an understanding of events during a critical fifteen minutes in the careers of the government agent and the counterfeiters.

Beyond this artistic device, "The Hand of Peril" offers a more than customarily tense melodramatic story, culminating in a brutally realistic fight between Mr. Peters as Kestner, the detective, and Ralph Delmore, as chief of the counterfeiters. Here, as in other parts of the picture, Director Tourneur was careful to provide something a bit out of the ordinary in settings. The two men meet in the ominous surroundings of a dingy, deserted wharf, just the location for the settlement of an uncompromising conflict, ending in the triumph of Kestner. Effective lighting contributes to the impressiveness of these scenes.

A slight love interest is carried in the development of an attachment between the detective and the counterfeiter's daughter, who abandons the profession she has mastered so completely. June Elvidge gives a satisfactory performance, as does Doris Sawyer in the character of an extremely hard young woman.

"The Struggle."

Certain points of this Equitable production, directed by John Ince, from a scenario by Harry Chandlee, are notably well handled, and in its entirety the picture is above the average.

Scene from "The Struggle" (World-Equitable).

It will be considerably more above the average if subsequent prints reveal sharper photography than that indicated in the sample copy shown reviewers; for the locations in a tropical country, at the seashore where the surf pounds over great rocks and in the cloisters of an old monastery, are picturesque to an unusual degree. Backgrounds of such natural attractiveness deserve the best of printing and toning to bring out their full value.

Scenes that are conspicuous because of their excellence, concern the torpedoing of a liner. Director Ince surpassed himself in presenting a sinking vessel, the overturning of lifeboats filled with passengers, the gradual flooding of the ship and the rescue of a woman when the water is knee-deep in her stateroom. Whether staged in a studio, or photographed at sea, there is no break in the illusion during this part of the production.

Having landed two of his principal characters on a desert island and a third in a monastery, the director utilizes a quantity of inviting locations as the plot advances along acceptable, if rather conventional, lines. Frank Sheridan plays Major Carew, an unselfish middle-aged army surgeon, who stands uncomplainingly by while the girl he loves gives herself to Dames, a junior officer of caddish propensities. All three are on the way to Manila when the ship is sunk and Carew saves Marjorie, whose husband drifts to shore and is rescued by kindly monks. Dames has lost his memory, also his evil nature, and leads a saintly life until Carew restores him to his former environment. The young officer suffers a sudden relapse to ill temper, finds that he has contracted leprosy and kills himself, thus opening the way for the marriage of Carew and the not unwilling widow.

Smoothly constructed and played with feeling by Mr. Sheridan, Arthur Ashley and Ethel Gray Terry, "The Struggle" becomes a thoroughly acceptable picture.

"John Needham's Double"

Tyrone Power Plays Dual Role in Excellent Production Made by the Smalleys for Bluebird Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITH "John Needham's Double" the Smalleys make another valuable contribution to the Bluebird program. Those who have followed the recent work of these very successful producers will recall "Hop, the Devil's Brew" and "The Flirt," both excellent pictures, but in no way superior to the latest offering, an adaptation of John Hatton's play, in which Tyrone Power gives a superb performance in the dual role of John Needham and Joseph Norbury.

Technically the production is practically flawless. Consider the manner of unfolding the story and it is difficult to conceive any change that would better the smooth advancement of the plot; settings are in perfect taste for a photoplay requiring an English atmosphere; the photography, introducing many difficult double exposures, could not be improved, and the acting, notably of Mr. Power, who is on the screen most of the time, might well be studied by skeptics who deny the possibilities for adroit characterization in a motion picture performance. Added to all these virtues is the still more important one—a logical story that grips the attention.

It is no new experience to watch an actor playing two characters in the same production; but it is quite out of the ordinary to find a player giving such distinctly dissimilar impersonations as the John Needham and the Joseph Norbury of Mr. Power. As Needham he is a dissolute, ungovernable man [illegible] to check his [illegible] as the [illegible] sive. From his [illegible] Norbury, living [illegible] Mr. Power makes the spectator [illegible] the quality of the man, and in subsequent scenes, when the two meet, he is equally successful in emphasizing the contrasting natures. The picture is a triumph for the leading player, as it is for the Smalleys.

Good fortune remained with the producers in the selection of other members of the cast, including the youth appearing as the heir to the estate misappropriated by Needham. It happens that the actor playing Creighton when he reaches maturity, strongly resembles the boy seen in the opening scenes. Marie Walcamp makes a wholly attractive English girl as the daughter of Norbury. Olga Printzlau wrote the scenario.

"The Havoc"

A Domestic Photodrama by Essanay, Adapted from H. S. Sheldon's Play of That Title, With Gladys Hanson, Lewis S. Stone and Bryant Washburn in the Principal Roles.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IN "The Havoc," a V-L-S-E subject by Essanay, founded on H. S. Sheldon's play of that name, we have a story based wholly on the "eternal triangle"—the wife, the husband and the other man. But don't shrug your shoulders in disappointment; for I can assure you—if my own impressions are worth anything—that your interest will gradually grow until it reaches the point of tenseness, and that without the aid of scenes that offend nice moral sensibilities.

It is really a triumph for a well-knit story and capable direction that this visualization of the infelicity of wedded life does not become prosy and tedious at the expense of interest. I was afraid in the opening scenes, where the characters and their environment were introduced, that prosiness would rule. This seemed only natural, because of the lack of action; but, just as soon as the "other man" began to show himself in his true colors, the mind at once became alert and prosiness fled. One becomes engrossed in the conflict between right and wrong, and this is soon intensified by the desire to see the wrongdoers punished, which is done in a most unusual way, in the end.

The "other man," who is a friend of the husband and a boarder in his home, is forced to marry the erring wife, after she has secured a divorce from her husband, with the understanding that the former husband shall be a boarder in their home and be considered a friend. The succeeding years reveal to the wife her mistake and her loss; for the man whom she preferred grew to suspect the husband whom he had wronged, and in a fine scene the latter denounces them both in the following words:

"You sneer at the laws of God and man, and above the havoc you create, flaunt the banner of your licentious creed, falsely termed philosophy! You expected her who sinned for you to sin against you, because you could conceive of no truth and no faith! You have wrought your own hell upon earth, and must live out your own damnation!"

This climax takes place at the end of the fourth reel, and at first I was impressed that it would have been best to let the story end there; but the fifth reel reveals the crowning punishment meted out the "other man," and this begets such satisfaction that one becomes resigned to the infraction of rules by the plot.

Gladys Hanson, an actress well known to the dramatic stage for talented work in heavy woman leads in Shakespearean drama with E. H. Sothern's company and in the support of Minnie Maddern Fiske, takes the part of the wife. To say that she takes it well would be too indefinite. In her hands the character has been thoroughly analyzed, and the composite created by her art introduced a woman, pleasing, earnest and thoughtful, but not deeply reflective. Had she possessed this quality and less of selfishness, she would have easily seen that her husband, busy with his overtime work during evenings, had no intention of slighting her, and still much less had permitted his love to grow cold. The same weakness exposed her to the wiles of the tempter and led to her downfall. His false philosophy, gleaned from the book "The Fall of Nora," could have been readily punctured by her woman's wit had she only, in mind's eye, put herself in her husband's place. Then selfishness would have been succeeded by altruism and her love would have been re-awakened, and the taking of the fatal step and the consequences would have been avoided.

Even when the die has been cast, the wife is such a novice in dissimulation that the veriest fool could have read her guilt both in face and action, on the night when her husband came home unexpectedly. Her natural honesty compelled it, although that honesty had been overcome by sophistry. But the more than veriest fool husband could see nothing until he espied a hat and an overcoat on a chair. And the tell-tale confusion of the wife as well as the blindness of the husband are both virtues in this instance, that of the husband being the result of a great enfolding love that placed his wife above suspicion. Lewis S. Stone in his portrayal of the husband has brought out this point very strongly, just as Miss Hanson has artfully shown the other point in favor of the wife.

Mr. Stone's conception of the husband is a fine one. The husband is as cool in a crisis as he is at the desk in his office. He is a complete master of himself, and is just as determined as he is cool. The strong contrast between the husband and the "other man," the latter most capably impersonated by Bryant Washburn is well brought out in the discovery scene, which is tremendously impressive. In this scene the "other man" says to the husband:

"See, how calmly you accept the situation! If you loved her as I do, you would kill me—perhaps both of us." To which the husband replies:

Scene from "The Havoc" (Essanay).

"I shall do as you say you would in my place, Mr. Philosopher, unless you can suggest something less conventional!"

And then the husband makes his terms.

"A Sister to Cain"

Three-Reel Lubin Melodrama of Stage Life, Written by Julian Louis Lamothe and Directed by Edward Sloman.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE type of women that Julian Louis Lamothe depicts in "A Daughter of Cain," is found on the stage—and in other walks of life. Her doings are of small moment to the world at large, except that her sordid and distorted moral code often works harm to others and is a constant menace to the social fabric. No one familiar with the women who earn their daily bread on the stage, in the cabaret or at the artist's studio, will deny that a goodly number of them share Benedict's creed. "The world is mine oyster!" But opening oysters is hard work, so they look about for one of the stronger sex to perform the operation, and to open a bottle of champagne at the same time.

Two lady grafters of this species are the principal characters in Mr. Lamothe's screen drama. They are dancers in the same company, and wise, after their kind. A young millionaire has very attractive qualities for them both. Yvonne—so one of the ladies is named—makes no effort to hide the fact, not even from Tom Marston, a newspaper reporter, who has fallen in love with the dancer. Iona, the other follower of Pavlowa, is more adroit at the shell game, and gives the gentleman of means the impression that she is the personification of all the virtues. As a consequence, he offers to marry her and take her to Europe on a wedding tour. But Yvonne prevents the consummation of the romance. Meeting Iona at a resort known as the Japanese Palace, Yvonne stabs her rival with a hat pin. This act puts her in the power of Hashiwa, the proprietor, and the almond-eyed gentleman agrees to get the supposed dead woman out of the way at the usual rates approved of by Sardou and his brother, dramatists of the French amative school. The millionaire is led to believe that Iona has thrown him over, and he sails for Europe alone. Reckoning day comes for Yvonne; but, the despised reporter, like all good men of his craft, is something of a detective. He obtains a clew as to the condition of affairs, and brings the police on the scene at the proper dramatic moment. Yvonne is saved, and Iona, a prisoner of the Japs, is set free. Her sense of gratitude, however, is swallowed up by her resentment against Yvonne for interfering with her wedding journey. The millionaire returns in time to hear Iona make some uncomplimentary remarks about himself and reveal her selfish interest in his ability to write checks. As a consequence, neither Daughter of the Dance becomes a prospective sojourner in Reno, the Blessed of the divorcee, and celebrated in song and satire.

Although decidedly inferior to Julian Louis Lamothe's former contributions to the film drama, "A Sister to Cain" has been carefully and elaborately produced under the direction of Edward Sloman, and effectively acted by Helen Wolcott, Evelyn Page, Adelaide Bronti, George Routh, Benjamin Hopkins, Jay Morley, Allan Forrest and W. J. Spencer.

"The Two-Edged Sword"

Thoroughly Human Vitagraph Drama is Marked by Strong Characterizations—Edith Storey Starred.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THAT indefinable quality that gives lifelikeness to a photoplay is found here in a marked degree, and because of it "The Two-Edged Sword" becomes an exceptionally appealing production. The acting of Edith Storey, Evart Overton and Josephine Earle has more than a little to do with the memorable impression left by these five reels, and the players are fortunate in having something worth while to work with in the scenario furnished by L. Case Russell and E. V. Brewster. It is a rare occurrence, indeed, to find a picture in which the story seems to be the logical, almost inevitable outcome of the characters, yet such is the result attained in this very carefully developed production.

Director George D. Baker avoided the appearance of haste in the advancement of his plot. He took the four chief characters—a novelist, his pleasure-loving wife, a perfectly unsophisticated farmer lad and the youth's devoted sister—and having given the audience an opportunity to understand the natures and aims of these actors in the little drama, permitted the story to grow. When Dorothy, the novelist's wife accompanies a friend on a summer vacation at a farm house, there is no effort to conceal the woman's intention. She is bored, she craves flattery and she concludes that the days may be enlivened by a harmless flirtation with Jed.

The strength of the picture during the first two reels does not lie in the situation, rather in the sincere manner of its presentation. Instead of a hasty, unconvincing conquest we see how the pretty woman, using countlesss feminine wiles, gradually arouses the love of the reluctant young farmer and then when the mischief has been wrought, when his awakened nature finds vent in a passionate kiss, we see how the trifler recoils from the genuine emotion which she inspired. A third character drawn with perfect detail is that of Jed's sister, who realizes what is happening and tries without avail to save her brother. After his suicide she devotes her life to avenging the wrong.

Miss Storey does not really become the leading figure in the picture until after Jed's death. In time she is employed as the novelist's secretary, her one purpose being to win the man's love that his wife may suffer. But in arousing emotion in Allen she also kindles her own feelings, hence the title, "The Two-Edged Sword." Long recognized for her ability in giving vivid screen impersonations, Miss Storey has a character worthy of her steel in Mary Brooks. With the players previously mentioned and Robert Gaillard, she is ably assisted in the interpretation of a superior photoplay. Much of the action was photographed on a farm that will appeal to every lover of the country.

Triangle Program

"The Stepping Stone," Five-Reel Kay-Bee, and "By Stork Delivery," Two-Reel Keystone.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE STEPPING STONE," by Gardner Sullivan, "presenting Frank Keenan and Mary Boland," also presents Robert McKim in a remarkably fine impersonation. A man was needed to play the role of a despicable weakling, and Mr. McKim did it so well that he almost won sympathy for a character intended to repel sympathetic interest. The weakling has a wife of beautiful character, upon whom he puts the burden of effort that raises him from nothingness, only to discard her when he feels that she can be of no further service to him. He is assisted in making a fortune by a "Lion of Wall Street," a middle-aged man who has fallen in love with the splendid woman, and who schemes to make the weakling temporarily rich that he may betray his true character. The Wall Street Lion role is entrusted to Frank Keenan, and that of the wife to Mary Boland.

Mr. Gardner does most all of the work. The play is one of almost pure psychology from beginning to end, and there is more than one strong theme hidden beneath its workings. Most effective of these lies beneath a powerful contrast of the good a simple and sweet-hearted woman may do and the utter selfishness of men scheming to use or abuse her as it may suit their varying moods. All the fine sentiment is hers, and it gradually softens the indurated heart of the big financier. The story is particularly happy in showing the growth of a tiny flower of sentiment in an almost barren soul, and it is generally well constructed, but it lacks a nice finishing touch at the end, some dainty bit of artistry to complete an otherwise satisfactory production.

"By Stork Delivery" actually has the framework of a story, unusual thing for a farce, but, as usual, story interest of minor importance. A tailor receives a letter from a "rich uncle"—why can't that be some other relative for a change? promising a gift of five thousand dollars if the tailor's expected child is a boy and will be named for his uncle. All goes well—it is a boy—until the tailor's little daughter, envious of all the attention received by the newcomer, hides him in the dog kennel about the time the rich uncle arrives. Then follows more than one complication, but the one of live interest concerns an unnamed character, the tailor's dog. A rush is made for the kennel when the little girl confesses, but the dog has set off after a stray cur who has stolen his bone, and drags the kennel, supposed to contain the baby, down a railroad track. A marvelous pursuit follows that furnishes the fun of the piece.

A Genuine "Find"

William Lovell Finley from Oregon Comes to New York With Wonderful Screen Studies in Animal Life—Humor Is the Predominating Element With Added Notes of Beauty and Pathos.

By W. Stephen Bush.

A THOUSAND laughs and ten thousand smiles in about a dozen reels is something to boast about. It's a conservative estimate made by a grouchy old critic condemned for many years to see all kinds of films. Just what these lovable pictures might do to the ordinary audience is quite beyond my calculation. Before I tell you anything more about these films give me a second or two and read about the man who made them. A modest, unassuming man he is, happy out in the open and happiest when he is turning the camera on some particularly charming and rare bit of animal lore. William Lovell Finley is his name and he hails from Oregon. You will hear the name oftener after this, for I am pitiably mistaken if these films of his fail to make him famous.

The Early Bird.

Screen Studies of Animal Life.

I call his splendid reels "Screen Studies of Animal Life" and I don't know whether he will thank me for the title. I feel the title is not comprehensive enough. It does not convey the dominant idea and the distinguishing feature of these reels, for it does not suggest the immense entertainment value of them, nor does it give any hint of the precious humor in which his work abounds. These reels are instructive, of course. They are interesting, they are entertaining, but above all things they make people laugh. Whoever can sit through the scenes showing the appearance and the antics of two lumbering, good natured cubs of the brown bear may be regarded with suspicion, but if he "never cracks a smile" when these self-same blundering cubs try to play with a trio of the "cutest" cougar kittens, then I would advise getting in touch with the detective bureau. Now there are other scenes, too, and plenty of them, that are apt to upset the dignity of a saint, but the bears and cubs are the supreme test. If your spectator doesn't laugh at them all I can say is, "Go, mark him well."

Humorous Close-Ups of Bird Life.

Somehow I cannot write a formal review of these pictures. A few impressions I must set down, but as for the rest—go see them yourself and you'll feel about as helpless as I feel at this moment. Imagine a mother thrush in search of a suitable nest. Two charming children appear and provide an elegant birds' bungalow. Mother Thrush, not a bit shy, takes possession. The children try to trick the bird by building a lot of other bungalows right around the home she has selected. Do they deceive her? Well, this is what happens. Mother Thrush sees the new houses and scarcely notices them. She goes to her own home, but then she flies out again and haunted by a comical curiosity she flies into every one of the new houses, carefully inspects them and returns home for all the world like a little mother who has been out flat-hunting. Talk about the eternal feminine. All the bird pictures are wonderful, but the films giving us most intimate and thrilling glimpses of the water fowl and the humor, the pathos and tragedy of the life in the water, in the marshes, in the air and on the rocks are fascinating beyond my power to describe.

Wedding Dance and Cake Walk on the Water.

There is a strange and marvelous "wedding dance" by two mating terns, there is a cake walk upon the water, there are diving feats that will charm millions and millions of people. Interspersed with these pictures are scenes of overwhelming beauty, such as the views of the bird colonies on the rocks. You have scarcely recovered from these when you laugh again this time at the funny and I must add perfectly disreputable antics of a baby pelican who bothers his mother to feed him. Mother does not want to be troubled and the baby pelican carries on in a way that ought to earn him a severe spanking. He throws himself on the ground feigning starvation, he spreads his downy wings in a fit of temper until poor mother has to take up the function of feeding very much against her will.

Wonderful Range and Variety.

To give an idea of the range and variety of the pictures I will tell you that Mr. Finley first takes you to the nest of the humming bird—and presto change—you are climbing with one of his men into the eerie of an eagle. If there is any thing sweeter and more delicate than the mother of the little humming birds feeding her young I for one have never seen it. It is like a scene from Queen Mab's cabinet of dreams, it is like a structure made of gossamer and painted with tints from the rainbow. The close-up of the full grown American eagle, showing the bird in the pose, as we find him in coins and in heraldry is impressive and inspiring. The young eagle, resenting the human touch and protesting against the invasion of his lofty home, disappears all too quickly. Then there are the tragedies of bird life, none more pathetic than the fate of the little murre, which has fallen among the gulls. The gulls have discovered that the murre is tired and weak and one bird, more persistent than the rest, seizes the murre and claims it as its prey. The author of the films has succeeded in penetrating the privacy of the birds familiar to the children. He seems able to gain their unqualified confidence. The two charming children of the author show how far this confidence of the wild birds has extended to them and it certainly is a delightful and rare spectacle to see these shy creatures of the forest perch with an air of intimate friendship on the hands and on the head of little Miss Finley. Whether they belong to the family of the Grosbeak or the Snowbird or the Chickadee or the Nuthatch or the Song Sparrow or the Purple Finch or Blue Bird or the plain Robin, they are on the same terms of intimacy with the children.

I cannot leave the bird life shown in the pictures without at least a brief mention of a strange and extremely laughable creature: the sea-parrot. Of this creature, which looks so odd and strong, there are three or four delightful close-ups. There are the "Waders of the Marsh," all of them shown in their native habitat and all of them caught in the privacy of nest and field.

Fascinating Tales of Stream and Forest.

Bird life is the chief but by no means the only theme of these films. The finny kingdom and the most interesting four-footed animals are not forgotten. The fawns of the black-tailed deer "playing possum" while the mother is away provoke many a smile. When the mother returns the fawn comes to life and gets quite frisky. The elks and antelopes are as charming as they are shy. The American antelope is dying out, hence these pictures have an added value. One of the big hits in this reel is the disinclination of a baby elk to pose for his motion picture and the means that were used to persude him into a pose which must forever be a delight to a painter of animals. The transportation of the elks from the Jackson Hole country, Wyoming, to one of the forest preserves of northeastern Oregon is another striking scene.

Not the least wonderful thing is the picture showing "The Life History of the Salmon." Almighty nature has allowed the author a long look into the secrets of her eternal laboratory. The salmon at certain seasons swims and often leaps to the upper reaches of the Columbia River to spawn. From the first moments of its journey it begins to lose flesh until at spawning time it is weak, exhausted and ready to die. To prevent the river from being filled with dead and dying fish, the state now takes the fish when they are "ripe," removes the spawn from the females and then destroys them. The spawn thus obtained is fertilized by the eggs, which are stripped from the male and the whole process of evolution from spawn to fingerling is shown in a series of most entertaining pictures. There are many scenes showing the young fish and some superb full-grown specimens swimming under the surface of the water. The whole process of hatching and feeding is portrayed with great skill and in a most interesting manner.

There are reels dealing with "The Rambles of a Naturalist" just as fascinating as the rest, there is another real showing with ever-recurring touches of humor the adventures of expert anglers who go after trout and salmon and there are so many other fine and funny things that it would fill pages to tell about them in anything like detail.

I have space but for one thing more: These pictures and the man who made them are a genuine "find." Mr. Finley came here from Oregon unknown and unhearalded. His work is his best introduction. No more valuable contributions have been made to the best screen literature than these films. I am glad to be able to add that Mr. Finley proposes to devote his best efforts to a further prosecution of his precious labors.

"The Heart of Paula"

Lenore Ulrich Gives Colorful Performance as a Spanish Girl in Pallas Pictures Production.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AS A Spanish maiden, alluringly attractive and thoroughly versed in the art of flirtation, Lenore Ulrich is admirable. Her warm beauty and emotional fervor are perfectly suited to the character of Paula Figueroa, the heroine of this Pallas Pictures drama, laid in a Mexican town supposed to be controlled by revolutionists. It is scarcely necessary to comment on the timeliness of such a story. The Mexican scenes are authentic, we are given occasional glimpses of typical Mexican characters, and the plot, if not always convincing, offers a likable combination of romance and adventure. Best of all, however, is the appearance of Miss Ulrich. At times she becomes quite irresistibly charming.

Scene from "The Heart of Paula" (Pallas).

Two endings were provided for the romance of the American mining engineer and the ardent Spanish girl—the first a logical, tragic culmination of their love; the second a happy, though less reasonable compromise. According to the tragic climax—the one, we imagine, originally conceived by the author—Paula promises to give herself to the revolutionary leader in payment for the life of the young American. When he is safely across the border, the girl goes to the Mexican quarters, reposes on a couch bathed in moonlight and plunges a dagger into her heart. The revolutionist finds her lifeless body.

Opinion among those attending a special showing of the picture seemed to favor the artistic and dramatic qualities of the tragic climax; but a counting of the votes, to some degree influenced by the well-known preference for unblighted love affairs, resulted in a tie and the ultimate selection of the second ending, which brings a fortuitous rescue of the endangered heroine. The American rides across the border, as in the first version, gathers half a dozen cowboys and returns just in time to wrest the girl from the arms of her unwelcome suitor; all of which is happily in accord with photoplay precedent.

Sharply photographed throughout, the picture profits greatly by the notably fine lighting in scenes following Paula's entrance into the home of the Mexican. Forrest Stanley gives Miss Ulrich the best of support in delightfully-played love passages, one of them introducing an unexpected bit of natural comedy. Velma Lefler, whose blond loveliness makes an effective contrast for the exotic charm of Miss Ulrich, is a valuable member of the cast. As Stephen Pachmann, Jack Livingstone presents a character occupying a somewhat ambiguous place in the story.

"The Sowers"

A Lasky Feature Consisting of Five Reels in Which Blanche Sweet, Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan Are Featured.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS film play tells of various episodes in the eternal conflict between the Russian secret police and the League of Revolutionists. The dramatic motive in the play is jealousy. A Russian Prince is in love with a woman whom he is eager to marry and who wants to marry him. Unfortunately the Tsar has other plans for the Prince, not knowing, of course, of the Prince's allegiance to the revolutionary cause. The woman whom the Tsar has selected for the wife of the Prince has a liaison with a Count who is in the employ of the secret police. On the one hand is selfishness, jealousy and full adherence to and support of the Russian autocracy; on the other hand is pure affection, the worship of ideals and a passionate devotion to the cause of humanity. Out of the conflict of these motives rises a plot which at times develops tense situations.

It is scarcely necessary to speak in praise of Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan. They perform their parts conscientiously. Blanche Sweet has a part which is quite suitable to her. She is strong in the pathetic scenes and tender in the scene where she offers to sacrifice her love to the cause of freedom.

The Russian atmosphere is quite convincing. The scenes in the ante-chamber of the Chief of the Russian secret police give one a glimpse half terrifying and half instructive of the elaborate and unscrupulous system which holds Russia in chains. The methods of the agents of the Tsar's secret police are likewise portrayed with great skill. There are the usual splendid lighting effects which have in the minds of the public become one of the distinctive merits of every Lasky production.

"The Bruiser"

Five-Part Mutual Masterpicture De Luxe Gives a Forceful Presentation of the Labor Problem.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THIS will be found to be one of the most attractive of the Mutual Masterpictures De Luxe. In it William Russell has found a fine opportunity to show what he's made of in a dramatic way, and Charlotte Burton is seen to advantage in a role not usually allotted to her. Miss Burton in the character of the sister of a factory hand and sweetheart of the champion fighter of the mill gang is exceedingly winsome.

The play upon which the picture is based treats of how a brother and sister, children of a millionaire mill owner, finding themselves alone with the manufactory and its stigma of workaday life, try to dispose of the property, and are thwarted in the outset by a threatened strike of the mill hands. The haughty daughter of the mill owner, whose greatest care in life is to provide herself plenty of entertainment, endeavors to get the big leader of the factory gang into her net by teaching him evenings, and pretending to be greatly interested in him personally. The game fails to work as she intended, however, and the opposition leader, who is tricked into accepting a bogus contract on behalf of the men, promising an increase in wages, finds himself in a pretty plight, and is soundly trounced for his pains.

The production contains a number of good scenes in the prize ring wherein Russell proves himself quite equal to the occasion, and "because it's in the play" knocks out his opponent with perfect ease. The production could be used to advantage before any audience, and would be especially forceful as propaganda on the labor side

"The Millionaire's Son"

Knickerbocker Star Feature with Myrtle Reeves and Richard Johnson Based on Question of Capital and Labor.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of the production in question deals with a peculiar exchange of infants, the one the son of a millionaire factory owner, and the other the son of one of the factory hands who was discharged for drinking. The man afterward left home and in another part of the country committed a crime for which he was sentenced to a term in prison. In the meantime his wife answers an advertisement for a nurse in the family of the millionaire, and it is in this connection that the exchange of babies is accidentally made during a fire. At a later date when both children are grown to manhood a strike is declared in the factory and the two young men fight a deadly fight in which the real son of the millionaire is seriously injured. At this point of the story the former factory hand returns and the secret of the birth of the young men is divulged.

The story as told in the film is a bit confused, and the production, while it is wholesome in every way, has no strictly professional earmarks.

Two One-Reel Kalems

"Almost a Heroine," a Sis Hopkins Comedy, and "The Record Run," a New "Hazard of Helen."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"Almost a Heroine."

IN THIS one-reel comedy Sis is still in the employ of the Newlyweds and the family circle has been increased by the addition of one small infant. Miss Hopkins' faithful admirer, the elastic and rebounding Ignatz, presents her with a token of his affection, in the shape of a plump and greedy young porker, upon which Sis bestows the name of "Baby." One day she wraps the young squealer in a blanket and takes him for an airing in a baby carriage. A wicked kidnapper mistakes little piggy for a real infant and straightway purloins him. Sis hurries back home and breaks the news to the Newlyweds that "Baby" has been stolen. By a strange coincidence, the son and heir of the house of Newlywed has been taken on a visit to his grandparents, without his father and mother being informed of the fact, and they imagine that Sis is referring to their precious offspring. Trouble of a comic nature begins right there and is kept up until both little pets are restored to their rightful and wildly excited owners. Frank Howard Clark is the author of this "Hilarity First" comedy, a motto adapted by the producer, the star and the rest of the cast. From this point of view, the picture is a success, and Miss Melville and her support, which includes Henry Murdock, Arthur Albertson, Mary Kennedy, Richard Purdon, Olive West and Robert Ellis, work vigorously and skilfully all through the reel.

Scene from "Almost a Heroine" (Kalem).

"The Record Run."

The cut which accompanies this article is indisputable evidence that the hazard taken by Helen Gibson in "The Record Run" is a real thriller. The method by which the lady operator overtakes and boards a runaway engine would daunt anyone but a moving picture actress of uncommon skill and daring. There are other exciting moments in the drama, and the story involves a struggle of both brains and brawn. True Boardman and Percy Pembrooke assist Miss Gibson in the acting of the photoplay. The production was made by James Davis.

Famous Players Shows Two Subjects

Hazel Dawn in "The Saleslady" and Pauline Frederick in "Audrey" Provide Good Entertainment.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

"The Saleslady."

THE Famous Players released on March 23 "The Saleslady," a five-part subject featuring Hazel Dawn. It is an original screen story by Willard Mack. The tale is of a country girl, an orphan, who comes to New York to make her living. She meets rebuffs, such as might be expected under the circumstances; and so, too, she finds friends, first among the humbler division of humanity and later among the well to do.

"The Saleslady" is a simple story, of the happenings of everyday life. It is one that will have wide appeal to the interest on that account alone. Miss Dawn's experiences in the dry goods store, her successful debut as a chorus girl when it became necessary to provide funds for the care of her injured husband, and her flirtation with her father-in-law are all skilfully drawn.

Irving Cummings has the role of Bruce, the young spendthrift who suddenly changes his habits of living and marries a girl from behind the counter. Clarence Handysides is the father of the young man who, too, is fond of the bright lights—a gay old boy who arrogates to himself the right to do the things for the commission of which he upbraids his son, on the self-justifying plea that he has the wherewithal and his son has not. His seeking out of the charming chorus girl, his pestering her with attentions, and the clever manner in which she plays him until the dramatic moment when, accorded the privilege of escorting Helen to her home, he is confronted by his disowned son constitute one of the best phases of the story.

Scene from "Audrey" (Famous Players).

Frederick Thomson directed the picture, and has done well. One of the striking series of scenes is of the department store. It is the real thing.

"Audrey."

"Audrey" is the release of the Famous Players for March 27. In this five-part subject Pauline Frederick has the leading role. The story will make good entertainment, from the pictorial side as well as from the dramatic. The script is adapted by Harriet Ford and E. F. Boddington from the novel by Mary Johnston. Robert Vignola, the producer, has traveled to the far South for his settings, and they are indeed picturesque. The period is Colonial—and one wonders where Mr. Vignola unearthed or ungarreted all the beavers of ancient vintage.

Miss Frederick has the name role. Audrey is an orphan—in her childhood her parents had been slain by Indians—who is given by her rescuer, a man of means, over to others for keeping on account of his leaving for England. The child becomes a drudge. In after years the guardian returns, becoming in turn the protector of his ward and her husband. It is a pretty romance. Miss Frederick by her skill in emotional portrayal contributes to the illusion of the drama.

Charles Waldron is Lord Hayward, the guardian of Audrey. Mr. Waldron gives a splendid interpretation of the dignified Englishman. Henry Hallam and Helen Lindroth are the schoolmaster and wife who fail to care for Audrey as her guardian intended. Jack Clark is a dashing Southern swell, the brother of Evelyn—portrayed by Marguerite Christians—who loses out in her conquest for Hayward; she postpones her acceptance of his suit and Hayward changes his mind in favor of his ward. Rita Connolly, the child Audrey, will make a hit with any audience.

"Audrey" is a good picture. It is drama artistically presented and well played.

Four Reels of Good Quality Are Made by the Champion Sports Exhibition Company.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SAVE among those opposed to prize fighting in any form there can be no objection to these four reels of film, giving a graphic idea of the ten-round bout between Champion Jess Willard and Challenger Frank Moran at Madison Square Garden on March 25th. If it comes to a question of brutality, one might select numerous melodramas of current issue containing more harrowing physical encounters than that offered by the professional pugilists. Followers of boxing will find the picture to be a good substitute for a seat in the Garden, whereas those who believe that a ring battle must of necessity be a terrible thing, may be a bit disappointed.

The arrangement of lights at Madison Square favored the photographer when he focused on the action in the ring. During most of the ten rounds the pugilists are sharply outlined against the surrounding blackness and it is possible to follow each movement of the men as the fight progresses. The camera was placed at just the right distance from the ring to give the scene proper dimensions on the screen, and the more important parts of the fight were emphasized by using a telephoto lens. Audiences will be impressed by the overpowering size of Willard and by the gameness of Moran, who, from the first round on, with the exception of a moment in the seventh, was waging a losing battle.

Preceding the fight are close-ups of the principals, of their backers, of everyone, in fact, who figured prominently at the Garden. Not the least interesting part of the picture shows Willard and Moran in training preparatory to the match. The effort to photograph the notables at the ringside, David Belasco and George M. Cohan among them, was less successful, for the lighting precluded anything more satisfactory than occasionally glimpses of faces and white shirt fronts. About one hundred feet of this poor photography might well be eliminated, without sacrificing the flashes of John L. Sullivan, James J. Corbett, Bob Fitzimonns and Kid McCoy, as each, in turn, is introduced by Announcer Joe Humphries. The picture was made by the Champion Sports Exhibition Company, Longacre Building, N. Y.

"At Piney Ridge" (Selig's May V-L-S-E).

Announcement is made of release under date of May 1, through the V-L-S-E, of the Selig feature, "At Piney Ridge," founded on the plot of the stage production of the same title.

Fritzi Brunette will play the star role in the film adaptation, with Al W. Filson in the principal male part. The cast includes such well-known artists as Leo Pierson, Edward J. Piel, Frank Clark, Vivian Reed, James Bradbury, William Scott and Lillian Hayward.

This drama of the Blue Ridge mountains is recorded as David K. Higgin's greatest triumph in the "legitimate" field, and the film production, for which Robert Daly is responsible, is modeled along similar lines, with the additional charm of scenic splendor and minuteness of detail only to be attained on the screen.

A double love story of intense human interest, one ending in tragedy, the other in happiness, is set forth in convincing fashion. The title role is said to furnish Miss Brunette with the best opportunity of displaying her emotional talent accorded her since her debut in filmland.

Horsley Release Date Changed.

Due to a re-arrangement of schedule for the release of Mutual Masterpictures, de luxe edition, the five-part David Horsley production, "The Leopard's Bride," will be released April 13, instead of April 15, as originally announced. Margaret Gibson and William Clifford are the featured players in the production.

Comments on the Films

Exclusively by Our Own Staff.

General Film Company.

THE NEW JANITOR (Lubin), March 20.—This one-reel farce should bring joy to the hearts of all apartment house dwellers; it shows that a janitor's lot is not always a happy one. Otto's troubles are many during the action of George Spink's picture, and D. L. Don plays the janitor with his usual broad comedy method. Patsey De Forest hides her comeliness beneath a grotesque make-up and helps on the fun. Fred Douglas and Florence Williams are in the cast.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 23, 1916 (Selig), March 20.—Columbus before and after the Villa raid; the Atlantic Fleet at gun practice in Guantanamo Bay; Cavalry Regiment getting ready at Fort Sheridan; trial trip of destroyer "Porter," and Chicago National Guards preparing to learn Spanish, are among the most interesting items. Other events include Aviation Field, San Diego, Cal.; bare foot dancers in Central Park; $500,000 fire, Buffalo, N. Y.; "Baby Week," Chicago; the White Sox enroute.

A SQUARED ACCOUNT (Vitagraph), March 20.—There is no question concerning the power of this one-reel drama. Repentant outlaws who do the heroic thing at the last moment are common in pictures, but G. E. Jenks has handled his theme with so much skill and it is so well played by Otto Lederer, George Kunkell, Jack Mower and Anne Schaefer, that it rises superior to its conventionality. William Wolbert directed the reel.

FOR SWEET CHARITY (Kalem), March 21.—A review of this "Ham and Bud" one-reel comedy was printed in the issue of March 18, page 1851. The two heroes attend a fair and manage to enjoy themselves after their usual fashion, especially when Bud finds a pocketbook on the floor and buys kisses from a pretty girl at a dollar a kiss. An amusing comedy.

AT BACHELOR'S ROOST (Kalem), March 22.—Ethel Teare, Gus Leonard, Jack Maclermott and Charles Mulgro comprise the cast in this one-reel comedy by Howard Irving Young. The author has supplied a neatly worked out plot, and under the direction of William Beaudine the reel has been made to unwind a worth while comedy. Ethel Teare is all smiles, as usual, and belies her name at every opportunity.

SELIG-TRIBUNE NO. 24, 1916 (Selig), March 23.—Surf bathing at Jupiter, Fla.; run of smelts at Kelso, Wash.; troops drilling, Montreal, Can.; shipping radium ore, Denver, Colo.; Seminole Indian sun dance, West Palm Beach, Fla.; troops drilling, Ottawa, Can.; tablet to Alexander Graham Bell, Boston, Mass.; elephant cleaning off snow, Central Park, New York; war scenes, Demir Hissar, Serbia; troops leaving for the front, Toronto, Can.; getting ready for the march, Galveston, Tex.; U. S. Troops crossing the boundary line, Columbus, N. M.

BUNGLES LANDS A JOB (Vim), March 23.—And the job that Bungles lands almost lands Bungles in jail. Finding that no one will employ him while in his proper person, he disguises himself as a tall and willowy member of the opposite sex, but trouble keeps right on his trail. Although encumbered with skirts, he makes a record as a bicycle rider, and performs other amusing and reckless feats. The reel is right in line with the other Vim comedies.

WHEN THINGS GO WRONG (Kalem), March 24.—The material in this one-reel "Sis Hopkins" comedy fulfills its mission, and Rose Melville shows that she is rapidly learning to make the most of every bit of business that comes her way. A review of this picture was printed in the issue of April 1, page 97.

THE DETECTIVE'S PERIL (No. 12 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), March 25.—Daring chases and desperate ones is the main feature of this one-reel drama. There are a number of thrills in the picture and the entire cast is made to feel that without the timely aid of the dauntless Helen, their chances of capturing desperate characters or escaping with their lives are slim indeed. But it's a mean soul that will not respond to a good bit of melodrama!

ANIMATED NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 7 (Essanay), March 22.—Wallace A. Carlson's animated cartoons of current topics of the day and a Dreamy Dud adventure in Slumberland take up the first five hundred feet of this reel, the remainder being occupied by interesting scenes in New Mexico. Mr. Carlson's burlesque drawings are as amusing as ever.

BEHIND THE FOOTLIGHTS (Vim), March 24.—Burlesques on life behind the footlights are no novelty, but are often amusing. The one now in question is one of the best so far produced. Its humor is continuous, being spurred on by Pokes and Jabs. The finish is a scream.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER (Lubin), March 25.—The Elder Dumas claimed to be able to make a drama out of four scenes, four boards, two actors and a passion; in "Love One Another" Mark Swan has relied almost entirely on a motto. The result hardly justifies the experiment. Billie Reeves, Mimie Humphrey, Francis Joyner, Alice Mann, Mary Roland and Chas. Griffith work faithfully and fruitlessly in their respective roles.

TRILBY'S LOVE DISASTER (Selig), March 25.—Except for a bad habit of Trilby's of indulging in too much conversation and thus stopping the action, this one-reel comedy from the scenario mill of Tom Mix is of the right brand. There are laughs a-plenty in the picture, the incident of the runaway being very funny. Joe Ryan, Victoria Forde, Betty Keller and Ethylyn Chrisman form a competent cast. The runaway horse is a star performer.

General Film Company Specials.

MISMATES (Knickerbocker Star Feature), March 17.—The story of how a young chap makes an imprudent marriage and is saved from committing a serious crime by the woman who really loves him, this three-reel drama was written by Bess Meredith and directed by Bertram Bracken. The picture has an excellent plot and shows sincerity of purpose in every situation. It is played in the same spirit by Daniel Gilfether, Fred Whitman, Marguerite Landis, Madeline Pardee, Myrtle Reeves, Ruth Lackaye, Charles Dudley and Richard Johnson.

THE STRANGE CASE OF MARY PAGE, NO. 9 ("The Accusing Eye") (Essanay), March 20. Two new witnesses are introduced in this installment of the Essanay serial—an actor named Meredith, and the police surgeon who examined Pollock after the murder. The surgeon testifies that the retina of the dead man's eye held an image of Mary Page. The judge refuses to admit the testimony. The actor's evidence relates to the first meeting between Mary and Pollock, and shows that she had every reason to fear the man.

NUMBER 13, WESTBOUND (Selig), March 20.—To begin with, Elliott Flower's three-reel drama of life on the rail is something different from the rest. The story is full of clever touches, and Mr. Flower has the gift of character drawing. The "thrill" is the natural outcome of the plot, and Kathlyn Williams exhibits surprising nerve in carrying out her part of the situation. Guy Oliver, Fred Hearn and Lillian Hayward have important roles. The picture has been skilfully directed by Frank Beal.

A SISTER TO CAINE (Lubin), March 23.—A review of this picture is printed on another page of this issue.

SEPARATING FROM SARAH (Essanay), March 21.—There is a deal of homely human nature in this two-reel photoplay, and the producer has treated it sincerely, except in one or two minor incidents. Florence Oberle, Harry Dunkinson and Charles J. Stine carry the burden of the acting. All three are excellent. Miss Oberle being especially commendable. The atmosphere of farm life is skilfully maintained, and many touches of natural comedy are found in the picture.

THE WITCH OF THE MOUNTAINS (Knickerbocker Star Feature), March 24.—A curious mixture of good dramatic material and wildly improbable incidents enter into this three-reel drama. The picture is overstocked with story, and is not always well played. Marguerite Nichols makes everything possible out of the character of Trixie, and Gordon Sackville and Corinne Grant act with intelligence and skill. The rest of the cast is not up to standard.

THE CRASH (Lubin), March 21.—All of the elements that go to make a successful photoplay are to be found in this two-reel drama, written and directed by Wilbert Melville. The story is ingenious and holds the interest from start to finish; the scenes are diversified and well produced, and the climax is reached through ever-quickening action. L. C. Shumway, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Robert Gray, J. H. Colby, Dorothy Barrett and Helen Eddy form a nicely balanced cast.

Bluebird Photoplay.

TANGLED HEARTS (Bluebird), April 2.—A domestic drama with an unusual and somewhat complex plot, which profits greatly by the engaging appearance and intelligent acting of Louis Lovely, Agnes Vernon and Marjorie Ellicon. The picture was well staged and carefully produced by Joseph De Grasse. A review appeared in the issue of April 1.

JOHN NEEDHAM'S DOUBLE (Bluebird), April 10.—Directed by the Smalleys, with Tyrone Power giving an excellent performance in a dual role, this is an unusually impressive and artistic picture. The production is practically flawless and the acting is uniformly efficient. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE BONDMAN (March 19).—A five-reel offering with William Farnum in the heroic role of Hall Caine's famous novel. It is an offering of merit both as entertainment and instruction. This is a picture that will be its own advertisement. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

TROUBLED WATERS (Vogue), March 19.—A slapstick comedy that will be found fairly amusing. Some very funny swimming scenes occur during the course of the play. Of course, as with the majority of slapstick comedies, it is not without its vulgar spots.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 64 (Mutual), March 23.—This number shows the U. S. S. "Prometheus" sailing with exposition relics to France and Italy, elephants hitched to snow plows clearing paths in Central Park, women students of the University of California doing outdoor gymnastic work, a prize model of the ship "Appam" on view, built by interned German sailors, and scenes showing the effects of Villa's bandit raids at Columbus, N. M.

ON THE RAMPAGE (Cub), March 24.—This farce comedy will be found to be an enjoyable one. It is elaborately set, and the fun is for the most part unobjectionable. George Ovey as Jerry impersonates a baron who is due at the home of a certain wealthy American for the purpose of becoming affianced to his daughter. The chase which takes place through the beautiful home with police, the baron proper and the guests at the reception in pursuit, is very funny.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 28 (Gaumont), March 26.—Palm Beach, Fla., is the subject of this number of the series. It is an unusually beautiful and interesting number, including golfing, motor boating, etc., about this attractive resort. A feature of this film is a thorough lesson in the manufacture of lace. On the same reel with "Signs of Spring," a comic cartoon.

SIGNS OF SPRING (Gaumont), March 26.—This is an interesting and timely cartoon by Harry Palmer. Spring is seen to appear and call forth the flowers, the birds, and even the tramps from their hiding places. Also Pa looks at his garden and sees abnormal vegetable developments of an imaginary nature. At the same time Ma looking into the garden sees nothing but spring millinery.

DEVILISH BUSINESS (Vogue), March 26.—This comic number, by Thos. Delmar, pictures the devil and his imps in hades. The scenes are cleverly pictured, though they may shock orthodox religious people somewhat. The story itself is harmless enough, being a sort of burlesque on "Faust." An entertaining novelty.

THE SNOW SHOVELER'S SWEETHEART (Falstaff), March 30.—Frances Keyes, Harry Bates and Jay C. Yorke are the players in this amusing comedy. The snow shoveler was once a photographer whose luck turned because of his peculiar manner of making people look either short and broad, or tall and slim, amusingly abnormal. So a snow shoveler he becomes, and gains the consent of his sweetheart's father to their marriage by an act of bravery while shovelling snow in front of the old man's home.

JERRY AND THE SMUGGLERS (Cub), March 31.—A clean and intensely amusing comedy in which Jerry, becoming accidentally the possessor of a package belonging to a detective, dons the disguise it contains, and takes a position as cook in the family to which a note found therewith directs him. What happened when Jerry took up his abode in this house will be found very entertaining.

BUMBLE'S JOB (Beauty), April 2.—Orral Humphrey plays the male lead in this picture which may be considered a very good comedy. Bumble is a poor school teacher with a large family. He is discharged for allowing a child that is supposed to have measles to come into the school. In search of a job he obtains one as teacher in a young lady's boarding school. Some funny scenes occur in the swimming pool, gymnasium, etc. Most audiences would like this film.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE BRUISER (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe American) (No. 84), March 23.—This five-part production made at the studios of the American Film Co. is one of the best of the series. It will be found to be well produced, and a stirring labor play in which a number of bouts in the prize ring are fought. William Russell plays the role of the big leader of the factory men, and the champion of the ring in a splendid manner, while Charlotte Burton playing opposite him in the simple role of the sister of a factory hand, and Lizette Thorn as the daughter of the factory owner with nothing to do but look to her own pleasure, are equally attractive. An excellent number.

THE HIDDEN LAW (Centaur), March 25.—A five-reel subject, featuring Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson, John Oaker and others. The scenes are laid in the West, the chief character being an author and playwright who has been robbed by an eastern manager. He adopts a small girl after her parents' death and raises her. Later he gets returns on his literary work. The story itself is quite pleasing in certain respects, but it is considerably drawn out and has no particular strength of presentation. It would have been much stronger in two or three reels.

THE LOVE LIAR (Centaur), March 27.—A five-reel number, featuring Crane Wilbur, Mae Gaston, Lucy Payton, Nan Christy and others. Mr. Wilbur gives quite an interesting study of the artistic temperament. He plays the part of an impressionable young violinist who falls madly in love with every pretty woman he meets. The last one, a cabaret dancer, throws him over, and he shoots himself. The love of Diana, whom he married and divorced, remains with him through all his affairs and lends a sympathetic touch to the story. The photography seemed a little hazy in certain scenes. The offering is quite strong as a whole; the suicide scene is very melodramatic.

FEAR (Thanhouser), March 29.—A three-reel number, by Lloyd Lonergan, featuring M. M. Mitchell, Bob Walker and Peggy Burke. This is somewhat grewsome, particularly in the latter scenes, yet splendidly handled. It shows how a young grocer's wife runs off with his assistant; also a fortune in money. The wife then proves untrue to the assistant and casts him off. The assistant, still possessing the money, becomes haunted by fear and keeps recalling an old gypsy's prophecy that he would die at the hands of the man he robbed. The casket feature will bring shivers to some observers, but the moral of the piece gives it appeal. The conception has a touch of Poe in it.

THE RANGER OF LONESOME GULCH (Mustang), March 31.—A nicely produced story of a young western girl whose first novel becomes a great success. Her call to the east to attend to details concerning its publication gives an opportunity for the entry of the villain, who is finally put to rout by the sturdy ranger, and is forced to board the train for the east again at the point of the revolver. Anna Little, Tom Chatterton and Jack Richardson play the principal roles. An unusually attractive three-part number with considerable comedy mixed in.

THE HAUNTED MANOR (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe Gaumont) (No. 89), April 3.—Made at the Gaumont studios and featuring Iva Shepard this five-part production suffers not as much from the quality of the story, which by the way has considerable merit, as from lack of care in its development. The story treats of how an American adventuress gets into the clutches of an Indian Rajah, and is pursued by him to America where she has gone to marry a man whom she has learned to love. Her husband falls in love with another girl, and in order that he be free to marry the girl she hides in a secret apartment in a haunted manor where they go to live. When her husband and the girl are arrested as murder suspects she decides to show herself. The story as told is somewhat jumbled, the main thread having been burdened with minor incidents. Gertrude Robinson does good work in the film.

OH! OH! OH! HENERY! (Thanhouser).—April 4.—An intensely amusing two-part comedy showing how the faithful wife is deceived, and how the jealous wife undergoes needless hours of misery through the conjurings of her imagination. This number will be much enjoyed by old and young.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 22, 1916, March 11.—Interesting items of this issue are the herds of caribou driven from the mountaintops by the snow storms into the Mammoth Hot Springs Valley in Yellowstone Park, Wyoming, a contest at the Ascot Speedway, Los Angeles for the 100-mile sweepstakes, children entered in the Baby Contest at Chicago, and the U. S. Troops crossing the border into Mexico in pursuit of Villa, also some views in Columbus, N. M., showing havoc done by the Villa bandits.

THE RED CIRCLE, NO. 14 (Balboa), March 18.—The last of this series is entitled "Judgment Day." In it June is brought up for trial for the theft of the papers from Farwell's office. The spirit of "Circle" Jim appears to her with a suggestion that she try to overcome the influence of the Red Circle by will power. This she succeeds in doing, and at the close of the episode becomes the wife of Lamar.

THE WOMAN'S LAW (Gold Rooster Play), March 21.—An unusually attractive five-part production featuring Florence Reed, supported by Duncan McRae. The picture is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Maravene Thompson and was adapted to the screen by Harvey Thew of the Motion Picture News and Albert S. LeVino. The story is out of the ordinary in design, and has been skilfully handled by Lawrence B. McGill of the Arrow Film Corporation. It treats of how a woman, for the sake of her child, rescues her husband from being branded as a murderer by substituting his double, a man of unsound mind whom she has found by accident in the park. Her husband escapes and hides, and the other man is found insane by the authorities and placed in an asylum for the insane.

Signal Film Corporation.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME, NO. 14 (Signal), March 27.—"Helen's Race with Time" is an excellent number of the series. The thrill in this number consists of a series of incidents in which Helen, in a successful attempt to avoid a collision between a passenger train and a freight, rides by auto to a certain bridge where she swings in most daring fashion from the bridge's edge by her hands, drops on the top of the train, uncouples one of the cars, and is later picked up with a sprained ankle from the roadside where she has leaped.

Triangle Film Corp.

GYPSY JOE (Keystone), March 19.—A mildly amusing story, featuring Joe Jackson. It is bound to excite some laughter, but it lacks the ingenuity and dash of the regular Sennet farce.

THE HABIT OF HAPPINESS (Fine Arts), April 2.—A fairly good story written to exploit the lively Douglas Fairbanks. A bright idea and handled fairly well, but lacking in story illusion.

THE WAIFS (Kay-Bee), April 2.—A story of the upward struggle of two failures, one of poor environment, the other a victim of the drink habit, to an improved condition and artistic conclusion.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

CAUGHT ON A SKYSCRAPER (L-KO), April 2.—This two-reel number begins with park flirtations and some breezy mixups in an apartment house. The woman sleepwalker invades a man's room at night and goes to an empty bed. Her husband later discovers her there. This is accomplished without any great offense. The sleep walker, impersonated by May Emory, does some really sensational stunts later, traversing the edge of a high roof and crossing between two tall buildings. This is a very diversified number and makes a good offering of the low comedy type.

TWO MEN OF SANDY BAR (Red Feather Photoplay), April 3.—A five-reel production, adapted carefully by Olga Printzlaw from a story by Bret Harte. Hobart Bosworth plays the part of John Oakhurst, Chas. H. Hickman appears as Col. Starbottle and others parts fall to Frank MacQuarrie, Gretchen Lederer and Jean Taylor. This is from one of the best known stories by the famous Western writer and it carries a fine lot of the atmosphere to be expected. It is a very complicated story, in all of its windings, but follows clearly enough from scene to scene. What it lacks in dramatic interest is almost entirely due to the necessity for covering so much ground. It has some excellent character work and is superior to the average Western production in nearly every way, except perhaps in dramatic strength.

THE QUEEN OF THE PROPHETS (Universal—Special Feature). April 3.—No. 17 of the "Graft" series. In this number Robert Harding, impersonated by Richard Stanton, is mayor of the city. The political gangsters, led by Boss Mead and Stanford Stone, attempt to kill him, but Dorothy and another friend come to his aid. The installment is not so sensational as some previous ones, but carries the interest well. The fall of the platform at the close makes a good feature.

FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE AND ROSIE (L-KO), April 5.—A three-reel prize fight offering, done in burlesque comedy fashion. H. Pathe Lehrmann, Louise Orth and Dan Russell shoulder the chief responsibilities and succeed in getting much laughter. The trouble comes up when a Jewish family invite in an Irishman to help eject an unwelcome guest. The Irishman clears the premises, but then refuses to leave himself, having fallen in love with the daughter of the house. His chief rival returns and they finally meet in the prize ring. This will please fight fans mightily. A good offering of the low comedy type.

THE EYES OF FEAR (Laemmle), April 6.—A two-reel drama, by Hugh Johnson, featuring Elsie Jane Wilson, Rupert Julian, Yona Landowski and others. The scenes occur at Panama and carry the tropic atmosphere successfully. There is also a good tension in the murder scenes and those immediately following. The plot is not so obvious as often happens and is accordingly above the average in interest. A well-constructed and appealing number.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

HOW TIMES DO CHANGE (Nestor), April 3.—A comedy number, by Aaron E. Bishop, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Ethel Lynn and Billie Rhodes. The two men get their watches mixed up, with the accompanying pictures, which leads to amusing complications. This makes a pleasing light subject.

A LITTLE FRAUD (Victor), April 5.—Mary Fuller appears in this as the niece of an old miser. After his death she dresses as a boy and comes back to search the premises for her uncle's money. She is captured by the new owner, who later discovers her deception. The plot is slight. This is fairly strong.

A LEAP YEAR TANGLE (Nestor), April 7.—A college comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Betty Compson and others. The settings, cast and photography are good, but there is little if any plot. This does not average up with this company's usual offerings.

THE SILENT VOICE (Rex), April 7.—This number, by J. G. Alexander, features Ben Wilson, Irene Hunt, Charles Ogle and Edna Pendleton. The neglected wife of the young doctor comes home from the ball with another. She is discovered dining in a cafe with her escort by the husband. The plot is familiar but pleasingly handled in this instance. The close is a happy one.

HIS HIGHNESS, THE JANITOR (Joker), April 8.—A laughable low comedy number, written by Gale Henry. The author and Wm. Franey play leading parts. The janitor poses as a nobleman, on invitation, but his plebian nature gives itself away in an amusing fashion. A good number of the kind.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 23 (Vitagraph), March 21.—War scenes, Saloniki; collecting army mules, Yarmouth Junction, Maine; Fashions; logging with tractor in Maine; sinking the burning steamship Herman Winters, Portland, Maine; services over dead soldiers, Columbus, N. M.; General Bertani; U. S. troops crossing the border; camp scenes at Columbus; Krazy Kat and Ignatz Mouse cartoon, "Demi-Tasse."

THE TWO-EDGED SWORD (Vitagraph), March 27.—A distinctly appealing picture, starring Edith Storey, supported by Evart Overton, Josephine Earle and Robert Gaillard. The human qualities in this drama, written by L. Case Russell and E. V. Brewster, were emphasized by sincere acting. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

World Film Corporation.

THE STRUGGLE (Equitable), March 27.—Scenes showing the sinking of an ocean liner are finely handled by Director John Ince in this five-part picture, made from a scenario by Harry Chandlee. It is altogether an interesting photoplay, reviewed on another page of this issue.

THE HAND OF PERIL (Paragon), March 27.—Director Maurice Tourneur increased the value of a melodramatic story by unusual settings. Especially able performances are given by House Peters and Ralph Delmore. A review appears elsewhere in this issue.

Miscellaneous.

AUSTRIA AT WAR (Raver), March.—Two reels of official war pictures showing the activities of all branches of the Austrian army. While there is little actual warfare in this offering, an audience interested in the European conflict will find the scenes instructive.

DRIFTWOOD (Raver), March.—A strong adaptation of Owen Davis's drama, produced under the direction of Marshal Farnum with Vera Michelena heading the cast, supported by Harry Spingler and Charles Graham. A review may be found in the issue of April 1.

THE FORTUNATE YOUTH (Raver), March.—The whimisical spirit of William J. Locke is not evident in this version of his story, made by the Ocean Film Corporation; but the picture has some good points in the plot and the manner of its presentation.

HEARST-VITAGRAPH NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 24, 1916 (Vitagraph), March 24.—War scenes, Saloniki, Greece; wreck of German airship; snow storm in London; 40 horse team hauling 60-ton cable, San Francisco; Congressman Thomas E. Schall; Giants at Marlin, Texas; Boy Scouts, Washington, have Field Day; fashions; burning old sleeping cars, Richmond, Cal.; U. S. Troops leaving Columbus, N. M.; on the desert trail; cartoon, Krazy to the Rescue.

MORE TERRITORY GONE ON E. AND R. JUNGLE COMEDIES.

F. H. Emmich, located on Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco, California, has purchased the exclusive rights for the product of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company on the west coast. This sale, coming close on the heels of the E. and R. contract with the Celebrated Players Exchange, Chicago, Ill., seems to prove beyond a doubt the drawing power of these one-reel comedies, featuring Napoleon and Sally, the chimpanzees.

Mrs. G. Vere Tyler

ANOTHER of the well-known authors who has lately yielded to the call of the screen is Mrs. G. Vere Tyler, psychological fictionist and essayist. The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is now making a feature film, with Mary Fuller in the lead, of her novelette "The Huntress," and the Bosworth Company has just purchased the picture rights to her novelette "The Wax Model" which attracted wide attention when it was published in The Smart Set a few months ago.

Mrs. G. Vere Tyler.

Mrs. Tyler's latest novel is "The Daughter of a Rebel," of which she is now making a scenario. Other stories by her are, "The Progenitress"; "Dregs in the Cup"; "The Diary of an Unconscious Eve," etc.

With her entrance into the picture field Mrs. Tyler has come forth with some rather original views, greatly at variance with the utterances and opinions of directors. She claims that the time has come for authors to make scenarios of their ideas not, as has been hitherto deemed advisable, synopses only. She says:

"Just what the effect of the screen picture will have upon the fictionist has certainly not yet been determined. It is a new mode of writing for him, one that he has yet to perfect himself in. I believe the writer can profit by forming pictures with the pen for the eye as well as for the brain, and that the time has come for him to make his own scenarios.

"There is no inspiration in merely writing a synopsis of a graphic theme. To have the idea presented at its best, one should live it out in detail and arrange his pictures, as well as he can, for the director. What I mean is, he should show his picture in full and not a fragment of it to be filled in by someone else.

"The screen must be made to offer the writer a more elastic medium of expression than the printed page for great imaginative ideas, and a recognition of this on the part of those at the head of these great enterprises, would certainly, in my estimation, advance their own screen anticipation of surpassing all past methods of presenting ideas. In other words, the directors should come to the conclusion it is best to encourage rather than discourage authors, to make their own scenarios."

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE RACE" (Lasky).

Victor Moore, the clever Lasky comedian, supported by Anita King, the Paramount Girl, in the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's production of "The Race," a thrilling comedy drama founded upon Miss King's recent transcontinental automobile trip, which she made absolutely alone, will be released April 6.

Scene from "The Race" (Lasky).

"The Race," a Paramount Picture, has to do with the adventures of Jimmie Grayson, the frivolous son of a wealthy automobile manufacturer.

In addition to Anita King are Victor Moore, surrounded by a cast of unusual excellence, including such prominent actors as Robert Bradbury, William Dale, Horace B. Carpenter, Mrs. Louis McCord, Jane Wolf and other members of the Lasky all-star organization.

"THE SLEUTHS" (Vim).

"The Sleuths" is a laughable burlesque comedy in the "Pokes and Jabbs" series, to be released by Vim Company on General Film Program April 14. The comedy is of the slapstick order, but characteristic of the Vims, it contains a story. The plot centers about the disappearance of a huge diamond from the forehead of an Arab god. The Sheik prepares for a battle, and assisted by some Arab friends, he reaches a Mystic in the city of "Pokes and Jabbs." The crystal globe of the Mystic aids the vengesome Sheik, and he recovers the gem. The Sleuths, notified of the loss of the gem by the thieves, from whom the Sheik has secured it, go in pursuit of the Arabs, finding them altogether too soon for the comfort of the Sleuths.

Scene from "The Sleuths" (Vim).

The comedy is a burlesque on East Indian and Egyptian dramas; the opening scenes are gorgeous in their settings; easily deceiving anyone into believing that heavy drama was being presented. With the appearance of Pokes and Jabbs, the fun begins and grows to the end. Burns and Stull, as Pokes and Jabbs, are presenting some of the biggest comedies on the screen today, their characteristic being new ideas and fresh situations of fun. Vim comedies are growing in popularity and are always true to their principle of stories interwoven with the slapstick action.

"THE SPELL OF THE KNIFE" (Knickerbocker).

The Knickerbocker Star Feature release for April 21 will be a strong, psychological three-act drama, founded on the principle of inheritance. The drama will have a strong, popular appeal, and moves forward with stirring and growing appeal. A young woman inherits a longing to kill, the sight of a knife under all circumstances acts as a lure to urge her to crime. During all the spell she fights valiantly with the strength of character which she possesses. Her battles against her inner craving furnishes some powerful dramatic situations and holds with a firm grip to the last flash. Margaret Landis, a popular screen star, is featured, while she is supported in the lead by Richard Johnson. Madeline Pardee, the heavy lead, supported by Charles Dudly, have a rare chance in this drama for the exercise of their unsually heavy types of action. "The Spell of the Knife" will be a strong feature in the General Film Service for April 21, and is in three acts.

Scene from "The Spell of the Knife" (Knickerbocker).

NANCE O'NEIL IN "THE TOILERS."

Nance O'Neil, the eminent emotional star heading a company of Lubin photoplayers under the direction of Edgar Lewis, left Philadelphia in a special train Sunday for Franklin, Pa. The journey is in search of atmosphere and flavor for the photoplay story "The Toilers" by Daniel Carson Goodman which is being made into a multiple-reel feature for the Lubin Company by Edgar Lewis. The theme of "The Toilers" is described by the author as an admixture of love, oil and money.

The interior scenes for the opening chapter called for unusually elaborate settings and have already been taken at the Philadelphia studios. The story subsequently shifts to the Pennsylvania regions and it is there that Edgar Lewis has transported Nance O'Neil and her supporting company of photoplayers to get the benefit of exterior settings more realistic than could be accomplished by the genius of stage carpentering.

"THE CONSCIENCE OF JOHN DAVID" (Horsley).

Crane Wilbur, who has been starring so successfully in David Horsley productions during the past six months, will have as his next vehicle a psychological drama written by himself entitled "The Conscience of John David." The picturization has been made in five parts and is scheduled for release as a Mutual Masterpicture on April 24.

For this appearance Mr. Wilbur has selected an unusual and an exceptionally interesting subject. The theme is that man's better self always rises to its proper sphere, no matter his preceding state, through the influence of conscience. The treatment given it makes an absorbing and convincing story, in which tense dramatic situations are happily blended with the lighter moments of charm. The principal character is John David.

The character of John David is portrayed by Mr. Wilbur in his most impressive manner. His supporting acting cast, including Alice Rinaldo, Frederick Montague, John Oaker, Mae Gaston, Louis Durham and Francis Raymond, also lends fine effort, so that from the standpoint of acting, as in its other phases, the picture is all that can be desired.

A most sumptuous production, embracing the use of a number of elaborate scenes, together with ideal outdoor locations, lends proper atmosphere to the play.

"THE HAUNTED MANOR" READY FOR SCREEN.

"The Haunted Manor" will be the first Mutual Masterpicture, de Luxe Edition, to reach the screen from the Gaumont studios in April. With Miss Iva Shepard as its star, it will be first seen April 3. This photodrama of East Indian and American life has been directed by Edwin Middleton at Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla. Being a five-reel feature, there is sufficient time to establish the atmosphere of the orient in the earlier reels of the photodrama and then to develop fully the part of the story which transpires in the United States.

Miss Shepard has an enviable record for roles that border upon that of the "vampire." In "The Haunted Manor," the author, O. A. Nelson, has given a new twist to the character of the woman who has after a fashion preyed upon society.

The Gaumont company has drawn upon the full strength of its several stock companies now wintering at Jacksonville, Fla., for the principals supporting Miss Shepard. Prominent roles were assigned Earl O. Schenck, Henry W. Pemberton, Mathilde Baring, Olive Trevor, William H. Hopkins, Robert Clugston, James Levering, Mary G. Davis, John Mackin and Harry Chira. The scenic investiture is true to life, great care having been exercised in the building of the street of the East Indian village where some of the most important scenes take place.

EXCHANGE LIKES "SOCIAL PIRATES."

Following the initial showing of "The Social Pirates" on St. Patrick's day in New Orleans, Manager Morrow, of the General Film Exchange in that city, felt so enthusiastic that he had to sit down and write a telegram to the Kalem Company. The message read: "First two instalments 'Social Pirates' received screen inspection. Proves this series unquestionably a winner. Undoubtedly best two-reel pictures ever witnessed by me. Placing order today for one more print each episode. Rush complete list advertising aids available. Your company deserves great credit for this series. Could not be better.

"H. G. MORROW."

"THE FOLLY OF SIN" (Great Northern).

On about April 2 the Great Northern Film Company, 110 West 40th street, New York, will release its next production, entitled "The Folly of Sin." This is a five-part production, masterfully staged and magnificently enacted by Miss Joan Paterson, the charming and fascinating screen artiste, and Messrs. Charles Wieth and George Tolway.

Dr. Ratton and Dr. Felix, two young physicians, are studiously working to produce a serum for the cure of cancer. Dr. Felix secretly envies Dr. Hatton's personality and social conquests, while the latter is jealous of the other's more advanced work. Hatton conceives a plan to divert his colleague's mind from his work by getting him interested in society and Margaret, a charming orphan. He carries out the plan of his mephistophelian master, resulting in the latter's complete triumph, and his own downfall.

TO MAKE "THE WOMAN WHO DARED."

"The Woman Who Dared" is to be the second of the California Motion Picture Corporation's "Better-than-Program" features. The story is by C. N. and A. M. Williamson and Miss Beatriz Michelena is the star. In Miss Michelena's support there will appear a number of the able actors who scored so decisively with her in "The Unwritten Law." The feature is just now being completed at the company's studios in San Rafael, Cal., and it is expected, will be ready for the market some time early in May. Like "The Unwritten Law" it will be distributed on the States Rights basis.

CELEBRATED PLAYERS SIGN FOR E. AND R. JUNGLE COMEDIES.

The Celebrated Players Exchange, Wabash avenue, Chicago, have signed contracts with the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, whereby the purchaser receives the sole rights to market the E. and R. output in the states of Illinois and Indiana. The E. and R. produces one reel comedies featuring the chimpanzees, Napoleon and Sally, and the salesmen of the Celebrated Players believe they have obtained a quick selling article in those pictures.

"THEN I'LL COME BACK TO YOU" (World).

"Then I'll Come Back to You," the World-Frohman film, just completed under the direction of George Irving, has its atmospheric alma mater at Pensacola, North Carolina, one of the really ante-bellum towns of the South. Pensacola, where the entire film was staged, lies thirty-four miles from a junction point on what is known as "The Clinchfield Route," which road, thirty miles in length, is owned by one man, a Dr. Aldridge, and the use of this entire railroad was granted to the Frohman Company. A half built bridge a number of lumber and logging camps, mining enterprises, located in the hills around Pensacola, the shacks and residences of the natives were given over to the film folks with a free hand by Dr. Aldridge, who owns solely every industrial enterprise in the city. The town boasts thirty-four houses and each house became the temporary home of one of the Equitable players. Alice Brady, the star of the piece, occupied a room in a log house. The room was a simple lumber foreman's living room, fixed up for the distinguished visitor.

The strongest man in the city, measuring over six feet five inches in height was prevailed upon to play the role of a bully and consented to fight a fistic battle with Jack Sherrill, who played one of the roles opposite Miss Brady. The battle between Sherrill and the giant proved to be one of the most spectacular ever filmed and adds interest to a wonderful fifth reel.

The entire railroad, the mills, mines, bridges and other natural atmospheric incidents were used by Director Irving, with the result that a perfectly produced tale with numerous incidents of more than passing interest resulted.

As the picture was nearing completion, the townspeople of Pensacola peitioned Mr. Irving to allow them to see the picture when it was completed. In return for the numerous courtesies of the people and Dr. Aldridge, the picture will be shown at Pensacola next week at a private performance in the Baptist Church there.

A complete gas projection equipment will be taken to Pensacola by Fred Steel of the Equitable. There are no film shows at Pensacola—only one drug store, a company store, one church, a drygoods store, and no saloons. Soda water is sold there on Monday and Friday of each week. The postmaster, "eighty years old and never been on a durned railroad train," to quote him, says more mail was received at the post office for the actors during the three weeks they were there than in the history of the place.

"Then I'll Come Back to You," based on Larry Evans' story of the same name, will be the regular release on the World-Equitable program April 3. It is in five acts, four hundred scenes, and required two hundred players in all, including thirty principals.

EDWARD SLEMAN TO DIRECT AMERICANS.

Edward Sleman, who recently left the Lubin Company to go to Santa Barbara to produce for the American Company (Mutual), was born in London, England, and was educated there. His talent is not entirely uninherited, for his mother's name was Belasco and she was a cousin of David Belasco.

He made his first appearance on the stage at his mother's persuasion, in London, playing at the Pavilion in the Mile End Road. After several seasons playing stock in and around London, he came to America and played in the dramatic version of Parsifal taking the part of the King. He was featured in "The Wolf," for two seasons and acted the part of the dope fiend in Clyde Fitch's "The City" and took a prominent part in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird." "The Fortune Hunter" and other plays.

He was well known in stock companies in Hartford, Hamilton, Ontario, and Gloversville and other towns and went over the "big time" with Hylda Hollis in a vaudeville sketch. After a season with Eva Tanguay's road show he came west and joined the Universal Company as a director. Mr. Sleman is to direct Franklin Ritchie and Winnifred Greenwood in features.

SECRET SERVICE WORK IN MUTUAL SUBJECT.

One phase of our government that always stirs our imagination is the Secret Service. So little is known about its mysterious workings it never fails to arouse our curiosity to the highest pitch. The dangers encountered by the Secret Service agents furnish thrill after thrill. In the stirring American Mutual three-part drama, "The Code of Honor," the methods employed by Secret Service agents in protecting the national diplomatic secrets are faithfully depicted. The story treats of two officers of the ordnance department, who are perfecting plans on a new type of submarine. These plans are sought by the spies of a foreign nation.

Alfred Vosburgh as Captain Frank Marvin makes an excellent hero. He is dignified and stately in the early scenes, while during the time he is under suspicion he plays his role with a repression worthy of commendation. Frank Brozage is splendid as the weak officer who succumbs to the wiles of Zena, delightfully played by pretty Vivian Rich. Estella Allan makes a charming Ruth. The cast and settings are exceptional for a three-part photodrama.

CHANGE OF DATES FOR GAUMONT FEATURES.

Announcement was recently made that "The Quality of Faith" would be released by Gaumont April 17 as a Mutual Masterpicture, de luxe edition. Since then, however, such progress has been made with "Feathertop," the Marguerite Courtot production, that it has been decided to yield to the demand of exhibitors that this little star be seen on the screen in April. Hence, "The Quality of Faith" has been assigned to May first, and "Feathertop" will take its place.

"THE SPIDER'S WEB" (Essanay).

This is an unusually dramatic story of a youth's battle to break the chains of the drink and later of the drug habit. It is the story of the intrigue of an ambitious doctor who stoops at nothing, not even to the ruining of a life, to gain his ambitions. The play is taken from the novelette written by Clarence L. Cullen. The situations are intense throughout and grips the attention with its interest and action. The play has an unusually strong cast, including Bryant Washburn, Elizabeth Burbridge, John Junior and John Lorenz. Mr. Washburn is an adept at playing the part of a slave to drugs and vividly brings out the horrors of the youth subject to the habit. Mr. Washburn takes the part of the son of a wealthy man who is the hero of his chums at college. Being of an intense nature, the habit gets a hold on him. He throws it off, however, after leaving school and is making a steady progress in business, so much so that his father's assistant, the doctor, fears for his own position and decides to put him out of the way. Knowing the young man's character he lures him into taking a drink again and then innoculates him with the drug. After doing this several times the drug gets a hold on the victim and he sinks rapidly until he is disowned by his father. Then comes to his aid his former chum, his sister and his sweetheart. They persuade him to go to the woods where, after defeating other treacherous attempts of his rival to prevent his recovery, he is restored to health. He finally sees through the treachery of his supposed friend, realizes his own weakness and so places a guard on himself that safeguards him from another downfall.

"ALONG THE BORDER" (Selig).

"Along the Border" is a Selig western drama written and produced by Tom Mix, and released in General Film Service on April 8. This story is particularly timely because of the recent depredations of Mexican bandits on the border line.

Grace, daughter of Jim Williams, a ranch owner, and Tom Martin, a Texas ranger, love one another. Buck Miller is the disappointed rival in love. Buck swears to be revenged and plans with Delgado, a Mexican outlaw, to capture Grace and her father and hold them for ransom. How Grace makes a sensational escape, how she informs Tom and his pals of the outlaw's action, and how Tom and the boys rescue Grace's father after the capture of Delgado and his outlaw band aid in the unfolding of a most sensational drama.

Tom Mix is given an opportunity to perform many of his sensational and death defying feats. Interesting scenes in New Mexico near the international border line are shown.

"THE WINNING PUNCH" (Cub).

The prize ring is the subject pictured for merry-making purposes in "The Winning Punch," the Cub Comedy scheduled for release April 7 on the Mutual program. It offers plenty of opportunity for comedy all of which Director Milton Fahrney has realized by giving his story some clever twists in burlesque, leading to many surprising situations.

The principal figure is Jerry, a busy little fellow always inclined toward getting into trouble. He has a series of adventures one afternoon but fortunately escapes without dire results. In passing the town hall a posted advertisement informs him that a fighter is to appear that night and that all comers are welcomed. A big prize is offered to anyone who can subdue "The Terrible Swede" as the fighter is billed.

Scene from "The Winning Punch" (Cub).

Picturing himself the winner over "The Terrible Swede" and thereby meriting the reward, Jerry decides to make a try for the purse.

The fight staged by George Ovey as Jerry and George George as "The Terrible Swede" is said to be one of the funniest scenes ever made for the screen. The fun is not confined to this particular instance, however, but runs throughout the entire one thousand feet.

A big cast of comedians support Ovey including, besides Geo. George, such players as Jefferson Osborne, Louis FitzRoy, Arthur Mund, Arthur Jackson, Gordon McGregor and Hazel Cole.

CURRENT E. AND R. COMEDY RELEASES.

The three current releases of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, "Haunted," "Stung," and "Two Chimps and a Chump," set a high water mark in the production of animal comedy. Napoleon and Sally, the chimpanzee comedains, appear to unusually good advantage in each of the trio of pictures. The various exchanges handling the E. and R. product have acknowledged their belief that these comedies will prove even more popular than the previous productions of the same company.

"THE REAPERS" (Equitable).

When the Triumph Film Corporation engaged John Mason for appearance in "The Reapers," Clara Whipple was selected to play the principal role opposite him. Two reasons compelled this selection. Mr. Mason is a tremendous and virile actor and as the parts of Albert and Rhita Jordan in the story called for an equal amount of emotion acting and again, the policy of the Equitable company to blend stage and screen favorites. The story told by "The Reapers" requires a stronger and more forceful style of emotional work than either Mr. Mason or Miss Whipple have experienced within the recent past. For four reels the two stars maintain a height of emotion and expression that required, not only acting ability, but a great store of physical strength. As Rhita Jordan, Clara Whipple deserts Albert Jordan (John Mason) after he is struck by an automobile and becomes a paralytic. She flees with a former admirer. Her despicable act irates her abandoned husband. His mental anguish makes his physical frailty more emphatic. Then comes mind healing. The superiority of mentality over matter. Albert Jordan, by a supreme effort, aided by the love of his child and hearing her cry of distress when the kitchen stove explodes, is cured. He secures his former excellent position and soon becomes a factor. Later he encounters his former wife. She is an inmate of a disreputable dance hall. He gives her one glimpse of the now grown and beautiful daughter—then places her in a nunnery. The story closes with a popular appeal, after a series of gigantic dramatic climaxes and powerful situations.

Joan Morgan, a remarkable English child actress, supports the two stars admirably. "The Reapers" will be released on the Equitable program April 3.

"THE YELLOW MENACE" (Serial Film).

Edwin Stevens, Florence Malone, Marguerite Gale and twenty others have left for Jacksonville, Fla., to begin a production of a sixteen episode serial picture, entitled "The Yellow Menace," under the direction of Aubrey Kennedy. The picture will be sponsored by the Serial Film Company, of which William Steiner is general manager. A newspaper serial story will be made of this picture by Lewis Tracy, the well-known English novelist, who wrote "The Wings of the Morning," "Captain of the Kansas" and other popular novels.

MERIT FILM MOVES.

To meet its increasing business and to better serve the motion picture exhibitors of the State of New York and Northern New Jersey, The Merit Film Corporation has removed from its present offices at 110 West 40th street, to the Leavitt Building, 126 to 130 West 46th street, New York City.

"A SOCIAL DECEPTION" (Selig).

"A Social Deception" is a Selig multiple reel feature produced by T. N. Heffron from the story written by Grace M. Cooke, and released through General Film Service on Monday, March 27. There are featured in this production such stars as Harry Mestayer, Eugene Besserer, James Bradbury, Al W. Filson and Vivian Reed. It is a society drama with a most absorbing plot, and contains beautiful photography. There is an unusual surprise perpetrated in the closing scenes, which will be pleasant to photoplay fans.

How Violet Rensselear believes herself to be a thief through the plot of Carter, who later is discovered to be a man of great wealth, and how he wins the love of Violet, contributes to a most excellent story.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 65 RICH IN WAR NEWS.

The present pursuit of Villa on Mexican territory is of consuming interest to all Americans. The Mutual Weekly had a cameraman at Columbus, N. M., a few hours after the Villa raid. He pictured the results of that barbaric foray in Mutual Weekly No. 64. Before the censorship was established he also secured valuable scenes of the American army on the move. These are now shown in Mutual Weekly No. 65. The most important of the series on this reel were taken at Columbus. They show the funeral for U. S. troopers killed in the raid, the troops entering Mexico, and the preparations of the Second Battalion, U. S. Army Engineers, before crossing the border. Among the interesting army men pictured in this number are Col. Herbert J. Slocum, 13th U. S. Cavalry; General John J. Pershing, leading the pursuit at the head of the Seventh and Tenth U. S. Cavalry; Colonel C. W. Taylor, commander of Fort Bliss, and Lieutenant-Colonel E. V. Smith, Sixth U. S. Infantry.

Fort Sam Houston furnishes views of the Third Cavalry leaving for the front. At San Antonio, Tex., the aeroplane squadron is seen breaking camp to join General Pershing. Monterey, Cal., sends pictures of the First Cavalry leaving for service in Mexico. At Hartford, Conn., is seen the new U. S. Dirigible DN-1, inflated for the first time.

Among the other pictures on this reel is one of Mr. Leon Gaumont, head of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, taken upon his arrival from Paris in New York on a visit to his American properties and to meet President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

"ALICE IN WONDERLAND" (Union).

The six-reel feature of "Alice in Wonderland" is a picture no one should miss. It features Viola Savoy as Alice and Herbert Rice as the rabbit. Alice falls asleep with her head on her sister's lap on the bank of the river and from there to the end the interest never lags, in fact, from the moment Alice disappears down the hole beneath the hedge after the White Rabbit, and floats gently down the well, two hours of infinite delight await those who look at the screen upon which "Alice in Wonderland" is projected. To the last detail, "Alice in Wonderland" has been done with the utmost fidelity to the charming whimsical text of Lewis Carroll, and the delightful drawings of Sir John Tenniel.

"THE NE'ER-DO-WELL" BREAKING RECORDS ON THE COAST.

Sol Lesser, who is handling "The Ne'er-Do-Well" through his own film exchanges on the Pacific Coast, advises that the reports he is receiving from his branch managers surpass anything he anticipated. "I felt confident of big results," said Lesser, "knowing that 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' was one of the biggest productions in recent years, and I thought 'The Spoilers' which I handled in this territory would hold the record for some time to come, but the volume and length of the bookings and the return engagements on 'The Ne'er-Do-Well' have eclipsed this record."

Trade News of the Week

Gathered by Our Own Correspondents

For Fund in Pittsburgh

Screen Club Actors' Fund Committee Has Plans for a Lively Campaign to Accomplish Its Part of the Great Work—Big Sunday Entertainment—Percentage Contributed on Fund Day—A Theater Ticket Day.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—The Screen Club's Actors' Fund Committee, of which A. W. Cross is chairman and Capt. A. H. McClelland is secretary, is rapidly perfecting its plans for the campaign. The strenuous efforts of the committee, coupled with the hearty co-operation of the trade in this city and surrounding territory, indicates that the Pittsburgh Screen Club is determined to carry off the laurels in the race for the largest contribution.

The following are some of the methods that promise a big return, and the Pittsburgh dailies, as well as all local newspapers in the surrounding towns, are lending their support in furthering them:

First—A Sunday entertainment, at which a silver collection will be taken, proceeds to be given to the fund. The pictures to be supplied by the exchanges for this purpose, free of charge.

Second—A percentage of business on a certain day to be popularized by advertising slides, newspapers, etc.

Third—A certain Saturday to be selected for the sale of theater tickets on the streets, similar to "Tag Day," the proceeds to go to the fund.

Two Reopenings in Canonsburg.

Canonsburg, Pa.—Two modern photoplay theaters are to be reopened in the near future at Canonsburg, Pa. The Lyric is being extensively remodeled by its new owner, E. F. McGann. With a new heating system installed, in addition to other improvements, the Lyric will be one of the most attractive houses in its section. It was closed last December. The Lyric was built about three years ago and met with only indifferent success, owing mainly to its location away from the center of the town. The building up of that district recently makes conditions more favorable, and with able management the house is now regarded as a fine proposition.

The Princess theater, at Canonsburg, has been purchased by R. W. Thompson and will be opened for business about April 10. It is an up-to-date house and has a seating capacity of 600. Redecorating of the exterior and interior of the theater is now under way.

Canonsburg has two theaters now running, the Alhambra and the Star, and when the two others reopen a lively race for business is expected.

Erie Operators Demand Higher Wages.

Erie, Pa.—A strike of the union motion picture machine operators at Erie, Pa., has assumed serious proportions and threatens to cause a shutdown of at least some of the theaters. A demand for increased wages has been submitted to the managers by the twenty operators who are out. They threaten to demand a sympathy walk-out on the part of the union musicians if their demands are not met within a limited time. At this writing none of the houses has as yet been compelled to close because of the strike.

Films at Duquesne Garden.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Duquesne Garden, Pittsburgh, which is a mommoth ice-skating rink in the winter, is to be converted into a Palm Garden and moving picture theater for use during the summer months. The large structure is being refloored and seats and moving picture equipment are to be installed at once. As an additional feature, soda fountains and refreshment stands will also be installed. The Garden is expected to be a popular spot during the coming summer, as this form of offering moving picture entertainment is unique here.

Keystone Theater Changes Hands.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Keystone theater, 528 East Ohio street, Northside, Pittsburgh, recently changed hands, being purchased by H. C. Bowers, an old-time show man, from S. H. Gass. Although a rather small house, seating 300, the Keystone is modern and attractive. Feature pictures are shown daily, and 10 cents admission is charged Wednesday and Saturday.

Small Town Success with "Peace" Film.

Masontown, Pa.—The growing success of big features in small towns is brought out forcefully in the case of the Rex theater, conducted by Theodore Mikalowsky, at Masontown, Pa. This place has a population of 950 and the Rex has but 350 seats, yet feature films are shown at good prices and satisfactory profits. The Rex recently ran "The Battle Cry of Peace" at prices ranging from 25 to 75 cents.

A New Theater.

Burgettstown, Pa.—Proposals are being received by George E. Thomassey for the erection of a two-story brick moving picture theater at Burgettstown, Pa. The building is to measure 25 by 90 feet and is to be constructed along up-to-date lines. Plans are being prepared by Architect J. H. Phillips, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

T. S. Bradley Heads Local Pathe.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The management of the Pittsburgh Pathe exchange, 715 Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been taken by Thomas S. Bradley, succeeding B. F. Lyon, who resigned recently. Mr. Bradley was formerly road man for the Pathe Exchange, working out of the Kansas City, Mo., office. Feature Film & Calcium Light to Move.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Feature Film & Calcium Light Co., now located at 125 Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., will move in the near future to larger quarters at 938-940 Penn avenue. Manager D. C. France reports that the rapid growth of the concern during the past year and the recent expansion of the film end of the business have made greater space necessary.

J. A. Hammell Comes to Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—J. A. Hammell, formerly connected with the Fourth avenue branch of the General Film Co., in New York, has been appointed manager of the Pittsburgh offices of the company. He succeeds N. I. Ehrlich, who resigned recently to accept a position with the Triangle Film Corporation.

Although this is his first attempt as a salesman, it is said that he has thus far met with no little success.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

New Danville, Va., Company.

The Columbia Amusement Company, of Danville, Va., has been granted a Virginia charter. George M. Mann is president and John W. Mann is secretary of the company. It is said to be the intention of this company to engage in the motion picture business operating the Empire theater in Danville. This house has a seating capacity of about 300. This house and two others are operated by the Central Amusement Company of which L. Morse is the general manager. Mrs. King watches the program selected for both houses and when a picture is suitable for her Saturday matinees, she keeps it in mind and books it for an open date. The Olympic has a seating capacity of about 250.

Boston Suspends Rules

Fire Prevention Commissioner John A. O'Keefe Has Practically Agreed to Hold New Film Storage and Transportation Rules in Abeyance for a While—Gives Exchanges Time to Meet the New Requirements.

By William Flynn, Boston Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BOSTON, Mass.—Fire Prevention Commissioner John A. O'Keefe has practically agreed to a suspension of the new rules and regulations governing the keeping, storage, handling and transportation of inflammable moving picture films in the Metropolitan District and the stipulated changes in examination rooms until the local exchange men and exhibitors have had an opportunity to cope with the new situation. This attitude of the commissioner is the result of a conference he had with the Boston exchange managers on the day before the new rules were due to go into effect.

The conference was arranged by Mr. Fred B. Murphy, president of the United Film Service, and among those present were the following: Mr. J. C. Butner, Mutual; Mr. J. A. Eslow, Universal; Mr. Lawrence J. Hacking, General Film; Mr. Harry F. Campbell, Fox Film Corporation; Mr. George Balsdon, V-L-S-E; Mr. R. D. Marson, Kleine-Edison; Mr. J. Helley, Union Film Supply; Mr. Herman Rifkin, Eastern Features; Mr. Harry Asher, Famous Players; Mr. Louis B. Mayer, American Feature Film, and Mr. W. H. Bradley of the Triangle.

Prof. Munsterberg of Harvard, Gustave Frohman and Others Discuss a Live Question.

Boston, Mass.—A conflict of opinion as to sphere, status and calling of the motion picture developed at a conference on the two questions, "What are the movies?" and "What can women do to make them better?" held on Tuesday, March 22, in the lecture hall of the Boston Public Library by the Literature and Educational Departments of the State Federation of Women.

The speakers at the conference included Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, of Harvard University; Gustave Frohman and Mrs. Alice R. Carroll. A paper submitted by Mr. Frank Palmer Speare, of the Boston Y. M. C. A., who was unable to appear, was read by Mrs. Mary Schenck Woolman.

Prof. Munsterberg on Motion Pictures.

Prof. Munsterberg declared that the motion picture is an independent art in itself and is not affiliated with the theater. Mr. Frohman took issue with the professor and argued that the motion picture and the theater bore a very close relationship.

"The whole future of the photoplay," declared Prof. Munsterberg, "depends upon its separation from the drama. The prevailing theory of the motion picture is all wrong, because it is based on the mistaken idea that the purpose of art is imitation. On the contrary the more imitation of nature, the further removed from art. Compare the marble statue with the wax. The marble does not pretend to imitate and the wax figure is so lifelike that we go up and speak to it, thinking for a moment that it is a real person. The true purpose of art is to overcome reality, and all the means of art only helps to detach from reality.

"The photoplay has all the means of an independent art and has absolutely nothing to do with the drama. It stands nearer to music than to drama. The moving pictures pass before your eyes just as the tones of music pass our ear."

Gustave Frohman on Classified Theater.

Mr. Frohman after taking exception to several remarks made by Prof. Munsterberg talked on "Women's Responsibility For Good Movies." Mr. Frohman went into the history of the motion picture, carrying it down through its various stages of advancement to the present day. The speaker, however, caused some consternation when he remarked that there was not a moving picture house in Boston that was absolutely clean.

"How can you expect to get audiences for your good shows unless you classify your theaters?" he said. "The whole thing has got to be readjusted, and it can't be readjusted in a minute. We have got to have at least one house where the public may know it won't find anything repulsive.

"It was the women who purified the varieties, which were low. It was women who purified in large measure the burlesque. It is the women who will purify the movies."

New England Behind in Educational Pictures.

Mrs. Carroll stated that the only way to bring about better picture shows is not only to demand them, but to patronize them when they are exhibited.

"New England is so far behind all the rest of the country in the use of educational pictures," she said, "that I don't believe it will ever catch up.

"About 20 to 25 per cent. of American families are living on yearly incomes of $600 or less, and about 70 per cent. on incomes of $3,000 or less per annum. From that great middle class come the motion picture patrons. They are getting their ideas of life from the movies. Whether they are getting the right or false idea depends on the shows they go to see. Most managers are interested in any movement that will help raise the standard of pictures, but they won't volunteer to educate.

"Most of the vile pictures we see are suggested by scenes described in books in our public libraries—in the classics. When you complain of this class of pictures you give the producers a hammer. These things are what our children may read, but they look worse in pictures than they do in print. Children won't go to antiseptic shows, and if you won't let them go to the shows they choose they are prompted to go when we don't know it."

Special Exhibition of "Ne'ver-Do-Well."

Practically every exhibitor in New England is expected to attend a special exhibition of the big ten-reel Selig release the "Ne'er-Do-Well," which is to be held in the Park theater, Boston, on the morning of Friday, March 31. The exhibition is being staged by Mr. George E. Balsdon, who has charge of the New England affairs of the "Big Four." Mr. Balsdon has sent out invitations to the exhibitors and the press and has already been swamped with inquiries from exhibitors regarding release dates and other matters concerning the new photoplay classic. A special musical program has been secured to fit the theme and indications are that the exhibition will be one of the most impressive of its kind ever staged in Boston.

S. R. O. Sign Bill Dies.

The "standing room only" bill, which provided that in cases where no seats were available before or during a theatrical or moving picture performance or exhibition for which tickets are being sold, a sign inscribed "standing room only" must be displayed, has passed into the discard with the other anti-moving picture bills that were befoe the Massachusetts legislature this year. The original bill prohibited the selling of tickets to moving picture and other theaters after all seats had been taken. The bill was later amended in the House of Representatives by the insertion of the sign provision. The measure, as amended, was fought through the House, but was killed on a rising vote in the Senate with a bare quorum of that body voting.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Censors Appeal

Pennsylvania State Board of Censors Makes an Appeal to the Supreme Court from Decree of the Lower Court—Claim Is That Court Has No Right to Review Banned Film on Its Proper Merits.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The Supreme Court recently heard argument on the appeal of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors from the decree of Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, holding that under the scope of appeal allowed by the Act of May 15, 1915, from an order of disapproval of a motion picture film by the Board of Censors, the Courts of Common Pleas might consider the matter de novo, and in reviewing the action of the board are not limited to determining whether or no the board has acted arbitrarily and oppressively, or has abused its discretion.

The decision appealed from was rendered by Judge Barratt in the case of the motion picture film entitled "Virtue," from which the board of censors had ordered certain eliminations to be made, whereupon an appeal from the action of the board was taken to the Court of Common Pleas by the producers, the Franklin Film Manufacturing Corporation.

It was further argued that the judges of the Court of Common Pleas have no right to substitute their discretion as to the propriety or impropriety of films for that of the board, and that the action of the censors cannot be reversed unless the court comes to the conclusion and is convinced that the board of censors has acted arbitrarily or oppressively, or has abused its discretion.

The Supreme Court reserved decision.

COURT REVIEWS TWO FILMS.

One Barred Picture Found Not Objectionable—One Returned to Censors.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Annoyed by the many recent appeals in moving picture cases, Judge Barratt recently, in Common Pleas Court No. 2, reprimanded an audience that was drawn there to view a film that had been censored by the Board of Censors and had been appealed by the Fox Film Corporation and the Pathe Exchange. During an argument on certain scenes of the production, which was being shown on a screen in a darkened room, the spectators laughed.

"We do not want applause or approval," Judge Barratt said. "And it will be remembered that this is not a moving picture establishment or a theater. The court officers will maintain order."

The proceedings were a continuation of appeals that were heard last week. Several films were exhibited which had certain parts eliminated upon the grounds that they offended the morals of the public. The appellants contended that the board acted in an arbitrary and unjustifiable manner. It was necessary for the Court to view the productions and the court room was turned into a moving picture place for the time being.

At the conclusion of the exhibition, which drew many of the attaches of City Hall and persons engaged in business in the building, Judges Wessel and Barratt decided one of the pictures was not objectionable and ordered the other to be resubmitted to the censors, because there was some uncertainty regarding the picture as exhibited in court, at to whether or not it was identical with the one rejected by the board.

His Film Company Stock Questioned.

T. Claiborne Dobbins, of 6236 Chestnut street, was recently held under $1,500 bail on the charge of having sold stock in a moving picture company by claiming that it was established organization and was being operated upon a paying basis. The plaintiff is D. H. Davidson, a wood and paper box manufacturer of 2005 Washington avenue, who alleges that he was induced by Dobbins to invest $20,000 in stock of the company. According to Mr. Davidson, Dobbins represented himself as a stockholder in the Feature Film Company, of Washington, D. C. He represented that this company was chartered under the laws of the State of Delaware for $100,000, of which $60,000 was placed on the market. When the wonderful picture painted by Dobbins verbally failed to materialize Davidson investigated more closely and discovered, he declares, that the total assets of the company consisted of a great deal of handsome office furniture.

Hepburn, Carr & Krause Finances.

Hepburn, Carr & Krause, attorneys for Harry Hirshfield, trading as the Philadelphia Moving Picture Supply Company, 1237 Vine street, wish to announce that he has made application to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania for his discharge from bankruptcy, notice of which was published in the Moving Picture World some time ago. A hearing on the said application will be held in Philadelphia on the first day of May, 1916, at which time all creditors and other interested persons may appear and show cause why, if they have any, that the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

Educational Films Knocked by Crank.

A story recently appeared in a Philadelphia daily newspaper accusing the moving picture theaters of being run along the lines of a vaudeville theater, for instance certain acts being put on in order to drive the people out and thus make room for newcomers. It was charged that the proprietors of several leading moving picture theaters ran occasional educational films which answered the same purpose as the "chaser" acts of vaudeville.

It would seem that the person or persons who conceived of such a brilliant and intelligent idea would delve into that matter a little more thoroughly before opening themselves to public ridicule. How can any person or persons imagine that such films are used in the capacity of the vaudeville "chaser?"

A glimpse into the interior of any moving picture theater during the evening's performance during the exhibition of a travelogue picture will readily convince one that it commands as much attention as the drama or a few reels of comedy. Any person with a little education has a natural desire to see in detail the wonders of nature and the exhibition of such a picture commands the attention of 99 per cent. of the audience.

Corlies Amusement Company.

The Corlies Amusement Company has recently been granted a New Jersey charter to conduct a general amusement business such as renting, leasing and hiring theaters, etc. The new concern has been capitalized for $25,000, Andrew P. Jaeger, George Corlies and Minnie Corlies being the principal incorporators.

Hart's to Be Film Theater.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Hart's theater, located on the southwest corner of Frankford avenue and Norris street, Philadelphia, lot 72 feet by 120 feet, has been reported sold by the Hancock Building and Loan Association, through J. J. Goldstein & Co., to New York investors. Receiver Asked for Cincinnati Suburb Home

Stockholders Bring Suit to Change Management of Clifton Theater Which Has Been Losing—Present Manager's Statement.

By Kenneth Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CINCINNATI, Ohio.—Suit was filed on March 21 for a receivership for the Clifton theater, operated by the Clifton Amusement Co., on Ludlow avenue, in Clifton, a Cincinnati suburb. The holders of a majority of the outstanding stock filed the suit, alleging that the company has been losing money steadily for some time as a result of poor business.

Henry Hoefle, president of the company and manager of the theater, as well as the largest stockholder, pointed out, in speaking of the suit, that the past eight months have been very poor ones in the moving picture business, and that, on the other hand, the coming year bids fair to be unusually successful. He said that for this reason, as well as on account of his interest in the business, he regretted the action of the other stockholders. The company has $21,800 in capital stock outstanding, owning the real estate comprising the house and the ground it stands on, subject to a mortgage of $10,000. There is also other indebtedness. The litigation caused considerable surprise in local moving picture circles, as the house was known as one of the several popular and apparently prosperous suburban theaters.

LEASES HOUSES FOR SUMMER.

I. Libson Will Run Films in Two Big Legitimate Theaters.

Cincinnati, O.—Judging from arrangements which, it is announced, have been virtually completed, I. Libson will have considerably more on his hands this summer than the ordinary man would feel like tackling. It is stated that the interests of which Mr. Libson is the local representative, controlling the Family, the Strand and Walnut theaters, have obtained the Grand and the Lyric theaters for the summer season, and that in at least one of these big houses features will be shown regularly during the interim between the closing of the current theatrical season and the opening next fall.

These two houses are the leading "legitimate" theaters in Cincinnati, and both, for the past two summers, have been used for moving pictures more or less regularly. Under the arrangement indicated it is to be presumed that conflict between them and the three houses mentioned, all of which are near them in the downtown district, will be reduced to a minimum, and at the same time the enterprise should prove to be profitable.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR FILMS.

Jury in Hamilton, O., Makes Exhibitor Pay for Burnt Film.

Hamilton, Ohio.—The question of care of and responsibility for films while in the hands of the exhibitor has received some illumination in this vicinity recently, calculated to impress the exhibitor with the desirability of keeping a sharp eye on the film while in his possession. Up at Hamilton, for instance, a judgment was rendered by a jury against an exhibitor for $404 in a case where a film was destroyed by fire. The court held that failure on the part of the exhibitor to keep the film in a metal box while not in actual use constituted negligence, and refused to grant a new trial. In another case, in Cincinnati, suit has been filed for three films which, it seems, were lost while in the hands of the exhibitor, the amount asked being $292.36. George Polster, owner of the Valley theater, in Elmwood place, is the defendant in this instance, the Mutual Film Corporation bringing the suit.

Buy Ohio Rights to "Dumb Girl of Portici."

Howard, formerly manager of the Forest theater, and later one of the force of the World Film Corporation here. Mr. Howard is making his arrangements for quarters, organization and so forth, and expects great things of this territory for Blue Bird releases, in view of the excellence of those which have been so far.

MICHIGAN NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

The Importance of Children's Shows.

KALAMAZOO, Mich.—Some mothers in Kalamazoo do not want a free Saturday morning show for the children. They believe the shows which have been given by Manager Barnes of the Elite are worth paying for, and are willing to help finance the work. There are a great many poor children who receive great benefit and in order not to deprive them of their treat the plan of holding two shows on Saturday morning has been given a trial. The first is free; the second calls for five cents admission. The Drama league has asked parents to make this Saturday morning show the week's entertainment for the children and to not allow the youngsters to attend other shows in the course of the week. These children's shows have been deemed so important that Mrs. Caroline Bartlett Crane, a national figure, has suggested a committee from the Child Welfare League take steps to have them financed.

Detroit Progress

New Theaters to Be Built—The Lincoln To Be Enlarged and Called the Catherine—Plans Are Ready for the New Isis Theater—Theater De Luxe to Seat 1,700 Persons—List of Other Houses to be Built or Open Soon.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Bldg., Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DETROIT, MICH.—Work is to be started at once on an addition which will more than double the size of the Lincoln theater on the southeast corner of Chene and Catherine streets.

The Catherine Theater.

The building is known as the Catherine theater and will be anlarged to have a frontage of 105 feet. The structure will be of brick and steel with ornamental plaster trimmings. The theater will have a seating capacity on one floor for about 800 persons. The theater was erected in 1913 and its success has been such that the additional space is necessary to accommodate the large evening attendance. Both the new and old portions of the building will be provided with all the modern features in the way of equipment. The improvements will be completed by July 1st. The theater is operated by the Lincoln Amusement Company, whose offices will occupy the second floor. T. H. Lynch is president, R. E. Lynch, vice-president, and Maurice Lynch, treasurer.

Plans for the Isis.

Plans are being prepared for a large new photoplay house to be known as the Isis, on the northwest corner of the East Grand Boulevard and Joseph Campau avenue, for the Northeastern Detroit Amusement Co. Mildner & Eisen are the architects. The building is to be of fireproof construction, with exterior walls of vitrified brick, trimmed with terra cotta. It will have frontage of 90 feet on the boulevard, extending about 120 feet along Joseph Campau avenue. There will be four stores with offices and flats above. The auditorium will provide seating capacity for 1,000 persons on the ground floor; it will have no gallery. Interior decorations are to be designed especially for the house, and will done by specialists. A $20,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones organ will be installed. It is proposed to have the theater ready for opening September first. The officers of the Northeastern Detroit Amusement Company are: President, George H. Fleishut; vice-president, J. Czantske; secretary, E. A. Holdenhauer, and treasurer, J. H. Fuchs.

The Theater De Luxe.

Seating capacity for about 1,700 persons is to be provided in the Theater De Luxe, at the northeast corner of Kercheval and Parkview avenues. Plans for the building are being prepared by B. C. Wetzel & Co., architects. It will be fireproof, of brick, steel, concrete and the front will have exterior surface of white glazed terra cotta. Both the exterior front and the interior will follow the Adams style in design. Ventilation will be provided by an air washing system. A pipe organ will be installed. It is planned to have the house ready by next September. The main entrance to the theater will be through a handsome decorated corridor on Kercheval avenue. Officers of the Theater De Luxe are: President, D. I. Butler; vice-president, E. Grode; secretary and treasurer, E. F. Henrich, and general manager, C. M. Orth.

Other New Houses.

With the opening of the above houses by next fall and adding the new Madison on Grand Circus Park, the new Regent, Woodward and Horton avenues, the Drury Lane, Woodward avenue near the park, and the new Colonial at Woodward and Sibley, the new Rialto, at Gratiot and Mt. Elliott avenues, the new Stratford at Dix and Ferdinand avenues, and the new Terry Field theater, the total number of large new theaters opened in 1916 will be at least eight. All of the houses mentioned are in course of erection or about to be erected with the exception of the Stratford, which opened a few weeks ago. It means that although 1915 was a big year for new motion picture theaters—and we all thought the end was at hand—the year of 1916 will be even bigger.

NO CENSOR BOARD THIS YEAR.

Present Method Found Satisfactory—Very Few Complaints.

Detroit, Mich.—Good news for Detroit exhibitors. There will be no motion picture board of censors during the coming year. The Recreation Commission asked $3,500 from the council committee to establish a censoring board, the purpose of which would be to censor all film before shown in Detroit theaters.

The plea that the police department is now doing the motion picture censoring very satisfactorily, that there were very few complaints of indecent pictures and that it should it not be interfered with induced the council committee to eliminate from the budget all items which would enable the Recreation Commission to do the censoring work. For the $3,500 asked the Commission expected to have one director and two assistants to do the censoring.

As a result the censoring of film will continue to remain with the police department during the coming year. And right here it is not amiss to call to the attention of exhibitors the fact that unless they show clean pictures and eliminate the offensive ones—if there be any offered to them—they are only going to help the coming legislature to pass a censorship bill similar to that in force in Ohio. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is very applicable to this proposition of censorship. Give the fanatic legislators no excuse to advocate censorship laws.

Local Triangle Office Closed.

Detroit, Mich.—P. P. Craft is no longer holding the Detroit franchise for Triangle films, and his offices in the Ford building have been closed for a week. Since March 20, L. W. Foster, from the New York office of the Triangle Film Corporation, has been in Detroit straightening out dealings with exhibitors who contracted for film. Temporary offices have been opened at 900 Union Trust building. When seen by the World representative Mr. Foster stated that the company had several applications from responsible persons desirous of buying the Detroit franchise, but that the company was undecided as to whether it would sell the Detroit franchise or open its own exchange. The demand for Triangle films is on the increase and exhibitors are reporting big success with Triangle.

Will Open State Rights Office.

Battle Creek, Mich.—Col. W. S. Butterfield, with headquarters at Battle Creek, Mich., informed our Detroit correspondent that plans are being made for a big office to handle feature pictures for Michigan on the states' rights plan. The office will be established as soon as Col. Butterfield finds the right man to take charge. The office will have a good outlet for its features, as fifteen vaudeville and picture theaters in Michigan are under the management of Col. Butterfield at the present time in the Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Co. and Bijou Amusement Co.

New Atlanta Exchange Building

Georgia Realty Company to Erect Three-Story Building for Film Exchanges on Corner of Walton and Bartow Streets.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Atlanta, Ga.—Atlanta is to have one of the most modern buildings devoted to commercial uses ever built in the south, according to an announcement of the Georgia Realty Company.

J. R. Smith, principal owner, will erect a three-story concrete and white pressed brick constructed building at the northwest corner of Walton and Bartow streets, and it will be devoted to motion picture exchange purposes, a large part of the space having already been leased. The lot is 100 feet square.

The building will cost $40,000 and work will begin on it this week.

This building will be known as the Exchange building.

Three sides of the building will be open to light and an interior light court, 10 feet wide, will run from the top of the first floor up through the building.

A feature said never to have been added to any building in the south will be constructed of smokeless fire towers, having concrete walls on all sides, and the two rear corners of the building. These towers will permit, in case of fire, of occupants of the building safely making their exit without danger to loss of life from burns or suffocation by smoke.

Also a new feature in buildings of the south will be the making of each floor space waterproof from the lower floors.

There will be six spaces in the building, two to each floor, each having 4,750 square feet of floor space.

The building will be completed within ninety days

THE ALPHA THEATER.

Rejuvenation of Old Superba as Picture Theater.

Atlanta, Ga.—A year and a half ago the old Superba theater on Whitehall street, was a vaudeville theater. After passing through several ownerships and dull business, it ceased to exist.

The theater has been leased again by Alpha Fowler, the present owner and manager. It was refurnished complete, new equipment added, and later opened as a motion picture theater only. The best of first run pictures are used; the theater has been given publicity as perhaps no other theater in Atlanta, and today the "Alpha" is one of the "family" theaters of this city.

Manager Fowler picked his help of the very best, and no theater in this city enjoys a better corps of efficient employees. Especial attention has been given to the "masher pest."

Manager Fowler was for years traveling salesman for the S. S. S. Medical Company, and had had no theatrical experience until he leased the Alpha, but has made good, on applying strict business principles to a run-down, loosely managed theater, which today is one of Atlanta's best.

The photograph was taken on the opening performance of the "Iron Claw."

CHANGE SCREEN CLUB'S NAME.

Will Now Be Known as Motion Picture Trades Club.

Atlanta, Ga.—At a meeting at the Hotel Ansley Friday night, March 17, of which Walter Price, manager of Universal company, was chairman, it was decided to change the name of the Screen Club to the "Motion Picture Trades Club." The membership of the club is to be limited to managers of exchanges for the present. This was decided after a long discussion.

Later the Motion Picture Trades Club intends to branch out so as to include on its rolls everybody who has anything to do with motion pictures. The club will rent a hall and outfit its own rooms.

Elvena Neal With Kalem.

Atlanta, Ga.—Miss Elvena Neal, 146 Bass street, who distinguished herself in the amateur production of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" at the Atlanta theater in February, will leave in April for Jacksonville to work with the Kalem people, who have a large studio there.

Miss Neal's beauty and unusual grace well fits her for film work and her Atlanta friends are expecting big things of her when she steps into the screen world.

PRETTIEST ATLANTA GIRL.

Motion Picture Trades Exposition, March 30-April 1, to Hold Contest.

Atlanta, Ga.—In the room of the beauty editor at the Hotel Ansley are more pictures of pretty girls than were ever assembled together at one time before outside of an art gallery.

They were all Atlanta girls; about two-thirds are brunettes, the blondes being greatly in the minority, girls who want to go to New York City at the expense of the Universal Company and there be given a tryout in motion pictures, with the prospect of immediate elevation to stardom.

The beauty contest of the Universal Company in Atlanta is being put on in connection with the Southern Motion Picture Trades exposition which will be held at the auditorium March 30, 31 and April 1. Every girl is eligible, but she must have two requisites in order to win out.

Beauty and brains—beauty that will look well on the screen, brains to tell her how to register emotion; and she must be present at the ball which will close the last night of the exposition.

A committee of five, three newspaper men, one director and one film man will pass on the contestants. The Universal Company has agreed to pay the winner's expenses to New York City.

Walter Price, manager of the Universal, previous to this contest, thought he knew a beautiful woman when he saw one, but is thankful now, he's only the receiver of photographs and not the one to decide the contest.

Sunday Shows in Tennessee

Recent Decision of Supreme Court of Tennessee May Close Sunday Shows in Memphis and Other Cities—Editorial Comment Favorable to Open Picture Shows.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—As feared in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee concerning Sunday shows is beginning to have a deterrent effect in other cities than Chattanooga, where the trouble started. The question of closing the Sunday shows at Memphis, Tenn., now has the attention of the city commissioners, according to an answer given to a query of Commissioner Dabney Crump at a meeting of the board. Mayor Ashcroft has written the clerk of the supreme court for a copy of the opinion, which has been entered on the records of the highest state tribunal. The commissioners have not indicated what action would be taken in the matter.

The Commercial Appeal, a daily paper of Memphis, recently had an interesting editorial on the Sunday closing subject. This editorial looks favorably on Sunday shows, and gives an excellent idea of the general feeling.

According to a leading exhibitor of Chattanooga, Tenn., the picture shows have done more in educating the lower classes than all of the novels and general line of literature produced. Many people will spend a few hours in a moving picture theater who would never read anything outside of the daily newspaper. The results have been that there has been a decided improvement in the general knowledge of the masses, who through watching the pictures have discovered how the rest of the world lives and enjoys itself. Nearly every angle of the moving picture industry is educational, and far superior in merit to any other form of amusement which can be provided for passing away quiet hours on Sunday.

John Shepard to Build Theater.

Dyersburg, Tenn.—John Shepard, of Dyersburg, an exhibitor, is preparing to begin building a new theater within the next few weeks. It is understood that the new show house will be considerably larger than the houses with which he has been connected.

The Victoria in New Hands.

Nashville, Tenn.—It is reported that the management of the Victoria theater, of Nashville, Tenn., has passed into new hands. The theater is located in the Arcade on Fourth avenue. The building has just been completely remodeled.

W. A. Wassman's New Signs.

Nashville, Tenn.—W. A. Wassman, of Nashville, connected with the Crystal theater and also with the new $75,000 Knickerbocker, which is about to open, has placed an order with H. C. Ragan, representing the Federal Sign System, for about $4,000 worth of electric signs to be used on the two theaters. Mr. Ragan was formerly connected with the editorial department of a theatrical paper.

Parthenon's Local Film.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Parthenon theater, of Nashville, has been active in arranging a moving picture, local color play, in which a Nashville girl takes the part of "Ruth." Nominations were received at the theater's box office, and every coupon attached to the admission tickets entitled the purchaser to a vote in the contest. Arrangements were made with Rich, Schwartz & Joseph for a handsome wardrobe for the leading character to wear in the play, the clothes to belong to the lady after the production.

CLEVELAND NEWS LETTER.

By Hubert Persons, Cleveland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Club Women's Program Run.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—In furtherance of the plan of the civics committee of the Cleveland Federation of Women's Clubs, to select a model program from current pictures, C. A. Megowan, special agent of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, turned the Cameraphone theater over to the club women for three hours, Friday, March 24. Pictures the clubwomen had tentatively selected for their model programs were run. The result will be announced in a few days.

The motion picture men say the club women are failing to vote on the pictures being run for the benefit on special days, though ballots have been prepared and ballot boxes placed in theaters.

Children's Shows in Lakewood.

LAKEWOOD, O.—The Lakewood theater has launched a policy of special Saturday morning performances for school children with programs selected by the Lakewood Board of Education and the Lakewood Book and Thimble Club. The house seats 1,000, but at the first special performance nearly twice that number of children were admitted and several hundred had to be turned away. The theater management declares that there is no doubt but what such special programs will be commercially profitable as well as pleasing to parents and teachers.

Lexington, Ky. Sees "Nation Film"

Corporation Counsel James G. Denny Opines that City Commission Has No Right to Interfere—Began March 20.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Stark Bldg., Louisville Correspondent Moving Picture World.

LEXINGTON, Ky.—The authorities here, after stewing around for several weeks, finally withdrew all objection to the showing of the "Nation" film. Corporation Counsel James G. Denny, under request of the commissioners, investigated the legal status of the question and said that he had come to the conclusion the commissioners had no right to interfere with the exhibition. He said the present statutes do not apply to moving pictures, as the laws on the books were passed some ten years or more ago, when the moving picture industry was in its infancy, and at a time when such a picture as the "Birth of a Nation" were not even dreamed of.

He further stated that if the citizens were not satisfied with the decision of the commissioners the courts were open to them, but he advised that no ordinance be passed forbidding the exhibition, as he did not believe such an ordinance would be upheld in view of the fact that it would be prohibiting something which had been allowed all over the country.

After the meeting Mayor Rogers said this report would conclude the controversy. The statutes concerning exhibitions liable to cause racial strife only apply to stage productions, according to the opinion of Judge Denny. The play started its regular engagement of one week at the Opera House on March 20.

HIGH WINDS AND NO SHOWS.

Train Bringing Films from Indianapolis Blown Off Tracks.

Louisville, Ky.—A number of the Louisville moving picture houses were forced to open their show houses with junk films or any material which could be acquired on Wednesday, March 22, on account of failure of films from Indianapolis to arrive. The Clover Leaf flyer, carrying a number of the films was actually blown from the rails near Marion, Ind., injuring a number of people and delaying traffic for several hours. The films finally arrived in Louisville about noon. However, the weather was so inclement that only small crowds were on the streets, and business was not hurt to any great extent.

LEXINGTON, KY., CENSORS.

Civic Organizations Plan to Draft a Bill for Local Censorship.

Lexington, Ky.—Through the efforts of the Lexington Board of Education the Woman's Clubs, and the Social Hygiene Commission, arrangements have been made whereby an ordinance is being drafted for the purpose of creating a board of censorship for moving picture shows. The proposed ordinance provides penalties for exhibitors who show objectionable films in the city, and provides for systems of viewing films to be shown. It is understood that the ordinance will be presented in the near future to the city commissioners and its passage urged by the three organizations, which are strong in Lexington. The committee appointed to draft the ordinance is composed of Nathan Elliott, of the Board of Education; Mrs. Clarence L. Williamson, of the Woman's Club, and Prof. W. C. Bower, of the Social Hygiene Commission.

Operators and Musicians at Odds.

Louisville, Ky.—Lack of harmony between the operators' and musicians' unions in Louisville has been shown during the past few weeks. One theater recently fell out with its union orchestra, and a non-union orchestra was employed. Another house fell out with its operators and employed non-union operators. In neither case did the other union departments walk out. Very few of the theaters, with the exception of the big downtown theaters, are employing musicians on account of drastic demands of the unions, most of the smaller houses using mechanical instruments of some kind.

Lexington, Ky.—Announcement has been made at Lexington, Ky., to the effect that W. H. The New Aristo to Open.

Louisville, Ky.—A $25 prize offered by the Second Street Amusement Company for the best name for its new theater was split between two people, both of whom suggested the name Aristo. The name is taken from the Greek word "aristos," meaning best. The prize winners were Mrs. James A. Caldwell and Evelyn Bensinger. More than 1,500 suggestions were received at the time of the closing of the contest, and the judges had some time in deciding the winners. Close to the winners were a number of people who suggested the name "Arista." The new theater will be opened as the Aristo about April 15.

Stories for Children's Shows.

Louisville, Ky.—In connection with the moving pictures for children an interesting novelty has been suggested by Miss Adeline Francis, known as the "Graphonola Girl," on the Keith circuit. Miss Francis has just produced twelve exceptionally attractive children's stories on talking machine records for the Pathe talking machine people and has arranged to make several more records of children's stories, such as the "Three Bears," and has hopes of seeing these records used in connection with children's moving picture shows, as an added attraction. Lee Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, has become interested in the proposition and is endeavoring to make arrangements whereby these records can be used with his children's shows.

Co-operative Censorship

St. Louis Mothers' Congress and Parent Teacher Association Form League for Better Motion Pictures Under Leadership of Sara Edwards—Aims and Hopes of the New Organization as Given Out in a Prospectus.

By A. H. Gibler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ST. LOUIS.—A League for Better Motion Pictures formed by members of the Mothers' Congress, the Parent-Teacher Association, and various other associations of the social welfare and uplift variety, have organized in St. Louis under the leadership of Miss Sara Edwards. The League claims to be working to do away with the old idea of censorship for moving pictures and at the same time improve the quality of pictures exhibited, by a system of co-operation in which producers, exchange managers, exhibitors and patrons will have a part. Here are the aims of the league according to Miss Edwards, the secretary.

The Aims of the Organization.

"First: In securing a general co-operation, all patrons of motion pictures are asked to become associate members of the league. This membership costs but little and includes much, including free model programs with educational features.

"Second: Having gained the aid of the moving picture patrons (the consumers), who are desiring better films, the exhibitors (the retailers) then see the advantage of joining the league as active members. As active members, because they have special 'model program Nights' where only approved films are shown; because they continually search for good pictures and because the general public are advised of this active membership through newspaper publicity, the various clubs and the friendly aid of associate members.

"Third: With the exhibitors co-operating wtih their patrons and trying to supply the pictures demanded, it becomes the privilege and opportunity of the exchange man (the wholesaler) to co-operate and meet the needs of the exhibitor.

"The exchangeman becoming an active member of the league, his good reels are exploited before the public according to their merits, and having been approved by the Approval Board of the Better Motion Picture League, they are certain to win the patronage they deserve.

"Last, but not least, the producer, who is simply the manufacturer, having learned the requirements of the motion picture patrons and produced his goods accordingly, will no longer be tempted to force his damaging goods through the exchanges, by binding them with long previous contracts to accept his goods.

"Likewise it will no longer be necessary for the exchange to force an outlet for his damaging goods through the exhibitors and thereby often dumping a lot of films on a helpless public.

"Through this friendly co-operation, no one will suffer, and the success achieved will benefit all.

Capacity for Sitting in Judgment.

"It may be well to mention a few facts concerning the Approval Board. Its capacity for sitting in final judgment will be unique in the fact that it will consist of public spirited men and women of various clubs and in different lines of work.

"Each exhibitor will have a committee of five or more who grade the pictures according to special notes, and from these many committees, selections are made by the exhibitor to serve as a general committee which will review at the exchanges before the pictures are released.

"A list of approved pictures are furnished all exhibitors who are active members of the league. The league in no manner wishes to censor pictures, but on the other hand, is organized to co-operate with the exchanges and exhibitors in pleasing and helping the general public."

A model program night was given on March 16 at the Cabanne theater, on Goodfellow avenue, and John E. McKinnon, manager of the theater, and an active member of the League for Better Motion Pictures, expressed satisfaction with the work of the league.

World Film to Educate Salesmen.

St. Louis, Mo.—W. W. Drum is in charge of the World Film offices temporarily, while a new manager is being found to succeed E. W. Dustin, who resigned last week. Mr. Drum says that the World has a new plan for selecting sales managers that will be put into practice soon. Sales managers who have made a record in other lines of business of merchandise will form the World selling force. These men will first work in all departments to learn every angle before they become sales managers. "We go on the theory that it is much easier to teach a good salesman the film business than it is to try to teach a man who knows all about films to be a good salesman," says Mr. Drum.

Felix Feist, sales manager of the World Film Corporation, was in St. Louis for two days last week.

Floyd Lewis, manager of the Triangle Exchange in the Plaza building on Olive street, has gone on a ten-day business trip through Kentucky and the southern territory.

Sheriff Fined for Arresting Exhibitor

Mayor McLeod of Charles City, Iowa, Rebukes Sheriff—Calls His Arresting of Sabbath Exhibitor a Disturbance.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

CHARLES CITY, IA.—Sheriff Gray, who on March 5 arrested William Waterhouse, an exhibitor, for running his show, was fined $100 and costs for creating a disturbance in making the arrest of Waterhouse when the latter was operating his show under a city ordinance. The sheriff will appeal the case.

Continuing the fight Waterhouse has been arrested the third time. W. F. Crary, a local lumberman, signed the information charging Waterhouse with violating a law. The sheriff expected the warrant to be delivered him on Sunday. He thought the people were likely to resent it if he tried to serve it on Sunday. A telephone message to the attorney general at Des Moines brought him no advice, but Governor Clarke counseled his waiting until Monday. Sunday afternoon the Hildreth did a big business from 1:30 to 5:30 with "The Life of Our Savior." Outside crowds waited expectant of an arrest. Waterhouse learned the warrant had been issued and telephoned the sheriff that he would accept service over the phone.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS LETTER.

By Perry Williams, Minneapolis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Spring Business Good.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—All exchanges are reporting a rush of business. About a dozen exhibitors are in the city daily from throughout the Northwest looking for new service or renewing their old contracts.

A. A. Hixon, assistant manager of the Metro exchange, said he has been running his head off in connection with the first showings of the Metro-Drew comedies. The exhibitors are anxious to get a peek at this new feature.

J. E. Moor, treasurer of the Independent Film Corporation, said if things keep up it will be necessary to keep some one at the door to keep the visitors in line. Paramount also had an office full of trade.

W. H. Stafford, manager of the Mutual, said he and his staff are finding plenty to do in connection with the new Charlie Chaplin films. Although the first release date is as far away as May 15, Mr. Stafford said exhibitors are making a brisk demand and plenty of prospects still are open.

Censors Ban Two Films.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Local film men are again having their troubles with Mayor Nye's board of censors. No less than two screens were barred from showing in the city during the week.

The first film to feel the official kibosh was Theda Bara in "Destruction." The mayor had the film shown at the city's "little theater," which is the assembly room at the court house, for the benefit of a board of censors composed of three men and two women. After looking over Miss Bara's work the censors were of an unanimous opinion that it was too cruel to warrant its production in the city. They declared emphatically that there was not a redeeming feature to the film and the mayor took their cue and ordered "Destruction" out of town. However, as it had only one night longer to run at the Lake Street theater, where it was being shown, the Mayor decided not to interfere and force the theater to close for the one evening.

Although the entire board of censors has not turned down "Virtue" five members of the board have done so, and it has become necessary for E. O. Freedman, manager of the Northwestern States Feature Film Company, which brought the photoplay here, to appeal to the entire board for its sanction. George H. Bell, New York City's license commissioner, had turned down the film in his city and news of his action was noised about here when "Virtue" was offered for production at the Seville theater. The mayor on a previous occasion, had told Mr. Freedman that he would bar any film which had not been permitted to show by the New York authorities. However, he now takes the stand that he is willing to listen to recommendations from the Minneapolis censors. Accordingly to Mr. Freedman gave a private view of "Virtue" in the assembly room of the court house before the five members of the censorship board. Mr. Freedman has appealed from the decision of the five who declared the film improper and now it is up to the Mayor to make a final decision or call out his entire board.

New Branch Exchange Here.

Minneapolis has added another branch exchange to its already long list of such establishments. The Zenith Feature Film Company is the latest to invade this territory. The local office will be maintained on the eighth floor of the Produce Exchange building with S. R. Clingan as its manager.

Sunday Shows in Minnesota.

Sunday showing has been prohibited by the Fergus Falls, Minn., council after a long fight. The "lid" is held to be the result of a stand taken by the church people. At Princeton, Minn., the W. C. T. U. has protested against the Sunday film shows, but has not yet won its case. The present status of the case rests with the promise of the mayor to approach the film men asking them to close during the hours of the evening church services. This ought to be a cue to film men up against a similar protest.

Conviction in Lafayette

Jury Finds Three Sabbath Exhibitors Guilty—Charged with Conspiracy to Break State Laws Against Sunday Opening—One Out of Four Is Acquitted—Plea for a New Trial—May Appeal to Higher Court.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana News Service.

LAFAYETTE, IND.—The moving picture men won and lost the first skirmish of the big battle in this city to establish the Sunday showing. After a trial lasting more than two weeks and which was filled with interesting bits of testimony, legal skirmishes and which was attended by big crowds, the jury in circuit court brought in a verdict of guilty in the cases against the motion picture owners and discharged one defendant, a manager of one of the theaters.

Four men were on trial. They were Misha Rubinoff, Luke Balfe, David Maurice and Charles Ruchard, the latter theater owners. It was charged that the three owners and the manager had entered into a conspiracy to violate the law, in that they had gathered together to open the motion picture theaters controlled by them on Sunday.

Misha Rubinoff was held not guilty. He pleaded that he was employed by the three picture theater owners to manage theaters controlled by them and that he was a Jew and not amenable to the Sunday laws concerning the following of his usual vocation on Sunday. He declared that the Sunday referred to in the law was not his Sunday and that he therefore could not be held under the law. The jury agreed to this contention.

In the case of the three owners the state charged that they had entered into a combine to force the opening of the Sunday shows and the jury upheld this contention. The jury deliberated at length before returning a verdict of guilty.

The trial aroused great interest and was attended throughout by large crowds. On the day the finding was returned the courthouse yard was filled with spectators. Both sides had its supporters and included in the support of the prosecution was an organization of ministers.

The cases are not concluded. The defense will ask for a new trial and if this is denied will appeal from the adverse decision.

MOTION PICTURE CHARITY.

Fund from Local Houses Helps Large Numbers of Needy Persons.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Moving Picture show charity fund, established in Indianapolis with the opening of Sunday shows two years ago, was used to help 2,800 persons in need of assistance comprising more than 800 families, according to a report made to the mayor of the city by Miss Clyde Titus, secretary of the committee provided by the mayor to watch over the fund. The sum spent, according to the report, was $4.954.59, of which all except $539 for operating expenses was used for the relief of poor and sick persons. For groceries alone $2,821.56 was spent, most of this being spent in relief work recommended by reputable charitable organizations of the city.

The money also was used to help persons move, rent was paid in many instances, medicine was supplied and needs of a similar nature attended to. In one instance a sum of money was expended to pay the premiums on an insurance policy held by a man who died shortly afterward. Through the payment of the insurance premiums the children received a large sum of money.

The fund was started about two years ago following a severe controversy lasting months in which city authorities tried to force the motion picture exhibitors to close their houses on Sunday. The controversy was finally settled when the charity fund was started and the motion picture exhibitors agreed to pay a certain sum per seating capacity. The plan met with ready support from the church members of the city. Sixty-six picture shows are now contributing each week and they pay sums ranging from $2 to $10 weekly.

The fund is in charge of William T. Eisenlohr, Hubert Reiley, Bert McBride and George L. Knox. It is perhaps the most effective way of regulating the business of showing on Sunday and the committee recommends that other cities take it up.

Crystal Reopens.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Crystal theater, which has been closed for several weeks while being remodeled, has reopened, offering that splendid social drama "Forbidden Fruit." The photo-play received the endorsement of even the critics who have taken hot shots at some of the other dramas of a similar nature which have been produced in Indianapolis.

The Crystal has been beautifully redecorated, no expense having been spared to increase the interior and exterior beauty. The color scheme is a delicate gray, with tinted seats to match. Two large forty-eight-inch exhaust fans have been installed together with eight ceiling ventilators in the effort to make it the most properly ventilated theater in the city. The theater, during opening week, played daily to capacity crowds.

J. D. Jameson Heads Local Exchange.

Indianapolis, Ind.—J. D. Jameson, formerly manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Pittsburg, Kan., exchange, has been transferred to the managership of the Indianapolis branch of that service. Mr. Jameson, before his assignment to the Pittsburgh office, was manager of another western office. Mr. Jameson succeeds P. S. Allison, who probably will become a road man out of the Indianapolis office.

Lyric Succeeds as Picture House.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Lyric theater, controlled by Barton and Olson, is a big success as a motion picture playhouse, the management says. The Lyric, which ran through the winter as a vaudeville theater, recently remodeled the stage with beautiful settings and is showing the Paramount program. The prices have been reduced to ten and fifteen cents. The Lyric was formerly the most popular vaudeville house in the city.

Indiana Theater Changes.

Mishawaka, Ind.—The Temple Theater Company has been incorporated at Mishawaka, Ind., and will erect one or two theaters. Definite plans have not been announced.

Ladoga, Ind.—Hugh Rapp and Company plan to erect a big airdome at Ladoga, Ind., with the passing away of wintry days. Lots have been placed and building material ordered.

Warsaw, Ind.—This city is to have a new theater. It will be erected by a company which plans, also to building a new interurban station for the city, with the theater in the same building. The theater section cost is estimated at $6,000.

Glendale, Ind.—J. H. McLean of Glendale takes advantage of excess room above his department store. He has fitted up a motion picture house.

Film Men Frolic

New Orleans Moving Picture Colony Runs Off a Big Feature Around Dinner Tables of the Hotel Monteleone—All the Big Film Magnates Present by Proxy —J. Eugene Pearce Tells of Old Times.

By George Cheney, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—All film roads in New Orleans led on St. Patrick's night to the Monteleone Hotel, where the New Orleans film colony presented a twelve-part farce, "The Mirth of a Nation," scenario by G. J. Dureau, Jr., adapted for the screen by Maurice F. Barr and directed by A. G. Shear, with four New Orleans newspapermen as their guests.

It was a performance for one night only, was labelled also a prosperity dinner" and began at eleven o'clock. It ended—well, somewhere around going to work time next morning. "William Fox" was there, so was "William Oldknow." "John R. Freuler," "Charles Pathe" and all the rest of New York's biggest guns. Each exchange manager present impersonated or took the place of his boss. A list of the guests present in the newspapers next morning sounded like a "who's who" photoplay edition.

"Carl Laemmle" Bottled.

Along about the "fourth reel" Al G. Shear, who up to this time had fairly well acted the part of Carl Laemmle, was forced to retire for the nonce after he was through dodging wine bottles. The latter were slung by indignant diners after Mr. Shear had read a fake telegram from an exhibitor in Crowley, La., advising him that the exhibitor was mopping up on "Graft," and had raised his service voluntarily $20 additional per week. Incidents like these happened throughout the banquet. Nobody's feelings were spared, and complimentary remarks were strictly taboo.

Pearce Talks of Old Days.

Although everybody around the board came in for a speech, J. Eugene Pearce, of the Pearce interests, registered the hit of the evening when he traced the early days of moving pictures in the Crescent City up to the present. He told of those dark days when Herman Fichtenberg had his penny arcade at 711 Canal Street. In 1905, Mr. Pearce said, and his every word was listened to with eager attention, as he is usually not given to reminiscences, he had opened up the Electric theater at 926 Canal street. This was the first moving picture show in New Orleans, and may be the last, as it is operating still.

Green Program.

The program was green and nearly everything else was, in keeping with the St. Patrick spirit. There were green turtle soup, green peas, creme de menthe and green lettuce. Everything was served "a la something" beginning with "Bluebird" cocktails and ending with cigarettes of "Paramount" quality. The diners were Sam Dembow, Jr., (Fox); Al. G. Shear (Universal); Maurice F. Barr (Bluebird); Raoul Junet (Pathe); J. G. Kirkpatrick (General); C. E. Gregg (Kalem); Paul L. Ford (Peerless); Ross Hardenbrook (World); H. G. Morrow (General); Nat Sobel, M. Baer, E. V. Richards, Jr., Carl Goldenburg, J. Eugene Pearce, Robert Pritchard, the New Orleans Item, N. L. Thatcher, the New Orleans Times-Picayune, A. J. Benedic, Motion Picture News, and George M. Cheney, Moving Picture World.

In explaining to the exchange managers and exhibitors the kind and quality of news they wanted and would print, the newspapermen present said anything that savored of news would be acceptable, the more localized the better. What is needed was pointed out, is greater co-operation between the picture men and the press, with the public, the press and the picture men all benefited by this arrangement.

Triangle Exchange Locates.

The Triangle exchange will be located at 323 Carondelet street, in the quarters once occupied by the Mutual Film Company. This was the decision reached this week by Arthur Lucas, who has been in New Orleans all week looking for a suitable location. It is announced that this exchange will take care of all Triangle business not handled by Ernest Boehringer, in the Triangle theater building, who has a contract covering the serving of fourteen exhibitors in New Orleans.

The new exchange will be under the direction of Nat Ehrlich, who came to New Orleans with Mr. Lucas from New York. Mr. Ehrlich is well known to the local film company. He was the first film manager in New Orleans, and at one time he successively represented the General and Mutual programs. The opening of the Triangle exchange is taken as another indication that New Orleans is coming to be recognized as the moving picture center of the South, and the volume of business being done here fully justifies this claim.

C. E. Tandy's Father Dies.

While conferring in New Orleans on March 18 with W. Fred Bossner, manager of the Crescent theater, C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company, received word that his father had died in Hopkinsville, Ky. Mr. Tandy, who had just come in from New York and was in the Crescent City on an important mission in connection with the Paramount program, at once left for Hopkinsville, which is his home.

Houston D. Bowers Dies.

Jackson, Miss.—Exhibitor Houston D. Bowers, whose epitaph might appropriately be "He played the game square," and who was a prominent picture exhibitor in this city, died here recently.

Houston D. Bowers.

So well and favorably known was Mr. Bowers to exchange men in New Orleans that suitable resolutions were passed at their recent meeting in the Crescent City.

He was 44 years old, was owner and manager of the Majestic theater and beloved by all who came in contact with him, because, as one of his friends put it, "He gave every one an even break."

Just before he died he gave to Jackson its beautiful Majestic theater, which lives after him, a suitable monument to his enterprise and enthusiasm.

Herman Fichtenberg to Build Another House

New Orleans Picture Magnate Announces New Magnificent Theater—To Be the Globe and Stand at 614 Canal Street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Another new and magnificent picture house has been announced for New Orleans came today from Herman Fichtenberg. The Fichtenberg interests are a little late in entering the building game, but in line with almost everything else they do, the plans out today for their new house promise to eclipse anything ever attempted in this city.

At 614 Canal street, on a site where a building recently was burned, Herman Fichtenberg will erect his Globe theater, a structure to be rivalled by none in the south, to seat at least 800 people, the building alone to cost $200,000, while the rental of the property will bring the total expenditure up to about $400,000. Film row rumor had it that Fichtenberg would build on this site several weeks ago, at which time the rumor was carried exclusively in Moving Picture World.

H. Fichtenberg

As announced at Mr. Fichtenberg's office, the theater will be a large fireproof house, and the most pretentious moving picture house to be built in the Crescent City,

"Although it is a little early just yet to announce our program plans," said Mr. Fichtenberg, when discussing the new house, "it is probable that we will use Bluebird and similar features. The lobby will be several times larger than any other lobby in the city, and in the construction of the house our architects promise to bring out some new ideas that are expected to revolutionize theater building in the south.

"The front of the house will be finished in stucco cement and the interior in polished stone. Although the house will seat 800, we have planned to do away with the balcony altogether. According to our architects' plans the seats will be built on an incline that will carry them about twenty feet in the air at the last row, which will be directly above the lobby. Boxes seating at least twelve people will be a feature of this arrangement."

W. H. Gueringer

In electrical effects, both inside and out, the new house promises to bring out some ideas new in this territory. An interchangeable sign will be installed in front of the house, while subdued electrics will be installed in the interior. Retiring rooms for men and women will be a feature.

Work on the building will commence within the next thirty or forty days, and it will be finished by October 1. William H. Gueringer is general manager of the Fichtenberg interests.

New Dodge City House

Chalk Beeson Theater Recently Opened by Two Sons of Famous Kansas Settler Is a Thing of Beauty—Designed as a Memorial, It Is Filled with Suggestions Recalling Old Frontier Days—Details.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

DODGE CITY, KAN.—Classed as a private enterprise, a public improvement and as a memorial to a man whose name is linked with Kansas history, the Chalk Beeson theater at Dodge City, Kan., stands in the very first rank of high class theaters in Kansas. Chalk Beeson, in whose honor the theater was erected, was a pioneer of that section of the country and one of the best known men in Kansas. Not only was the life of this man devoted to the Sunflower State, but he has seen service in other parts of the country, experiencing many thrills in his life as a stage coach driver in his youth and middle age.

The Chalk Beeson Theater.

Years ago this man conceived the idea of a great theater on the present site and discussed it with his friends, but he never lived to see his dream work out, and it devolved on his two sons, Merritt L. Beeson and Otero G. Beeson, to carry out the plans of their father.

The theater is built on a plot of ground 75 by 70 feet on one of the most prominent corners of this thriving city. The building itself is fireproof throughout and is considered very safe from all standpoints. The building cost $40,000 to erect and has a seating capacity of 885, with an exceptionally large balcony which seats 348 people.

Before the Railroad Came.

A stage with a twenty-nine-foot opening is a feature, while the front curtain on this platform is a wonderful reproduction of one of Remington's pictures, "Before the Railroad Came." It is a very beautiful tapestry. The stage itself is twenty-one feet deep and has an arch of twenty-four feet. Boxes adorn the side of the house. Part of the decorating scheme is worked out so as to bring back thoughts of the life and work this great pioneer experienced. On both sides of the arch can be seen cowboy outfits very artistically done. The color scheme is a mixture of bronze, combined with old gold and rose, while the finish of the furnishings is of French gray oak, giving the effect of a rich, soothing interior.

A lobby of marble and wainscoting stands on the corner, with entrances from both streets. Above it is beautiful steel canopy, studded all around by glazed globes. Lampions of this kind are affixed to the outer wall of the theater half way to the cornice and the lighting display at night attracts much attention. At one end of the building is an entrance to the rear of the stage and the dressing rooms, for the house was built with the idea of presenting theatrical plays, as well as moving picture productions.

The music, a large orchestra, is led by Arnold Baumont. M. L. Beeson, one of the sons of Chalk Beeson, acts as manager of the house.

The latest equipment is used over the entire house, two new Power's 6B machines being part of it.

On the opening day the theater owners distributed a neat little souvenir program telling of their efforts to carry out the wishes of their father and outlining the policy of the house. The service used is well distributed as follows: Three days, Pathe; two days, Paramount, and one day, Metro.

Ft. Worth Sunday Fight

Exhibitors Still Contending for Liberty to Show Pictures on Sabbath—Opponents Hold Mass Meeting—Proponents Parade with Banners—Free Sunday Shows Continue—Election On April 1.

By S. A. M. Harrison, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—The element in favor of Sunday exhibitions in Fort Worth is still fighting hard to get the matter before the people, and if determination means anything they will succeed. The city commission has again set a date for an election to try out the sentiment of the city officially, this time for April 1, and the former injunction fiasco is not likely to be repeated.

When the matter came up for reconsideration before the commission on March 13, the opponents had a mass meeting and the proponents a parade, the latter carrying banners with various inscriptions on them, such as "Are We Hoodlums?" "The Laboring People Know What They Want," etc.

The picture houses are now keeping open on Sunday, charging no admission and taking no collection, a large sign in front of each house inviting the people to come in as the guests of the labor unions.

The World representative was in Fort Worth March 19 and watched the fun.

The writer, a couple of weeks ago, made the statement that Sunday exhibitions were a local option proposition. In this he was mistaken, as there is an old state law prohibiting Sunday exhibitions of any kind. But it has been the custom in cities where an actual expression in favor of Sunday shows has been made for the state authorities to "hands off" and the shows have run. In Fort Worth the opponents of Sunday shows threaten to invoke this law if the vote goes against them, regardless of the American sentiment of majority rule. If they do, a state-wide move will be started to amend the law to make local option legal.

CENSOR ISSUES BULLETIN.

Semi-Weekly Bulletin of Films Passed and Rejected and Eliminations.

Dallas, Tex.—The local board of public welfare, which controls the censoring of public amusements has inaugurated a bulletin of the pictures, which it is planned to issue semi-weekly. This will contain a list of as many pictures as it is possible for the censor to pass on in advance and they will be classified under headings of those passed subject to further consideration, passed entirely, passed with eliminations and condemnations.

A fairly long list of eliminations is given, but the trend shows a broadness of mind that is commendable. Only extremely crude scenes and those unnecessarily suggestive have been eliminated, and apparently none of these will change the actual values of the pictures

Lots of Ambition.

Soon after the Vitagraph "Secret Kingdom" company reached San Antonio Robert Whitworth, one of the more important members of the cast, broke his arm and was put out of running for a while. The work had to go on, so Director Marston handed the part to one of the electricians of the company who had histrionic ambition, Dick Peischman by name. And we have it on good authority that Dick made good, particularly on stunts that required nerve. Dick says he wants his name on the lithos and intends to get it there.

"The Ne'er-Do-Well."

Invitations were issued by the Dallas office of the Big Four for an advance showing on "The Ne'er-Do-Well" at the Hippodrome theater Sunday morning, March 19. Quite a good crowd of exhibitors and others interested in the film business was present and the remarks on all sides were exceedingly complimentary to the picture. C. A. Meade of the Dallas V-L-S-E office, and Mrs. Meade, were present and acted as host and hostess assisted by Messrs. Plattenberg and Campbell of the Hippodrome.

Two Receiverships.

A very interesting receivership is now on record in film annals in Dallas, involving the Empress theater. W. D. Nevills originally leased the house from E. B. Perkins, sub-leasing it to Mrs. F. F. Cagle. Mr. Perkins sued for foreclosure against Mrs. Cagle and made Mr. Nevills party to the suit. Mr. Nevills filed a motion for a receiver and W. G. Miller was placed in charge.

On suit of W. J. Henderson a receiver E. A. Henderson was placed in charge of the Hippodrome theater on March 14. The house is closed pending litigation.

Oldknow in Dallas.

William Oldknow, general manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, the southern branch of the Universal, was in Dallas the week of March 13 on general company business.

The Southern Film and Supply Company is a new supply house that is opening up in Dallas at 1817 Main street, in the building that was reconstructed for J. D. Wheelan. Just who are the organizers of the new company has not been given out at this writing.

Will Handle Chaplins.

DENVER NEWS LETTER.

By E. C. Day, Denver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Denver Woman's Club Favors Pictures.

DENVER, Col.—The Denver Woman's Club has enlisted on the side of the photoplay through the efforts of Frank Harris, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, in Denver, who addressed the body at its last general meeting. This organization numbers several thousand members, who represent the best and most influential families in Denver. The value of their O. K. in motion pictures cannot be overestimated when it is considered that as wives and mothers they control or have a big influence over a majority of the amusement-seeking populace of the city.

Mr. Harris was the only male guest at the gathering, which combined a luncheon and regular meeting. In being invited to address the club he was accorded an honor that has never before been bestowed on a moving picture man.

The photoplay was the only subject discussed in a session that lasted several hours. Miss Margaret Conway, city amusement inspector, was also a guest, and spoke on the subject of censorship. She expressed her approval of the motion picture as an amusement and an educator and took occasion to praise the conduct of the business in Denver both by the exchange managers and the exhibitors.

Following Mr. Harris's address the club as a body gave an expression of sentiment against censorship.

Baseball and Billiard Tournament.

Denver, Col.—The Rocky Mountain Screen Club has found new fields to conquer. It is going in for sport. On suggestion of President Harry Nolan plans were gotten under way at the regular weekly luncheon at the Savoy Hotel for the organization of a baseball team and the launching of a pocket billiard tournament. Both will be confined to the members of the club, except where baseball talent is recruited from employees of the exchanges or theaters.

It is proposed to have a baseball team that will play nines representing other industries and perhaps challenge screen clubs of other cities. In addition several teams will be organized within the club to play a series of games among one another. These teams probably will represent the various exchanges.

Every member of the club, from E. R. Erwin, the youthful and athletic owner of the Colfax theater, to H. H. Buckwalter, the veteran and portly manager of the Kleine exchange, will be expected to play in the club league. Some excellent baseball talent is available for the team that will represent the Screen Club in games with outsiders.

Plans for further increasing the membership of the club were discussed at the weekly luncheon and committees named to wait upon the newspaper publishers of the city and owners of legitimate theaters with the object in view of making them honorary members. A new campaign for getting out of town exhibitors on the membership roles was also launched and will be pushed with increased vigor.

President Nolan and Secretary Huffman were named on a committee to devise ways and means of raising revenue aside from the regular dues.

Pay in Advance Policy

San Francisco Exchanges Inaugurate a New Policy—Will Now Require Payment in Advance for Shows from All Theaters—Must Get Check or Will Send C. O. D. —Statement of Object in Move.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—Notices have been sent to exhibitors throughout the San Francisco territory, which extends from the Oregon line to the Tehachapi Mountains, and includes the State of Nevada, to the effect that commencing with March 27th the film exchanges of this city will operate on a cash in advance basis only. Several exchanges have been operating on this plan for some time and the notices sent out by them differ slightly from those of other exchanges to conform to their systems.

Object in New Policy.

The following extract from the general notice sent out will illustrate the reason for making the change and will show the plan of the new system: "Our object in adopting this policy is to eliminate unfair competition and unnecessory losses and place the business on a more substantial footing. We find it becomes necessary to change our present manner of collecting for film service and therefore wish to advise that effective with the week beginning March 27th, and each week thereafter, all film rental must be paid for on or before Friday for the following week's service. To illustrate: Your service bill for the week of March 27th will be mailed to reach you not later than March 20th, which will give you ample time to have your remittance reach us on or before the following Friday, March 24th. If your remittance is not received by March 24th a C. O. D. will be attached to your next out-going shipment for the full amount due. If your check is received after a C. O. D. has gone forward it will be immediately returned to you as we will not release shipments that have been made C O. D. This rule is imperative and will be enforced in all cases.

To Eliminate Undesirable Customers.

"You can readily appreciate, we believe, that the operating of this rule is no reflection on your personal credit or standing, nor does it apply to any one exhibitor or set of exhibitors, but is the only means of eliminating the undesirables from our books and removing from your competition the man of reckless business methods, thereby giving you, as well as ourselves, a protection which we badly need at the present time."

Camera Company Moves Offices.

San Francisco.—The American Movie Camera Company, which for several months has been located on an upper floor of the Call building, has removed its offices to the ground floor of this structure, a large space having been taken over at Annie and Jessie streets. This concern, of which W. A. King is president and general manager, was incorporated in January of the present year with a capital stock of $200,000 for the purpose of manufacturing and placing on the market of a moving picture camera weighing about five pounds, which can also be used as a projector. Demonstration rooms have been fitted up in the new quarters and the manufacture of the camera will be commenced at an early date.

San Francisco Film at Portola Theater.

San Francisco.—The presentation of the Bluebird photoploy production "Hop," from the story of Rufus Steele, attracted large crowds to the Portola theater recently. Large posters along the waterfront and in the shipping districts drew visitors to this theater from these sections and they found no difficulty in recognizing the local points where scenes had been laid. The pictures were taken with the cooperation of the officials of the Customs service and accurately depict many features met with regularly in contending with the smuggling evil.

"Ramona" at the Cort.

San Francisco.—The Cort theater, one of San Francisco's finest playhouses, and one given over largely to high class stage attractions, has been secured for the initial presentation of Clune's production, "Ramona." The admission prices will range from 25 cents to 75 cents, all seats being reserved.

Crowds Cause Arrests

Three Portland, Oregon, Theater Managers Fined in One Week For Crowding Theaters—Fire Marshal Starts Anti-Crowding Crusade—Foyers As Well As Aisles Must Be Kept Clear.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PORTLAND, ORE.—With the coming of good weather came good business and big crowds to the city's moving picture theaters. But crowded foyers and lobbies are not countenanced by the city administration, and those theaters which were fortunate enough to share the increased business were compelled to contribute a portion of their box office receipts to the city's exchequer by the way of fines for being crowded. A delegation of firemen under the direction of Jay Stevens, fire marshal, visited the big theaters with the result that Edwin James of the Majestic, E. J. Myrick of the Columbia and Fred Langerman of the New Grand each paid $20 fines to Municipal Judge Langguth for violating the city ordinance relative to crowding theaters.

Business during the winter in Portland's theaters has been nothing to brag about, and with the coming of good business and the crowded houses and the three arrests in one week, the city's exhibitors generally were inclined to censure the city administration for its overly strict interpretation and enforcement of the anti-crowding ordinance. Foyers as well as aisles must be kept clear has been the ruling. All the men fined claim they handled their crowds in a safe manner and that if there was any violation of the ordinance it was a technical one.

Myrick Blames "Peggy."

Manager Myrick of the Columbia theater, blames Billie Burke and "Peggy" for his trouble. He stated that the picture had established a record for attendance in a moving picture theater in Portland and that he would hold the picture over for the following week. All week long line stood on the sidewalk in front of the theater.

Interference Unwarranted, Says Rogers.

W. M. Rogers, assistant manager of the Majestic, who, by the way, recently returned from an extended tour of the East, stated that his theater was enjoying exceptionally good business on the night the house was alleged to have been overcrowded, but that every effort was made to comply with the spirit of the ordinance and handle the crowds safely. He, too, believed that if the ordinance had been violated the violation was merely technical and did not warrant police interference.

Sunset Changes Hands.

Portland, Ore.—The Sunset, one of Portland's prettiest moving picture theaters, has been leased to G. T. Holtzclaw, who will take possession April 1. Jennings and Company, the original lessees of the theater property, and who formerly conducted the theater, will retire from the show business, temporarily at least.

The Sunset, formerly the Arcade, has been the home of photoplays in Portland since the beginning of the industry. The house is very centrally located and is built on one of the most valuable pieces of property in the city. Mr. Holtzclaw, the new owner, also owns the Circle and the Cineograph theaters in Portland and has been very successful in the local exhibition field. It is announced that Edwin T. Pittmon will take over the Cineograph about April 1st. Mr. Pittmon formerly conducted the Union Avenue theater.

Levys Will Not Conduct Hippodrome.

Portland, Ore.—As announced in last week's issue several details of the Baker-Hippodrome deal were under consideration at the time of the writing of the article. The final negotiations resulted in the changing of the name of the Baker theater to the Hippodrome, but the house will not be conducted by the Levys. The plan of showing pictures and vaudeville in the house after the closing of the stock season will undoubtedly be followed. Nearly a week after it was announced that the deal with Levy Brothers had been closed, Julius Levy stated that the plan to run his Hippodrome attractions in the theater had been given up. Another deal for the use of the theater during the summer months is said to be pending.

New Pathe Manager.

Portland, Ore.—B. J. Sperry, who succeeded Walter S. Wessling as manager of the Portland Pathe exchange, received his early schooling in the film industry alongside of Mr. Wessling. With Mr. Wessling Mr. Sperry organized the Brooklyn Amusement Company in Portland, which later expanded its scope and was reorganized as the Northwest Amusement Company. This last named company controlled five houses in Portland and Mr. Sperry was its president. Entering the exchange end of the industry, Mr. Sperry was first employed as shipper, then as road man in the Portland territory. He has a personality that makes friends quickly and he is very popular with northwest exhibitors.

B. J. Sperry.

Former Keystone Director With Local Company.

Portland, Ore.—Edwin P. Nolan, who was with Keystone for over three years and later with L-KO and other companies in California, has affiliated himself with the Continental Players, a local concern which advertises itself as producers of home talent photoplays. N. Olness, who formerly conducted the Northwest Weekly in Portland, is one of the heads of the new company.

Alaska Exhibitor Visits.

Portland, Ore.—W. H. Thompson, manager of the Dream theater, Juneau, Alaska, was a recent visitor in Portland, calling on G. A. Reed, local manager of the Mutual exchange. Mr. Thompson states that his theater is enjoying prosperity and that the admission price in Juneau is 25 cents.

Another Small Circuit.

Forest Grove, Ore.—Lester Armentrout of Forest Grove, Oregon, has opened three small theaters in that vicinity, at Banks, Cornelius and Gaston. These theaters are operated on a circuit and Pathe service is used.

SPOKANE NEWS LETTER.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

Trouble With Operators at Majestic.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.—H. S. McMillen of the Majestic theater was having some trouble with the operators' union several days ago and pickets were maintained on the streets for a couple of hours one evening. This has been proclaimed contrary to a city ordinance and the pickets withdrew of their own accord.

The following evening the house was well filled with patrons when a noxious odor caused the entire audience to leave. Investigation by city detectives showed some kind of ammonia crystals had been used to sprinkle on the floor and when stepped on it threw off the odor. The management laid this to the union men, but no arrests were made. Things have been quiet for several days.

Ne'er-Do-Well at the Liberty.

Spokane, Washington.—"The Ne'er-Do-Well," by Rex Beach, the Selig spectacular drama, played at the Liberty for one week, beginning March 13.

The admission to this production was 25 and 50 cents, and Manager Ralph Rufner announced that it had played to capacity houses during each performance. Considering that this is the first week of Lent, and that there is an evangelist in town who speaks to from 3,000 to 4,000 people in the afternoon, and from 4,000 to 5,000 people in the evening, the picture drew unusually well.

Heard at Local Exchanges.

Spokane, Wash.—That there has been a general improvement in business conditions recently has been reported by representatives of the film exchanges in Spokane. Out-of-town moving picture exhibitors have been visiting the local exchanges and some of these report changes being made and business good. Reports of new places being opened were reported.

At the Pathe exchange it was learned that E. G. Call had opened the Inland theater at Rockford, Washington, and that he was taking the Pathe releases.

W. E. Moon, who took over the Rex theater, Ritzville, Wash., March 1, was also a visitor to the Pathe exchange, and reports that he is closing the old place and opening in a better location in Ritzville. He has been running Paramount and other features.

W. J. Drummond, manager of the Mutual exchange, reports that several local houses are bidding for the new Charlie Chaplin releases and that business is good in his exchange.

A. R. Patton, traveling representative of the Spokane exchange, has been aiding in the Portland territory recently, but is to return here next week and mage the north Idaho and east Montana territory.

Other news gathered at the Mutual exchange was that C. E. Stilwell of the Unique theater, Spokane, had purchased a new Power 6-A machine for his house. The exchange also sold a new Simplex machine to E. J. Walton of the Rose moving picture theater, Colfax, Wash., and an Edison machine was sold to the new moving picture house just opened in Coulee City, Wash.

R. R. Belcher of the Star theater, Lewiston, Idaho, visited the city and reported good business with Mutual pictures.

F. W. Warner, formerly owner of the Rex, Ritzville, visited the city and is casting about for a location here, according to Mr. Drummond.

E. L. Lamp of the Princess theater, Garfield, Wash., visited the Mutual exchange and reports business fair.

Mrs. F. J. Anderson of the Bell theater, Palouse, Wash., reports she is doing excellent business with Mutual releases.

It was also announced by Mr. Drummond that the Gem, Spokane, had resumed running "The Diamond From the Sky" serial and that N. E. Hoff, of the Coeur d'Alene Photo Play Company, operating the Dream and Rex theaters in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, had visited the office and repored excellent business.

W. Potter, of the Universal Film & Supply Company exchange, has just returned from a trip to Montana where he lined up a circuit of theaters for the Universal releases at Cutbank, Valier and Conrad. He reports that business is the best it has been for the past year.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Ask Refunding of Taxes.

Vancouver, B. C.—The Canada Amusement Company has made application to the finance committee of the Vancouver city council for the return of about $175 in license fees, which were paid by the company for the Imperial and Rose theaters in 1914. It is stated that for certain reasons outside the control of the company these houses failed to remain open during the full term covered by the licenses (the reason being poor business) and the amount asked for represents the fees for the part of the year during which the theaters remained closed. Before taking action the matter was referred to the city solicitor, the license inspector and the comptroller, to report at the next meeting of the committee. Some of the aldermen were of the opinion that to grant the request of the amusement company would be setting up a dangerous precedent.

An Unusual Benefit Performance.

Esquimalt, B. C.—At a benefit performance given on a recent evening at the Rex theater at Esquimalt, B. C., in aid of the local branch of the Red Cross Society, practically the entire program, aside from the moving pictures, was given by officers and men attached to the Japanese warships which are at present in the harbor. Even the decorating of the theater was done by the Japanese, who produced some beautiful effects. Admiral Abe and other Japanese officers were present, as well as Commander Shenton of the Esquimalt naval station, with members of his staff. Admiral Abe delivered an address through an interpreter. Exhibitions of wrestling, fencing and physical exercises were given and the performance concluded with the singing of the British and Japanese national anthems.

J. Harvey Running the Majestic.

Prince Rupert, B. C.—J. Harvey of the Majestic theater, Prince Rupert, B. S., was a recent visitor to Vancouver. Mr. Harvey has just succeeded George Delasala as manager of the Majestic.

R. S. Miller Heads Local Specialty Film.

Winnipeg, Man.—R. S. Miller has succeeded W. E. Allan as manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Special Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributors of Pathe films.

Business Notes from Western Canada.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Metro films have been booked by Manager John Hazza of the Empress theater, Edmonton, Alberta, and will be shown hereafter on Monday and Tuesday of each week. This is the first house in Alberta to book these productions, and Less Kauffman, western general manager for Metro Starfilms, Limited, gave them a good send-off by taking a half page ad in the Edmonton Journal. The same policy was purused on their initial presentation in Winnipeg, and has been an undoubted help to exhibitors using the service, as the papers have run many Metro press stories in conenction with the ads. Mr. Kauffman is expected in Vancouver within a very short time, and may open an exchange in this city.

Vancouver, B. C.—The second week of "The Battle Cry of Peace" in this city was played at the Globe theater. The orchestra was enlarged for the occasion, and an innovation in Vancouver was introduced in reserving all seats for the opening perfomances, at which time prices were 50 cents and $1.00.

Winnipeg, Man.—The first Western Canadian showing of "Poor Little Peppina," the seven-reel Mary Pickford subject, took place at the Province theater here, and Manager J. A. Schuberg reports capacity business during the four days it was run.

Soldiers and Union Jobs

In Calgary, Alberta, Operators Walk Out of Five Theaters When Managers Refuse to Sign New Agreement—Trouble had Been Expected and Returned, Wounded Soldiers Had Been Taught to Fill the Jobs.

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CALGARY, ALBERTA.—Because the managers of five Calgary moving picture theaters refused to sign the new agreement drawn up by the Calgary local of the operators' union, and including a closed-shop clause, the operators at the Allen, Monarch, Bijou, Princess and Isis theaters at 11 o'clock on the morning of March 13 refused to go to work, and announced that they would not do so until the agreement was signed. As a result the houses were forced to close their doors pending the securing of substitute operators.

At a hastily called meeting of the managers affected, J. B. Cronk of the Allen theater got into communication with Secretary William Alsdorf of the Returned Soldiers' Association, and was informed that suffcient operators to fill the places of the strikers could be supplied immediately from among the discharged soldiers who have recently returned to the city. These men were quickly on hand at the affected theaters, and shortly after 12 o'clock all were runr'ng smoothly.

Set Returned Soldiers at Work.

The managers have been expecting this move on the part of the union for some time, it is said, and several weeks ago they arranged with the Returned Soldiers' Association to teach some of the returned men to be operators. A projection machine and an instructor were installed in the basement of the Empress theater, and a good sized class was formed. It is stated that the men passed the provincial examination a short time ago with flying colors, having an average grade 20 per cent. higher than any previous class.

After the strike was on, Joseph T. Aaron, secretary of the Operators' Union, made the following statement: "We went personally to Mr. Alsdorf and offered to teach all the returned soldiers free of charge, whereas in the other cases they have been paying $25 each to be taught So far as the returned soldier is concerned, we had no opposition whatever to them. We had the intention to admit any returned soldier who was competent without any admission fee. As far as the agreement which we presented to the managers to sign is concerned, it in no way prevented the returned soldiers from obtaining employment at the theaters, as we have taken the matter up with Mr. Alsdorf, and we are and always have been willing to give positions over to returned soldiers as soon as they were competent."

A Better Offer Than Union's.

Secretary Alsdorf admitted that the union had offered to teach the men operating, but said that they would have had to start in as apprentices and work with an operator for four or five months before they would be allowed to take out a card in the union and work a machine. This, he thought, was unfair, as many of the men were unable to support themselves without any salary for that length of time and when they had received the chance to learn it in a few weeks at small cost decided it was better than the offer of the union.

Owing to the angle of the affair brought about by the introduction of the returned soldiers as factors in the situation, the main question involved in the strike bids fair to be lost sight of, and public sentiment will no doubt be strongly behind the soldiers, all of whom have been wounded and discharged as unfit for further military duty.

Operators Want Provincial Licenses.

Vancouver, B. C.—E. J. Huttelmayer, business agent of the Vancouver Local No. 348, I. A. T. E. E., and operator at the Colonial theater, has informed the correspondent of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD that the union is now in communication with Premier Bowser at Victoria, regarding the establishment of an adequate Provincial examination for operators. At the present time a Provincial license costs $1.00 per year, with an additional 50 cts. for attorney's fee. A city license costs $5.00, and is issued after an examination conducted by Mr. Huttelmayer.

Under the arrangements suggested by the Vancouver local, the city license would be done away with, and an applicant desiring to take the Provincial examination would pay an "entrance fee" of $5.00, which would be forfeited if the applicant failed to pass. In the event of his passing the examination, he would be required to pay an additional $5.00 to secure his card. It is planned to conduct the examinations under the supervision of the censor's department, and it has been decided that with the charges fixed as indicated it would be possible for the deparement to secure the latest models of the leading projection machines, motor generator, and other equipment, so that those taking the examination could be tried out on practical problems, with the various machines at hand. It is planned to have a special room at the court house set aside for this purpose, and to have an examining board consisting of perhaps two members of the union, the city electrician, and chief of the fire department.

New Public Amusements Bill.

Winnipeg, Manitoba. — Hon. Edward Brown's Public Amusements Bill, providing for a change of censorship in Manitoba, and for the regulation of amusements generally, was finally gotten into shape by the committee on law amendments, and was reported to the legislature on March 9.

Owing to the fact that the city of Winnipeg objected to having the revenue from pool and billiard rooms, etc., go to the Province, as provided in the bill, numerous changes were made, as a result of which the amount to be received by the city is increased by about $12,000.

The proposal to have Saskatchewan and Alberta combine with Manitoba in the administration of censorship was approved, however, and negotiations are now being proceeded with in an effort to bring about the consolidation. An especially stringent clause in the bill provides that film exchanges which handle less than 100 subjects a year must pay a tax of fifty dollars per reel.

J. D. McPhee Managing the Strand.

Vancouver, B. C.—William Hansher, who has been conducting the Strand theater in Vancouver and the Edison in New Westminster, has given up the former house, which is now being run by J. D. McPhee, attorney for the owners. J. P. Pitner, who has been manager of the Strand, has gone to Trail, B. C., where he is to have charge of the Star theater.

Change at Star Theater.

Rosslan, B. C.—Thos. Nagle, formerly manager of the Star theater at Rossland, B. C., is now in Vancouver, and the house is now being conducted by Mr. Hackney, owner of the property.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 611 Erie County Bank Building, Special Correspondent Moving Picture World.

At World Film Headquarters.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The headquarters of the World Film Corporation at 269 Main street, Buffalo, are undergoing several improvements. Felix F. Feist of that company was a recent visitor and met several of the local exhibitors. The staff of the Buffalo office consists of J. L. Muhlhauser, manager; Miss E. R. Fetes, office assistant; O. A. Siegel, booker; Frank J. Young, in charge of the poster and shipping department. The latest releases offered Buffalo exhibitors at this office are Kitty Gordon in "As in a Looking Glass," and Charles Sheridan in "The Struggle."

Manager Michaels Uses His Head.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A strong campaign is being conducted in Buffalo to get recruits for the 65th regiment, National Guard, a local organization. In connection with this plan much publicity is being given to the question of preparedness. Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, took advantage of this feature by having representatives of the National Guard stationed in his lobby to secure enlistments. The work was done in the regulation way and 150 young men joined the regiment. All this was done while "The Battle Cry of Peace" was being played at the Academy and the enlistments added an advertising value to the attraction.

Moving pictures of the "Battle of Vera Cruz" were recently shown at the 65th regiment armory, Buffalo. There also was a lecture on "Preparedness" by First Lieutenant J. W. O'Mahoney, Coast Artillery Corps. The proceeds of the entertainment were added to a fund to purchase 112 auto trucks for the National Guard.

Maurice Lobel With Triangle.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Maurice Lobel has just been appointed a travelling representative of the Triangle Film Corporation by George C. Hickey, manager of the Buffalo branch. A picture of Mr. Lobel appears herewith. He will cover the entire section of New York State west of Utica.

Maurice Lobel.

"The Triangle Service is well represented in all the big towns and cities in my territory," said Mr. Lobel. "My purpose is to place the service in all the small towns in the same field."

Mr. Lobel formerly covered New York State and the South for the World Film Corporation. He was an exhibitor in New York City for three and one-half years. At one time he represented the Warner Feature Film Company.

"Peace" Film Well Set at Academy.

Manager Michaels introduced some good showmanship during the engagement of "The Battle Cry of Peace" at the Academy theater, Buffalo, last week. American soldiers, heavily armed, stood on guard in the lobby and a modern field gun added to the realism of the scene. The lobby and theater were appropriately draped with American flags and the orchestra furnished national airs. A musical act, supplied by talented G. A. R. men, was an extra attraction. On account of these and other appropriate features, crowds were attracted to every performance.

At the Essemar Film Co.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Charles R. Rogers, president of the Essemar Film Co., 4 Chapin block, Buffalo, has appointed R. B. Matson road manager and W. Lawrence Morley publicity man. Mr. Morley, who writes good copy, prepares press notices and other aids for exhibitors. Mr. Rogers uses many night letters and circulars in reaching his customers. He has the New York state rights on "One Day," "Salamander," "The Whirl of Life" and other features.

"Nation" Film Made Money at Star.

Buffalo, N. Y.—One of the best paying productions at the Star theater this season was "The Birth of a Nation," which recently closed a long engagement. Manager Cornell followed this attraction with "Potash and Perlmutter," a regular theatrical play.

P. K. Johnstone Promoted.

Syracuse, N. Y.—P. K. Johnstone of Buffalo has been placed in charge of the Syracuse office of the Paramount Service. The appointment was made by D. J. Savage, manager of this service in the Buffalo territory. Miss Margaret Powers has been chosen secretary to Mr. Savage.

The new film vault of the Buffalo Paramount offices will be completed about April 1. Great quantities of posters and heralds have arrived and are being systematically filed.

Local Mutual Film Doings.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Herbert P. Luce, head of the legal department of the Mutual Film Corporation, recently called on G. H. Christopher, manager of the Buffalo branch of this company. Another caller was A. N. Waters, manager of the Lyric theater, Corry, Pa. Miss Bertha Reynolds, who has been with the company two years, has been promoted to the position of bookkeeper and cashier of this branch. She succeeds Frank Messersmith, who has gone to Philadelphia. Mr. Christoffers recently screened Burr McIntosh in "My Partner," an old Broadway production.

Traveling Licenses Abused

Toronto Exhibitors May Ask Provincial Government to Stop Issuing Licenses to Traveling Motion Picture Lecturers.

By W. M. Gladish, Toronto Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Toronto Moving Picture Protective Association has taken up the matter of asking the Ontario Provincial Government to stop the issue of "traveling licenses" to moving picture lecturers, one of whom has made use of Massey Hall for four or five weeks. Partly because of an advertising scheme with a local newspaper, this lecturer has been able to draw big crowds to the large hall every night in the week.

No traveling entertainer should be permitted to do this, the local exhibitors declare, because the man has taken considerable money from the city and, in addition, he has provided direct competition with the moving picture houses, the managers of which help to support the community.

Friction Between City and Province.

Toronto, Ontario.—When Robert Wilson, manager of the Iola theater, Danforth avenue, Toronto, was charged with obstructing an officer who wanted to inspect his show, Magistrate Kingsford decided that he would not make a conviction in the case because he did not wish to "meddle in a wrangle between the city and the Ontario Legislature." There is some friction between the city and provincial authorities regarding the inspection of moving picture theaters. Mr. Wilson had ejected a Provincial representative, S. R. Heakes, from his premises, but the police court judge would take no action in the matter.

New Theater on Majestic Site.

The work of demolishing the Majestic theater, once the Toronto home for melodrama, has been started at last and it is announced that the new first-run moving picture theater will be opened by Mr. E. L. Ruddy early next August.

William Howarth Heads His Majesty's.

A theater manager who has returned to the city of Toronto after an absence of one year is William Howarth, who was formerly the manager of the Crystal Palace, the oldest picture theater in Toronto. Howarth, who has been in Montreal, will now control the operation of His Majesty's, a new downtown house.

Visitors to Ontario.

Toronto, Ontario.—L. T. Rogers, of New York, new Canadian general manager for the Fox corporation, has just concluded a week's visit of inspection of the local Fox branch and the Toronto field of operations.

Another recent important visitor was A. D. Langley, the Canadian sales manager of the Pathe, who spent two weeks at the local office of the Specialty Film Import Company, Limited.

"Peace" Picture Liked in Canada.

Toronto, Ontario.—So successful a hit did the Vitagraph feature, "The Battle Cry of Peace," make in Toronto, that Mr. W. C. Gookin, Canadian manager of the V-L-S-E has imported a second print of the picture. Both prints have been started on a long tour of the country. The feature was first booked by The Strand theater, Toronto, for one week, but the engagement was extended for a second week and there was no diminishment or sign of it, in the crowds at the end of the second week.

An interested spectator one day was Mayor Church of Toronto, who immediately penned a manifesto of appreciation, a reproduction of which in the Mayor's handwriting has been added to the picture and is being shown at every performance in Canada.

Still a third print of "The Battle Cry of Peace" is being exhibited in British Columbia, but this is under the control of the Seattle office of the V-L-S-E. There are, however, three prints of the picture at work in the Dominion.

Metro Distributing Plan.

Toronto, Ontario.—An arrangement for the rental of film features in a new and interesting plan has just been drawn up between Starfilms, Limited, distributors of Metro features in Canada, and fifteen exhibitors of Toronto. The latter are all members of the Moving Picture Protective Association, a committee of which carried on the negotiations with the exchange firm. The contract covers a period of six months, it is understood, and each three of the fifteen exhibitors handle one picture each week. The fifteen were divided into five sections of three, and five features were taken to cover the first week's operations. Each picture will have a total of five weeks' bookings and the schedules have been so arranged that no exhibitor will have any picture more than once. An endless chain plan has been worked out so that each show manager will secure his share of first run pictures, but he stands to receive other releases in mathematical rotation so that no one will enjoy any real advantage in the way of priority.

Toronto, Ontario.—There has been an interesting battle between the Blue Bird and Metro interests for bookings at Shea's Hippodrome and since the first of the year the two local exchanges have practically alternated week to week. One result has been that patrons of this house have enjoyed a wide variety of subjects.

Extract from an Article in the New York Dramatic Mirror, Saturday, March 4th.

Stage versus Screen

"A Prophetic Dip into the Future of the Motion Picture Art"

Henry MacMahon

"At the other extreme, grandiose, historical and nature subjects will always be most happily represented on the screen. Already the motion picture has put the old fashioned stage spectacle out of business. Painted lath and canvas, and the narrow cockpit of the indoor stage cannot compare with the new art's shadowgraphs of outdoor Nature, of multitudes in battle or in festival, or infinitely varied action amid exquisite landscape and seascape surroundings. A maker who can produce a "Birth of a Nation" or a "Quo Vadis" a "Cabiria" or a "Neptune's Daughter" will reap the very highest rewards of production."

I draw the attention of the exhibitor and the public to my forthcoming production of "A Daughter of the Gods" with Annette Kellermann in the title role.

Herbert Brenon

Producer of "Neptune's Daughter."

AN APPRECIATION

Mr. Chester Beecroft has resigned after being in my employ for the past two years.

Mr. Beecroft has been the most able, honest, frank, capable, far-seeing, enthusiastic and resourceful helper I have ever had and I regret his decision to resign.

Mr. Beecroft's success in the future is assured by his unusual ability, and I do not know of anyone who can point to a longer list of achievements in a large way in his chosen field.

During the time that Mr. Beecroft has been associated with me a strong friendship has grown up which even his decision to travel in different paths cannot destroy.

Mr. Beecroft carries with him my best wishes and a key to the front door to be used whenever he wishes to return.

THE FATAL BEAN (April 3).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Miranda (Patsy De Forrest); Nurse (Alice Mann). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Old Hiram Applecore lies dying of a complication of diseases. The doctors have given him up. Miranda, in the kitchen, is baking beans, despite the passing of Applecore. Just as Hiram is passing into the great unknown he catches a faint odor of bean. The first whiff almost sends him over the mysterious barrier, but he rallies sufficiently to send for Miranda. He begs as a last dying wish for a spoonful of beans. Miranda rushes quickly to the telephone and asks the doctor's advice. Old Doc Beazer replies that as long as he must die, a spoonful of beans will make but little difference. Miranda, therefore, complies with the dying wish of Applecore.

At first Applecore is only able to eat the tiniest fraction of the food reaches the gastronomic apparatus he revives. At the sixth spoonful he has recovered sufficiently to kiss Miranda. At last he is dressing for the street. He flings the medicines out the window, hitting the undertaker on the head, who is rushing to do his duty. Then Applecore rushes to the doctors to tell them of his wonderful discovery; but they rush away in terrible fright, thinking that the ghost of Applecore is abroad.

Applecore decides to exploit what he thinks is a great discovery. He has Miranda buy up all the beans in the neighborhood and has Miranda undertake the colossal task of baking them. He promises Miranda to marry her for her share in this patent medicine scheme. Applecore converts the result of Miranda's cooking into pills. He invents a device in which he dumps the beans. They come out as white pellets. Applecore disguises himself as a doctor, hires a horse and buggy and rides into town, sets up his platform and expounds the value of his discovery. He brings with him clever confederates who mix with the throng. They are lame, ill and otherwise, but recover on the administration.

The local doctors hold a conference and call on the Chief of Police. They have Applecore arrested and thrown into jail for practicing without a license. He is fed on beans, much to his discomfiture.

THE RETURN OF JAMES JEROME (Two Parts—April 4).—The cast: Cal McCall (Lamor Johnstone); Roger Winton (George Routh); Lee Ditson (Melvin Mayo); Joyce, his daughter (Violet MacMillan); Lorna Bates (Adda Gleason); Native (Jay Morley); Captain Moore (William J. Spencer). Written by Maude Thomas. Directed by Edward Sloman.

Cal McCall is the assistant shipping clerk in the office of Roger Winton, a wealthy ship owner. In a quarrel over some bills with the old head clerk, Diston, Cal is discharged, and Captain Moore, the other party to the quarrel, leaves to take the matter up with Winton. Joyce, Ditson's daughter, is secretly in love with Cal, and is very unhappy over the conference. Cal is betrothed to Lorna Bates, the private secretary of Winton, but Lorna succumbs to her love of beautiful things, and when Winton proposes, accepts him. After his discharge Cal calls on her, and she returns his ring. Utterly disheartened, Cal proceeds to drown his troubles in drink.

Meanwhile, Winton goes with Captain Moore to argue with Ditson about the bills. Ditson, angered, would strike Winton, but the latter fells him with one blow. The old man does not rise, and Moore makes the awful discovery that he is dead. Winton is horror-stricken but he sees a way out when Cal drunkenly staggers into the room, having been attracted by the lowering of a shade. Winton knocks him unconscious and then has Moore take him on board the Vinnie, which sails that night. The next day the papers announced Cal as the murderer of Ditson.

When Cal comes to, the Vinnie is far out at sea, and Captain Moore makes him believe that he killed Ditson while drunk. A month later, Winton and Lorna are married, and she immediately starts to indulge in great extravagance. Cal makes his escape from Vinnie by a dive, and Moore thinks he has been drowned. But a native of a tropical isle finds Cal unconscious on the beach and carries him home. After a delirious fever of some weeks, Cal's hair has turned snow-white, and he is much changed in appearance. He finds that the natives of the island possess quantities of pearls, the value of which they are ignorant.

A year later Cal, now known as James Jerome, has amassed a fortune from his pearl fisheries. Captain Moore stops at the island on one of his trips, and comes face to face with Cal. The latter forces him to sign a confession which states that Winton is the real murderer of Ditson. In a storm shortly afterward the Vinnie is wrecked, and the crew perish. Winton receives this news with mingled feelings of joy at the thought that his crime will never be known, and worry at the loss of the boat, for Lorna's extravagances are rapidly ruining him. And then to the city comes the wealthy Mr. Jerome. Lorna and Winton both think of Cal McCall when they see him, and yet Jerome is very different.

Cal is not long in wreaking his vengeance. As Jerome, he breaks Winton on the stock exchange, and the latter is forced to accept an humble position in the shipping office he once controlled. Cal lives in Winton's home, and Joyce is his secretary. Joyce finds herself loving the man who reminds her of Cal McCall, and her love is returned, unknown to her.

But Cal's vengeance is not yet complete. He invites Winton and Lorna to a reception given at their former home, and Lorna is forced to pawn her jewels to buy a simple evening dress for the occasion. Cal tempts them by showing them his collection of pearls. Winton sees the collection worth a small fortune, placed in the secret safe of which he knows the combination. Cal's plan works. Winton tries to steal the jewels, and finds Captain Moore's confession in the safe. As he reads it in utmost horror, Cal's faithful native shoots him as a burglar. Before the assembly of guests, Cal states his true identity, and leaving Lorna to mourn over her past follies, finds happiness with Joyce.

BIOGRAPH.

THREE FRIENDS (Reissue—April 3).—The cast: The Bachelor's Club (Henry Walthall, Lionel Barrymore and Jack Dillon); the Girl (Blanche Sweet); the Friend (Harry Carey).

Joe's marriage came as a surprise to Tom and Bill with whom he had sworn that no woman should ever break up the bachelors' club. Tom couldn't forgive. Made foreman of the shop, he picked a quarrel with Joe, then discharged him and gave him a bad name. Starvation confronted the little family. They determined to die. Then Bill came back to town, heard by chance what Tom had done, and reached Joe's home in time to avert a tragedy. Thereafter the club met regularly in Mrs. Joe's parlor instead of Heinie's saloon.

PATHS THAT CROSSED (Three Parts—April 5).—The cast: Thomas Mandell (Charles H. Mailes); Mrs. de Lisle (Claire McDowell); Ruth Mandell (Viola Smith); Clyde de Lisle (Jose Ruben); the Actress (Hazel Henderson).

Thomas Mandell deserts his wife and Ruth, his little daughter, for an actress. Then when the actress has been stripped of her money he abandons her to poverty. He establishes himself in a city under another name. He becomes prosperous enough to join a fashionable club which gives him entree into society. Then, through his son Clyde, he meets Mrs. de Lisle, a rich widow. Mrs. de Lisle is the childhood chum of Mandell's abandoned wife, but he doesn't know that—nor does Mrs. de Lisle know that Mandell is the husband of her old friend. For some strong reason she admires this man, and before long they are tentatively engaged—but Clyde, her son, will have nothing to do with him.

In the meantime, Ruth has left her mother and has gone upon the stage, and is known as "Glory West," a star. Clyde meets her. They fall in love, neither of them knowing anything of the other. Clyde takes Glory to his home, where she is snubbed by his mother and insulted by Mandell—her own father. Clyde and Glory marry at once. Glory lives in a fashionable apartment house, which is owned by the actress her father abandoned.

Mandell, whose only thought is Mrs. de Lisle's money, calls on Glory in her dressing-room to urge her to marry Clyde, knowing that Clyde's mother will disinherit him in that case. Presuming that all actresses are alike, he takes Glory in his arms. Clyde comes in at that juncture and promptly knocks him down. In the heat of the moment, Clyde betrays the fact of their marriage. Mandell tells Clyde's mother of the marriage. The distracted woman sends for Glory's mother, her old chum, and the two women descend upon the apartment house, only to find that fate had brought their own children together.

When Mandell comes to join them, he is recognized by the actress, who secretly summons the police. When he enters Glory's apartment one can imagine his consternation—despised by his deserted wife—scorned by his prospective one, he retires in confusion only to find himself in the arms of the law.

The first step in their scheme is successful and Holbrook is separated from a goodly sum of money, which places him in a position to fall a ready victim to the further snares of the sharp-witted girls. There is excitement and laughs in the suceeding scenes which show Holbrook induced by a clever ruse to make Stella his bride, a step that he thinks he is taking voluntarily and to aid his own selfish plans.

Harrasford calls on Mona, and his fickle affections lead him into the trap of showing too much attention to Mary. A number of thrilling events keep Harrasford in a maze of excitement between the two girls, who, as temperamental Corsicans, are intense in love and hate.

Finally Harrasford plans to flee with Mary and arranges to meet her at ten o'clock at his apartment. At ten o'clock the bell rings—and Mona appears. She is closely followed by a detective, who forces from her a confession that she has killed Mary in her jealous rage. Harrasford—facing arrest as an accomplice—secretly passes a bribe to the detective who allows him to escape when they reach the street. Harrasford has barely turned the corner in his panic-stricken flight when Mona and the detective—who was really an accomplice—join in a hearty laugh and in a few moments Mary arrives to add to the rejoicing over the success of the plan to humble the conceited heartbreaker.

Unfortunately, their pranks get them into trouble with the neighbors and as mother takes in summer boarders, the boys are always in hot water. One of the guests, an old grouchy dyspeptic, is the object of their attention. The arrival of a golfing enthusiast diverts their ideas into new channels and they forthwith steal his clubs and proceed to play the "ancient and noble game." The fact that the balls are missing does not in any way prevent our heroes from becoming champions for they use all the available eggs they can find.

Their first shot flies far and true, finding a billet in old grouch's face. The second hits their distracted mother as she is doing the

In the city, they make a slight mistake in the directions given to them and enter a strange house, where they find a nice dinner awaiting. Putting an end to this, they feel tired and enter a bedroom and go to sleep. They are rudely awakened by the owner's entrance, who promptly empties his gun and chases Plump out in the streets. Runt, from under the bed, crawls into the place vacated by his pal and again goes to dreamland, only to be aroused out by the horrified screams of the wife. Up and down the street they are chased, finally captured and haled to court where they discover the presiding officer to be their much sought relative, and the old boy, listening to their story, promises that he, at least, will give a good time to mamma's boys.

IN THE RING (April 7).—Jabbs having bet all his capital on the Gashouse Kid to win in the fight with Locomotive Steve, decides to safeguard his chances by hiring Pokes to referee the bout. On the evening of the fight Jabbs acting as the Fixer, enables Pokes to escape from the vigilant eye of Mrs. Pokes, by telling that lady that he is bringing Pokes to attend a Strawberry Festival. Pokes takes his place in the ring and tries his hardest to aid Jabbs' fighter to win, but only succeeds in having the latter knocked out.

Chagrined at his failure to help his friend, Pokes puts on the gloves himself and starts to fight. After some rapid fighting, Locomotive Steve delivers a terrible blow on Pokes' jaw, and Pokes is knocked unconscious. The club is raided, and Pokes and Jabbs with the other principals are arrested. When brought before the Magistrate, Jabbs still continuing in his role as Fixer, whispers in the Magistrate's ear, whereupon the Magistrate immediately discharges the other prisoners, but sentences Pokes and Jabbs to five years at hard labor.

The wives believing that their husbands are away in the country recuperating from a severe attack of strawberry rash, join the Women's Reform League and visit the County Jail. Here Pokes and Jabbs, now prisoners, are ordered by the Warden to wait on the table where the wives are being feasted by the Jail Officials. Infuriated by the Warden's attentions to their wives, Pokes and Jabbs start in to assault the unfortunate Warden and are ordered by him to receive cold water treatment.

When the hose is turned on, Jabbs succeeds in eluding the guards, and getting possession of the hose, turns it upon the officials and after chasing them up the prison corridor, starts in to drown poor Pokes. When the water hits Pokes he begins to revive and opening his eyes finds himself still in the ring with Jabbs anxiously throwing water into his face and the other principals all grouped around him praying for his recovery.

THE JOURNAL OF LORD JOHN, No. 5, "The League of the Future" (Three Parts—April 4).—The cast: Lord John (William Garwood); Maida Odell (Stella Razeto); Rameses (Al. MacQuarrie); the head sister (Laura Oakley); Nora Esterbrook (Margaret Mayburn); Steve Hardy (Juan De La Cruz); Philip Wharton (T. D. Crittenden). Scenario written by Harvey Gates. Produced by E. J. La Saint.

Lord John Hasle still resides near the Gray Sisterhood. Though he is loath to call in the police, he is convinced that there are some concerned with the Sisterhood who are conniving against Maida Odell, who has joined to devote a year to charity.

In New York, Nora Esterbrook, an old school friend of Maida, is affianced to Steve Hardy, a hot-tempered, jealous young man. Philip Wharton, the prosecuting attorney, is in love with Nora. Steve becomes jealous of Wharton and on an evening, after he has quarreled with his girl, visits Wharton in his office and instructs him to cause his attentions to Nora. There is a quarrel, and Steve's gun, accidentally fired, is taken from him. Steve departs.

Several hours later Philip Wharton is discovered dead in the office. Near him is the exploded gun belonging to Steve. The picture of Nora also is found and that with the testimony of the janitor, who testifies to having heard a shot and seen Steve leave the building, leads to Steve's arrest for murder. Nora seeks out her friend, Maida, for aid and advice. Maida and Nora visit Lord John and interest him in the case. Lord John is only too glad to befriend the girl he loves. It is shown that the head sister is loath to allow Maida to leave the Sisterhood. She informs Rameses, her brother, of what has happened. Rameses is an Egyptian hypnotist, who has a mission of revenge to carry out against Maida's family.

At the detective office Lord John learns that Wharton had received threatening letters, advising him to cease his prosecution of one Mike Dorgan. These letters are signed by the "League of the Future." With the chief of police's permission, Lord John visits the scene of the crime, and discovers evidence of another bullet having been fired. The bullet from Steve's gun is imbedded in the wall at an angle which precludes the belief that this gun fired the fatal bullet. But in the book-shelf, buried among books, Lord John finds another bullet, which, according to the angle from which it was fired, must have come through the window from the roof of an opposite office building.

Meanwhile, according to Lord John's instructions, Maida in her capacity as a charity sister, has visited Mike Dorgan. She informed him of the death of Wharton and noted his satisfaction. As she is about to leave, she sees a man named Tony, who is waiting to visit Dorgan. With the keeper, she follows him to the cell, where, unobserved, she notes that he wears a coat which does not match his trousers. Lord John has, during this time, investigated the roof on the opposite building. He discovers a piece of clothing on the fire escape evidently torn from a pair of trousers. Maida joins Lord John and reports her success. She examines the piece of cloth Lord John has found and declares that, if she remembers right, it matches closely the pants worn by the stranger visiting Dorgan. Tony is captured. At the detective's office Lord John explains to the group about the finding which led to Tony's capture. Together they visited his room while he was out and found there the coat matching the cloth found on the fire escape. Also they found bullets which matched the one found by Lord John in Wharton's office and overlooked by the police. Lord John startled Tony by a demand to know where and how he tore the suit. Tony is finally made to confess. He tells how he was elected in the "League of the Future" to strike the blow against Wharton; how he found his way to the top of the building and fired the fatal shot, using a Maxim silencer, and how he later hid the gun down a manhole. The next morning he read that Steve had been apprehended. This gave him courage and he could not resist the temptation to visit Dorgan and gloat over his success. Lord John tries to learn more of the "League of the Future," but Tony, afraid to incur the league's enmity, will tell nothing.

Nora arrives and is taken into the arms of Steve, freed through Tony's confession. Lord John accompanies Maida back to the Gray Sisterhood and tries to dissuade her from returning. But Maida is unconvinced that the sisterhood is an evil organization. Lord John makes record in his journal of his fear that perhaps the mysterious Rameses is back of the "League of the Future."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE

CRAFT (Episode No. 17—"Queen of the Prophets"—Two Parts—April 3).—The cast: Robert Harding (Richard Stanton); Stanford Stone (Glen White); Dorothy Maxwell (June Novak); "Boss" Mead (Andrew Arbuckle); Tom Cross (Fred Hearne); Madam Del Rae (Gypsy Sartoris); Dorothy's Maid (Yona Landowska).

Harding has been elected mayor. The defeated party has retained enough aldermen to make them a power in local politics. They wish to put through a deal awarding the contract for a bridge across the river, which will mean millions of additional cost to the taxpayers and a big slice of graft for the party. In order to jam this contract through, it is necessary that the mayor be absent from the special meeting that has been called to consider the matter, for he is sure to oppose it.

In order to understand the plan adopted by the politicians for Harding's capitulation, it is necessary to state that the first act of the new mayor was an order to rid the city of the army of fortune tellers, seers, prophets and the like. The action of the mayor has stirred up a feeling among this class of grafters that amounts to murderous fury, so the leader had no difficulty in getting a few of their number to act as his catspaw.

The plan is this: A letter is sent to Harding, signed by a voter, stating that his orders regarding the fortune tellers is not being carried out—that his police force is taking graft and letting them continue business, that if he wants positive proof of this to call at a certain address at eight o'clock that night and see for himself. The special meeting of aldermen is called for nine o'clock the same night. They figure that Harding, being of an investigating turn of mind, will call at the appointed time. A beautiful seeress, Mme. Del Rae, is to receive him, charm him and, figuring Harding is not made of ice, to put him in a compromising position in which he is to be discovered by members of the political party. Their silence is to be the price of his absence from the meeting.

Harding receives the letter at the same time that a citizen is making a complaint of Mme. Del Rae's establishment. He decides to personally investigate. Stanford Stone calls on the madam, and finds her furious at having received a notice from the mayor to close up her establishment. Stone pays madam liberally and asks her to help him in his scheme to secure Dorothy Maxwell. Then he scribbles under the notice received by madam: "Call at Madam Del Rae's and get evidence against the place. Thanks in advance. (Signed) Harding." This note he dispatches at once.

Dorothy receives it, and, pleased to be of help to Harding, hurries to the place. The chloroform cap, which Madam Del Rae has ingeniously suspended from the ceiling, descends as she sits at madam's table and she is rendered unconscious. Stone is about to remove her when Harding arrives to investigate. Stone conceals himself in an inner room. Dorothy recovers and rushes to Harding for protection. In the fight that follows, Stone escapes through a window. Harding arrives at the meeting of aldermen in time to prevent the jamming through of the bridge contract.

On returning home that evening Harding meets an old friend, Tom Cross, who is down and out through his craze for liquor. Harding takes him to his apartment intending to put him on his feet again. During the night Cross gives way to his craving, steals Harding's clothes and money and proceeds to get drunk.

Boss Mead and Stone are both angry at being outwitted by Harding. In the fight at madam's she was killed by falling into an electric chair trap fixed for Harding. Mead and Stone propose to swear out a warrant for Harding's arrest and accuse him of killing the woman. This warrant is to be sent just as Harding is about to review the Shriners' parade.

As they walk past the city hall late that night, they see a workman building a temporary platform from Harding's window on which he may review the parade. They take the workman to an all-night saloon and bribe him to make the platform unsafe. Cross, lying drunk in the saloon, overhears the plot and tries to call up Harding to warn him, but the latter, angry at the man's weakness, will not listen. The next day just before the big parade, madam's assistant accuses Harding of her murder. Cross, who has come to his senses and has tried to warn Harding, only to be thrown out of the office, comes back at this juncture and declares he is the man wanted. Harding gave him a suit of clothes and those people took him for the mayor. He holds out his hands for the manacles. Boss Mead, seeing that his first plan is going to miscarry, calls to Harding to hurry out on the platform as the parade has started. Cross jumps between Harding and the window, accusing Mead of the plot to kill Harding by making the platform unsafe. Mead springs at Cross to try and stop his mouth. In the struggle both step on the platform and go crashing down to death. The leader of the political grafters has been removed.

LAEMMLE.

THE EYES OF FEAR (Two Parts—April 6).—The cast: George Woodward (Rupert Julian); Mangus Keating (Gilmore Hammond); Edward Federmuss (J. P. Conniey); Maria, his wife (Elsie Jane Wilson); Una, a servant (Yona Landowska); Cayanan, her father (Pete Gerald). Scenario by Earl R. Hewitt. Produced by Rupert Julian.

Mangus Keating, an American, is in charge of civic affairs at Santo Thomas, in the Panama Canal Zone. He counts among his friends Edward Federmuss, of the Department of Education; Maria, his wife, and George Woodward, who represents an English trading company. Woodward has been in the tropical climate of Panama for quite a period, and, like many others, the atmosphere of the place has changed his nature so that he has little real manhood left. For a long time numerous meaning glances have passed between Woodward and Mrs. Federmuss. This has been quietly observed by her husband.

Woodward has been having intimate relations with Una, a native girl, who acts as one of his house servants. It is to her he turns after a day with Keating, Federmus and the latter's wife. The difference between Federmuss and Woodward has upon this occasion almost amounted to an open denunciation of the former. In the weeks which follow Woodward is "cut" by Federmuss upon every occasion.

Tiring of Una, Woodward has discharged her, and she has returned to her father's home, when it becomes evident that Woodward has wronged her. Her father bids her go to Woodward and endeavor to have him right the wrong by marrying her. But the evil-doer will not listen, and she finally kills herself.

When Federmuss goes to the presidente, Woodward calls upon Marie in regard to a note he received from her saying that sometime she hopes to beg his forgiveness for the jealous actions of her husband. She finds his forgiveness is easily gained, but when he becomes rather forceful in his demonstrations toward her, she commences to fear the man. A terrific struggle follows, when Woodward tries to embrace her against her will. At this moment, a hand appears through the curtains and fires a revolver. Woodward is mortally wounded. Keating hears the shot and goes to the door of the Federmuss house. Woodward lies face downward upon the steps. Federmuss stands with a revolver in hand. Maria is hysterical. After a hasty examination, Keating orders the body attended to and places Federmuss under arrest.

Maria realizes what will happen to her husband if she does not do something to clear him. There is but one way, she must sacrifice herself. To better impress Keating with what she is capable, she arrays herself in all the gaudy finery at hand and seeks his presence. She tells him that her former statement, that her husband was at home in bed at the time of the crime, was incorrect; that he had gone to call upon the Presidente; that she and Woodward had taken advantage of his absence by appointment, but that her husband had returned too soon, and had killed the wrecker of his home. Keating reminds her of the gravity of her offense, but says her husband will be cleared by her statement. Hoping to clinch her story with Keating, she offers herself to him in exchange for the freedom of her husband. Keating realizes the depth of the woman's love for Federmuss. Federmuss, who has been listening to the whole conversation from the adjoining room, rushes in. He has heard enough. He surveys the pair with accusing glance. Keating is not in the least disturbed and tells them that there was also a certain Cayanan man who had a grievance—and his revenge. He orders Cayanan brought in from the next room where he has been held a prisoner, bound. The old man, who is Una's father, then tells his story of how he had followed Woodward intent upon revenge; had seen him endeavor to force his attentions upon Mrs. Federmuss, and had shot him, thus preventing one crime and avenging another. This clears the situation and husband and wife are reconciled.

BILL'S WIFE (April 9).—The cast: Sally Smith (Myrtle Gonzalez); Jimmie (Frankie Lee); Mr. Grouch (Alfred Allen); Butler (Val. Paul); Maid (Ruby Cox). Written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Mr. Grouch had a well established bachelor household. One lovely day the entire household are in good spirits. The butler, maid and cook greet each other with smiles and the day promises to be a happy one. Several days before, the owner had promised to let the servants have the house for a party that evening, and they are full of laughter. Unfortunately Mr. Grouch wakes up that morning peeved. Soon the entire household is in a state of gloom.

Sally Smith and her little brother live together and they find it a hard matter to always make both ends meet. Jimmy attends school during the day Sally learns that Mr. Grouch has fired his secretary and applies for the position. She is taken to Grouch, who sits like a frozen iceberg, and even the girl's inherent friendliness receives a shock. She is abruptly told that she is too pretty for the place and dismissed. Her departure is made pleasant by the butler, who remembers her smile, and tries to cheer her up.

That evening Grouch takes a ride in his car. Due to the atmosphere of grouch surrounding him, the chauffeur gets peeved. They stop at a store and the chauffeur fails to close the door after his employer leaves. Jimmie passes and on an impulse climbs into the car. He is unnoticed until the car goes some distance. Grouch then finds him and roughly shoves the child out. As the door is slammed shut his fingers get caught, and he bravely tries to keep from crying. The sight of the child in pain, but repressing his desire to cry aloud, reaches the crusty old heart of the bachelor, and he takes the child to a drug store to be fixed up. After the fingers get bandaged he insists on taking the child home.

Sally is beginning to worry about the absence of the child, when she hears the auto stop. Through the efforts of Jimmie, Grouch is persuaded to partake of the waiting supper, and it is indeed a treat. His habitual scowl disappears and he thinks of the chauffeur waiting below. With an explanation he gives the driver a large tip and tells him to notify the servants they can go on with their party as planned. Thus the smile starts its rounds and reaches even further than the grouch. Sally is offered the secretary's job.

THE TOWN THAT TRIED TO COME BACK (April 4).—The cast: I. B. Happy (Victor Potel); Hiram Hippo (Ed. Sedgwick); Magnesia Sizzles (Jane Bernoudy); Lily White (Eileen Sedgwick). Written and produced by Roy Clements.

The town cemetery was as lively as the main street of Centerville. The town was a "dead one," and each and every citizen admitted it except Magnesia Sizzles, the lone woman resident of the town, who had charge of the dining-room of the City Hotel. Magnesia was a "live one."

Lily White bumps into town on the weekly stage and is engaged by Hiram Hippo, the manager of a rival hotel, to take charge of his dining-room. Lily, by her wiles, wins all of Magnesia's customers, and then through a "sympathy game," fleeces them of their earthly possessions and jumps the town. Magnesia, soured on Centerville, also leaves and the town goes off the map.

THE POET'S PROGRESS (Two Parts—April 7).—The cast: Jane Brown (Jane Gail); Lancelot O'Reilly (Matt Moore); The Landlady (Nellie Slattery). Written by Walter MacNamara. Produced by Matt Moore.

Lancelot Faber is an enthusiastic but poor poet, who cannot sell his wares. He is living on the top floor of a theatrical boarding house, where he has excited the admiration of Jane Brown, the poor drudge of a servant. The landlady, impatient of waiting for her money, tells Lancelot he must pay his rent or leave. He asks her to read the poem he has written which will make him wealthy. He can get the appetizing smell of the dinner below and hear the merry laughter of the other guests as they do justice to it, but there's nothing for him, so he commences to pack his few belongings. But Jane thinks of him and wraps her own dinner in a piece of newspaper and takes it up to him. He, appreciating the kindly thought that prompted her action, makes her a present of his wonderful masterpiece.

Lancelot walks out into the great world that is so cold to poets, and Jane goes back to her pots and pans in the kitchen. Here she finds in the back of the newspaper an alluring advertisement of a potted meat concern offering a prize of $1,000 for the best four lines of

For the week of April 2nd the TRIANGLE-FINE ARTS Picture will be Douglas Fairbanks in "The Habit of Happiness." If you have seen "His Picture in the Papers" and other Fairbanks plays you know that a picture in which this star appears is sure to be a success—both from our standpoint and yours.

His family thought he was worthless so they sent Fairbanks down to the slums of New York to make good. He did, but not by any usual method. He taught the one-toothed, half-blind, sodden wrecks down there how to laugh, and he made a reputation that finally won him the girl of his heart and the approval of his family.

TRIANGLE

Can you appreciate how your patrons will enjoy watching Douglas Fairbanks as he leads his Bowery bums in their daily laughing exercises? It's immense to watch the way the wrinkled old men respond to this new treatment.

Seldom has there been a picture with such a surplus of real human interest—a play that appeals to everyone, men, women and children alike.

Illustrated below are a few of the newspaper advertisements which have been prepared for the use of TRIANGLE exhibitors running this play. They give some idea of the real comedy of the piece.

Douglas Fairbanks and Dorothy West in The Habit of Happiness

He had a system all his own which would make even you laugh, and if you want to spend a really enjoyable evening just make it a point to see Douglas Fairbanks in his latest TRIANGLE PLAY.

As for the other releases on this week's program Jane Grey and William Desmond appear in "The Waifs" an absorbing play based on the vital question, "Can A Bad Woman Make a Weak Man a Decent and Hard - Working Citizen?" The answer is a loud "Yes," and as your patrons watch this picture they will realize that when a woman loves a man no sacrifices are too great.

Then there are two Keystones, "A Bathhouse Blunder," and "His Wife's Mistake" with "Fatty" Arbuckle and Al St. John.

poetry advertising their product. Jane conceives the idea of converting the last line of the first verse of poor Lancelot's masterpiece to that purpose. The result is that she gets the prize and also the position as chief of the advertising department, but alas, she cannot fill the bill, so she has recourse to another verse of the masterpiece, which she alters to fill in the necessary potted meat requirements.

In the meantime, Lancelot reads an advertisement announcing the prize poem, and, his artistic soul filled with mortification and mad with rage at everybody concerned, he starts out to destroy them. He arrives at the office demanding to know who the guilty party is, but they only laugh at him. He brushes them to one side, and makes his way into Jane's office. She is wrestling with a tough poem, when she looks up to see Lancelot glaring at her.

Both are astounded at seeing each other. Then Lancelot denounces her for her base treachery, and she offers him the check for the $1,000 which she has not touched and asks him to help her write poems that will sell. He agrees and, going behind the screen, sends out a shower of poems that fill the heart of the proprietor with joy and shows that there is possible a combination of art and commerce to their mutual advantage.

MIGNONETTE (Two Parts—April 9).—The cast: Henri Bergere (Harry Benham); Mignon (Edna Pendleton); Italian Musician (Barrington Barringer); the curio dealer (Marcus Moriarity); Miller (Charles Hurtley). Written by Harry Dittmas. Produced by Winthrop Kelly.

Henri Beregere, a young violinist, lives in a tenement on the East Side of New York. To those with whom he comes in contact he is something of a mystery. In his past life there seems to have been some great sorrow that has made of him a silent and retiring man. In his little room we see his fingers idly running through the notes until they come to a sprig of mignonette. It is obviously a link with the past, for Henri's memory goes back to the long ago. The young violinist is fired with boundless ambition and dreams, but he is compelled to earn his livelihood by playing in a cheap music hall.

Just across the way from Henri lives Mrs. Miller, his landlady. Her husband is a shiftless artist imbued with artistic ideals which do not provide for the family, the support of which rests on the sturdy shoulders of his wife to whom art is an unknown quantity. Mrs. Miller is about to prepare supper, but finds the larder empty. So she opens her purse and sends her husband to purchase food.

Miller walks to the street, but has not gone far when his attention is arrested by a dismal looking shop, packed with all sorts of curios. He is particularly attracted by a terra cotta statue about a foot high, and purchases it with the money intended for the evening meal. The owner of the shop seems to part with the statue with a heavy heart, and when Miller asks the reason the dealer tells him it was purchased from a man to whose girl-wife the old man had become attached. Her name was Mignon and her husband was a brutal and dissipated Italian musician. One of their boarders was a young student of music whose name the old curio dealer does not know.

Mignon admired his genius and he was inspired by her appreciation to write an opera which he appropriately called "Mignonette." Unconsciously the student and Mignon became attached to each other. Her husband's jealousy was aroused. When the young musician left on a trip, leaving the keys of his desk in which he had locked his beloved opera in Mignon's care she could not resist the temptation to scan the pages of the manuscript she had inspired. Thus her husband surprised her, seized the manuscript and flung it into the burning grate. Then Mignon fell ill, and from her delirium the old curio dealer, when he called, gathered the story. The Italian sold his furniture and works of art and moved away. The old dealer never heard of them again, nor of the young composer.

Miller takes the statue home and finds his wife furious over the delay. When she learns that he has purchased what she considers rubbish, she shatters the statue. Among the remnants of the statue they find the charred manuscript of an opera, which was secreted in the hollow statue. Henri, who has returned, hears the strains of music and hastens to the landlord's rooms. "My opera," he cries, and clasps the manuscript to his heart.

In time the opera is produced and meets with success. But all success does not console Henri, who cannot forget Mignon. He tries to locate her, and his quest leads him to the old curio dealer, from whom the statue was purchased. Meanwhile, Mignon returns to the city after a long absence, and at once seeks out her old friend, the curio dealer. There she meets Henri, who, though his heart goes out to her, hesitates to take her in his arms until she tells him that her brutal husband is dead. The banquet given in honor of the young composer's operatic success is also the celebration of his betrothal to Mignon, who, when her husband thrust the opera into the grate, snatched it from the flames when his back was turned, and hid it in the statue.

HOW TIMES DO CHANGE (April 3).—The cast: Mr. Green (Lee Moran); Mrs. Green (Ethel Lynn); Ray (Ray Gallagher); the Girl (Billie Rhodes); Lawyer Bibbs (Neal Burns). Written and produced by A. E. Christie.

Mr. and Mrs. Green are a happy domestic couple and very much in love with each other. Mrs. Green has just had a new picture of herself taken and insists that her hubby have it placed in his watch. He leaves the watch at the jeweler's to have the picture inserted. They say that a picture of your sweetheart in a watch is a sure sign of love, and Ray had all the earmarks of a lover. His sweetheart, Billie, has just given him her picture and he hurried to the jeweler's to have the picture inserted. He, unluckily, left his watch at the same shop that Mr. Green did.

That evening Green and Ray call at the shop for their watches. They get the right watches but while talking, the watches become mixed and each leaves with the other's watch. Green hurries home and shows his wife how nice her picture looks. The fates are against him, however, and instead of his wife's picture he finds the face of another. His watch is so much like Ray's that he never notices the difference, and Mrs. Green angrily upbraids him. Ray hurries to Billie to show how nice her picture looks and she flies into a tantrum when she sees the other woman's picture in her sweetheart's watch. She recognizes the face as that of Mrs. Green and tells Ray she will tell Mr. Green of his wife flirting with Ray.

She accordingly calls the Greens and asks for Mr. Green. The wife cuttingly remarks to her husband that his sweetheart wishes to talk with him. He makes an appointment to talk over the matter with Billie. His wife, believing he is trying to square himself with the girl, follows and meets Ray. Ray, thinking Billie has an affair with Green has followed her when he meets Mrs. Green. They compare notes and Mrs. Green determines to get a divorce.

Ray accompanies her to the lawyer Bibbs, who has the reputation of getting divorce—grounds or no grounds. Arrangements are about made when they are crudely interrupted by the advent of Lee. He has learned from Billie of his wife's picture being in the other watch and, securing a revolver, determines upon revenge. Ray and Mrs. Green take refuge in the inner office, and when Green threatens to shoot within a minute, Ray pulls out his watch to see how long they have to live. Mrs. Green sees the watch and recognizes it as her husband's from a fob attached to it. Ray calls the police station for help and a squad of officers hurry to the scene. Green is timing the minute and Billie recognizes Ray's watch. Explanations follow and when the police arrive they find everything settled satisfactorily. The only one who is not satisfied is Lawyer Bibbs, who has already spent in his mind the fat fee he expected to get for the divorce.

A LEAP YEAR TANGLE (April 7).—The cast: The Boys (Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Neal Burns); the Girls (Betty Compson and Ethel Lynn); Principal (Stella Adams); Dean (Harry Rattenbury) Written and produced by Al. E. Christie.

A school for boys and a school for girls are just across the street from each other. Lee and Neal, realizing that leap year has its disadvantages, pledge to stay single. Eddie does not want to sign the pledge, but the two friends force him to enter in their contract. The girls, too, decide to take advantage of leap year and agree that the first one who captures a husband shall be given a handsome prize.

Eddie and Bettie have long been sweethearts and Eddie wonders how he will be able to keep this from his friends. When Eddie calls, Betty, thinking of the prize, suggests that they marry at once. This does not suit Eddie at all, but when she tells him that unless he marries her that day she will refuse him, he is forced to consent.

The boys see the two in their love making and learn of the impending wedding. They determine to visit dire punishment upon Eddie for breaking their arrangement. As Eddie and his bride leave the church they are set upon by the boys and their friends. The bride and groom are taken to one of the rooms in the school and the boys all insist on kissing the bride. Eddie is frantic, but is taken outside and tied to a tree. The bride is tied to the bed and left alone, while the captors torment the unhappy bridegroom. She succeeds in getting loose and, disguising in a suit of man's clothes she finds in the room, she escapes.

Some one sees her enter her room dressed in men's clothes and the principal is notified. Betty has attired herself in her own clothes and throws the other ones under the bed. The principal comes in to see about the man reported to have entered her room.

Meanwhile the janitor is straightening Eddie's room and finds women's clothes under his bed. He turns these over to the dean and Eddie is brought up on the carpet. He has a bright inspiration and tells the dean that he had rented the clothes for a masquerade. When further questioned Eddie admits that he is married.

The two young people are expelled, but Betty is happy in thinking of the handsome prize they will get. All the friends congregate to see the prize presented. Eddie and his bride have their suit cases ready to leave. The prize is brought forth and turns out to be a baby buggy. While it was a disappointment to the two, they determine to get some benefit from the prize and, putting their suit cases inside, gayly leave the school.

POWERS.

UNCLE SAM AT WORK (No. 11 "To Arms"—March 4).—This episode of the educational film on Frederic Haskin's book, "The American Government," deals with the preparedness of the United States for war and the defense of its shore: in case the country should be attacked by a foreign state. Most of it was taken at the last gathering of the National Guard at Fishkill Plains for drill and instruction, and shows the National Guardsmen, some of them trained and some virtually untrained in the art of war as it may be learned in the armories of the states, going through their evolutions and in camp life. It shows the possibilities of drilling the American soldier more than it shows the fitness of the present armed guard of the United States. But there are also views of the forts and troop stations of the United States in various locations.

AMPHIBIAN ODDITIES (March 23).—This split reel shows some rare scenes of curious creatures who live with equal facility above and below water. The scenes were prepared by Curator Raymond L. Ditmars of the New York Zoological Gardens.

Scene 1 shows the hideous amphibious creature known as the hell-bender of the Greek Lakes, a creature which looks as much like an old shoe as anything else and carries its lungs outside. The movement of the lungs is very susceptible, particularly when changes occur in the temperature of the water. Cold causes the filaments of the lungs to contract and heat makes them expand. This movement aerates the blood.

The next animal shown is the salamander, which inhabits underground rivers, caverns and subterranean chambers. Its eyes are represented by mere dents in its skull, and it depends almost entirely upon its sense of touch. Like most subterranean creatures, it is colorless. In shape and structure it is much like an eel, though it has undeveloped limbs which are very weak.

Closely allied to these two forms of amphibian life are the tree toads so abundant in the south. These usually have acquired the color of the trees in which they live, many of them changing color with the seasons and the change of foliage. The tree toad has suckers on its fingers and toes and these perform various functions necessary to its health, happiness and the pursuit of liberty. It is a rarity to see a tree toad sing, but that is made possible by this film, and the amount of chest expansion which this little animal has would be the envy of a Caruso.

THE LITTLE FRAUD (April 5).—The cast: Joan (Mary Fuller); Chartry (Marcus Moriarty); Dick (Harry Hilliard); Jim (Bob Hill). Written by Elizabeth R. Carpenter. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Chartry, a miser, and his niece live in an old lodge. Chartry is behind with the rent. Finally Chartry and his niece are put out. The girl, Joan, is broken-hearted. Chartry falls ill in the new home, which is simply a shack, and dies, muttering: "The old clock, the old clock."

Deeming, the man who had rented the lodge, spends his days in the open and his evenings reading. One night the lamp at his elbow is shattered by a bullet. This happens again a few nights later.

Next night Deeming reads as usual with shades up. After awhile the lamp chimney is again shattered. Deeming springs up and runs out. Jim, his attendant, is giving chase to a young fellow, who runs like the wind. Deeming, however, joins the chase and after a while the fellow is caught. They take him back to the lodge. The supposed boy, in reality, is Joan. Next morning Deeming orders the boy brought to him. Joan enters and says to Deeming: 'I got nothing to say, but if you let me stay here and work, I promise not to shoot you." Deeming ponders and finally agrees to take the boy into service.

Jim and Joan work together in the garden. Jim is hail-fellow-well-met, but Joan is aloof. With Deeming she is more friendly. He attempts to read to the boy, to interest him in study. At night, Deeming sits writing and Joan slips in and sits down upon the hearth, gazing at the fire. Later Deeming invites a number of men friends to spend the night. The house is full. Joan has to wait on table. As she is placing a chair for one man to sit, the man turns and looks at the boy, then, laughingly remarks: "Say, you look more like a girl than a boy."

Joan, just placing the chair behind the man, pulls it back. The man sits down on the floor instead. In the laughter that follows, Joan runs out. The same night Deeming calls Joan aside and says: "You'll have to give up the garret tonight. You can bunk in with me." But Joan spends the night in the woods. One day Jim goes off on an errand and sees Joan. Her cap is beside her. Suddenly, as Jim watches, she pulls off her black wig and her curls fall about her shoulders. Jim's face wears a wicked grin.

He goes to her with a new light in his eyes. Instantly Joan scents trouble. She runs from him to the house. That night Joan has her first opportunity to get at the old clock. She finds her uncle's will behind it.

Deeming, who has heard the noise, fires, wounding the boy. Joan's wig falls off. Deeming then understands why he felt such an interest in the supposed boy. And although she was a little fraud, he does not send her away. Nor has she any desire to go—for in the following days she learns to love him as he loves her.

HUNGRY'S HAPPY DREAM (April 6).—The cast: H. Oboe Rhodes (Paul Bourgeois); Carrie Hash (Jean Taylor); Miss Ima Oldmaid (Florence Noar); Joe Martin (Himself). Scenario by Frank M. Wiltermood. Produced by Guy Hedlund.

H. Oboe Rhodes, a "knight of the road," limps into a large city with the idea of appeasing his hunger. His first quest is the welcoming doors of a saloon in which a large free lunch is advertised. Oboe tries the lunch, but not having the necessary wherewithal to buy the necessary liquid accompaniment, receives a rough reception and is thrown out. He wanders to various places but in each case mees with disappointment and growing hunger owing to his exertions. Finally he works the residence district and meets with more success. Carrie Hash, maid and cook for Miss Ima Oldmaid, admires his dashing appearance and brings him out a swell feed. But alas! her employer is on the lookout for "panhandlers" and ere the tempting food reaches his mouth, the dish is snatched away by the irate maiden and he is again cast out.

Tired from his fruitless search, Oboe wanders to an animal menagerie and asks the trainer for a job. The trainer turns him down and poor Oboe rests his tired frame on a bench. He drops off to sleep and has a wondrous dream.

In the dream he is an animal king and handles man-eating brutes as if they were dogs. Determined upon revenge for his cold reception, he takes a collection of his animals and sets out to "do the town." His first stop is the free lunch stand, and what he does there is "a caution." The inmates leave and Joe Martin and the prize chimpanzee have the place to themselves. There is a great consumption of liquor and eatables. In revenge, he decides to move the bar and, calling to his assistance the elephant, he hitches same to the brute and orders him to walk away. The elephant walks, so does the bar, so does the side of the house, and Charlie, the elephant, drags the wreckage, Oboe and Joe sit on the bar and, oblivious to their destination, enjoy themselves.

Unfortunately, Charlie wanders over a charge of dynamite on the road and the explosion happens at the wrong time. Oboe, Joe and the bar take a trip in the sky, and when they return to earth, drop through the roof of the house where Miss Ima Oldmaid lives. One of the tenants is taking a bath, the bar comes through and down below to where Ima and others are eating. The bar lands in the middle of the room. The boarders are covered with dust and feathers. Carrie sees Oboe and they are in a loving embrace, when he slides off the bar. With a jolt, Oboe falls off the bench and wakes up. As he stands rubbing his eyes in a daze, the animal man comes up and offers him a job. With a mad desire to escape, Oboe takes his hat in hand and "beats it."

RED FEATHER.

TWO MEN OF SANDY BAR (Five Parts—April 3).—The cast: John Oakhurst, personating "Sandy" (Hobart Bosworth); Sandy Morton (Emory Johnson); Old Morton (Frank MacQuarrie); Col. Starbottle (Charles Hickman); Don Jose De Castro (William Mong); Concho (A. E. Whiting); Pritchard (Jack Curtis); Miss Mary Morris (Jean Taylor); Dona Jovita Castro (Yona Landowska); the duchess, wife of Pritchard (Gretchen Lederer). Scenario written by Olga Printzlau. Produced by L. B. Carleton.

John Oakhurst is a chivalrous gambler, and his friendship for Sandy Morton forms the motif of the story.

Sandy Morton was given to excessive drink, which through the connivance of the duchess, the queen of the gambling houses, resulted in the loss of his birthright. Though his father had maintained a search for him covering a number of years, he had never been able to locate him. Circumstances so shaped themselves that Oakhurst innocently, and believing Sandy dead, took the place of the long-lost son in his father's affection and household, and these circumstances reached a climax when the true identity of Sandy was revealed at the psychological moment by the duchess herself. So upright has Oakhurst been in all his dealings with the elder Morton that as he turns to leave the room, the old man calls him back and announces that henceforth the name under which he will operate his banking business will be Alex. Morton & Sons and Oakhurst. Thus do the troubles of the two men cement their years of friendship into a life-long association.

AUTUMN (Five Parts—March 27).—The cast: Autumn and Jeanette Arden (Violet Mersereau); George Arden (Lester Stowe); Louise (Elizabeth Mudge); Dick Leslie (Lieut. Percy Richards); Diamond Jack (Paul Panzer); Spanish Kate (Clara Byers); Joe A. Trapper (Lindsay Hall); Hop Lee (Fred Probet). Written and produced by O. A. C. Lund.

George Arden and his wife, Jeanette, enter a deserted house in the woods and Jeanette, in a weakened condition is placed by her husband on a straw-covered cot. He then hastens to camp for a doctor. As he is going past a saloon in the town, he is hit in the head by a stray bullet. He falls prostrate to the ground where he is later found by Joe, a Canadian half-breed, who, with the aid of three friends, tries to stop the flow of blood. Joe goes to the cabin where he sees that Jeanette has given birth to a child and is in a dying condition.

The crowd from the dance hall is homeward bound when the light from the cabin attracts their attention and some of the women enter. Louise picks up the infant and another woman bends down over the still form of the mother. Next day we see George in the back room of the saloon. His reason is gone and he has lost the power of speech. He finds a cave and draws back into it for refuge. Joe is appointed godfather at the christening of the motherless infant. He says: "She came to us like the autumn wind. Let her name be Autumn."

There is a lapse of fifteen years. Autumn has been brought up by her god-father. Outside the Golden Eagle Saloon stands "Nobody." Right below his eye is a scar from a bullet wound. In the gambling room of the Eagle saloon we see Kate, her fingers covered with diamonds. At the other end of the table sits a gambler known as Diamond Jack, with whom she is apparently in love.

The scene shifts to the headquarters of the Royal Mounted Police, where Trooper Dick Leslie is told that a Chinaman, Hop Lee, has been trying for fifteen years to find George Arden. Dick is given an old-fashioned photograph with an autograph of George Arden and is assigned by his captain to make a search for the missing miner. Dick arrives at Camp Eldora and makes the acquaintance of "Autumn." Joe induces Diamond Kate to provide a fine dress for Autumn, so that she can go to the dance hall that evening to attract customers. Dick proceeds to the dance hall and presently Autumn, clad in the new dress Kate has given her, comes in to watch the game. Dick and Autumn recognize each other.

Thinking he is unnoticed, Jack spins the wheel quickly and moves his hand to the corner of the table to pull off a crooked deal. As Jack's hand disappears underneath the edge of the table we see Dick grasp it and hold it in a firm grip. With his other hand Jack draws a gun and shatters the lamp chimney, putting the house in almost total darkness. Autumn hides behind the shutter. A group of men move toward her holding on high the apparently lifeless body of Dick, which they throw into the river below. Autumn rouses "Nobody" and draws him toward the rapids, where they throw a rope to Dick, who has revived.

By an investigation of the contents of a crevice in the wall of the cave in which "Nobody" lives Dick learns the identity of the mysterious person. Kate the next day watches Jack leave the saloon and follows him. Joe meanwhile leads Autumn up to the cross-road of the trail leading to Frenchy's cabin, where he has promised Jack to bring her. Kate sees

Jack enter the cabin. He draws Autumn to him and kisses her passionately. Kate opens the door and dashes the contents of the pepper castor into Autumn's face. It blinds her. She then fires at Jack.

Dick, walking along the trail, turns quickly as he hears the shot. Kate presses the gun into Autumn's hand and disappears into the next room. Dick enters and sees that Autumn still holds the hot revolver in her hand. Kate returns to the room with a surprised expression and Dick takes from her shoulders the shawl which shows a smoking hole through which the bullet had passed. Dick question the two girls and each denies her guilt. The crowd insist that Jack must be avenged and clamor to have both women hanged. A man seizes a coiled lariat from the wall and the mob lead the two girls to a tree nearby. Dick dispatches a boy to ride to headquarters to summon the mounted police.

A horse is led under the hanging noose and as the mob make a dash at the terrified women Dick holds up his hand and says: "Wait! The gallows shall decide between them—the innocent shall hang the guilty." Then addressing Kate, he says: "You say you are innocent. Are you prepared to hang this woman?" Kate shouts: "Fling the murderess on the horse at once and give me the whip. The mounted police are now in sight. Dick puts the same question to Autumn, asking her if she is prepared to hang Kate. Autumn moans, "I cannot." Dick exults at Autumn's answer and says to the crowd: "Judge for yourselves who is the guilty one."

Kate makes a dash to escape through the crowd, which yells: "Hang the murderess!" The mob gets Kate away from Dick. The mounted police pull up their horses and raise their rifles. The noose is about Kate's neck and the mob are about to draw it. Six rifles blaze away. The rope is severed and Kate falls fainting upon the horse's neck. Dick delivers his prisoner to the mounted police. Later we see Dick at the headquarters with "Nobody." Hop Lee enters and "Nobody" gives no sign of recognition. Captain Mills, who is on duty, questions both men searchingly. The surgeon declares it to be a case of lost memory resulting from a bullet wound which a successful operation will cure.

Two weeks later "Nobody's" memory has been restored. He knows he is George Arden, but the past fifteen years remain a blank. He recalls that he left his wife in an old abandoned cabin near Camp Elora, but believes that this only happened yesterday. Dick takes "Nobody" to the old cabin in an effort to solve the mystery and "Nobody" remembers the cabin. Joe is prowling around the woods with his gun and with him is Autumn. Autumn, seeing the two men, approaches to ascertain what they want. "Nobody" sees her coming and takes her for his wife. A light dawns upon Dick. He summons Joe and asks: "Where is the girl's mother?"

Joe answers: "She died here fifteen years ago." Then he points to her grave through the window. The mystery is solved and Dick makes his report to headquarters. A year later Dick and Autumn plan their marriage.

HIS HIGHNESS THE JANITOR (April 8).—The cast: Lizzie, the scrub girl (Gale Henry); Jake, the janitor (William Franey); Lillian (Lillian Peacock); Harry, her sweetheart (Milburn Moranti); Hotel Manager (Charles Conklin). Written by Gale Henry. Produced by Allen Curtis.

The Hotel de Luxe is not doing much business. The manager receives a telegram from a noted foreign nobleman, Baron Von Piotts, requesting reservation for an indefinite stay. The manager, delighted at the prospect of a visit from the distinguished guest, hastens to place a note in all the newspapers announcing the expected arrival and stating that he will stay at the Hotel de Luxe. The announcement makes quite a sensation. In fact, all the mothers in town make haste to secure quarters in the hotel. Among the mothers is Lillian's.

This arrangement does not suit Lillian at all, as she and Harry have arranged matters entirely to their satisfaction and are only awaiting to secure mother's consent before taking a certain definite step. Of course, mother is very antagonistic to Harry when she learns of the expected arrival of Von Piotts. Unfortunately for the hotel man he receives a telegram from the guest stating that he is unavoidably delayed and will be unable to make the visit. He is in despair.

Tell Your Motion Picture Sales Story in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD which Speaks Authoritatively to the ENTIRE Trade Each Week.

Lizzie, the scrub girl, and Jake, the janitor, have long been sweethearts, but there was one obstacle which had prevented the marriage of the happy couple. This had been the lack of money on the male side of the bargain. Accordingly, when the manager makes Jake a proposition to take the place of the expected baron and, in consideration, hands him a roll of greenbacks, Jake accepts at once. Unknown to the customers the fake baron is announced during dinner. There is a wild scramble among the women to be the first to greet him. Lillian's mother "wins the cup," and Jake, having fallen half way down the steps, is assisted to his feet by the designing mother. The other mothers are very much discouraged over the success Lillian's mother has achieved and decide to get at least half a chance at the baron by some hook or crook.

Lillian's mother, seeing things are against her, suggests that the baron select from among the daughters present the girl he will dine with. They all agree and the mothers line up their daughters for the judging. Lizzie, who has been promoted to waitress on account of the rush of business, makes her entry into the dining room at this critical moment. She recognizes her old sweetheart, Jake, and in the excitement she makes a wreck of the dishes. In spite of the manager's wild gestures the baron goes to Lizzie and makes her his choice.

Lillian had been among the first to be passed up by the baron and she and Harry are making good time during the excitement. When mother realizes that the baron is beyond her reach she is forced to consent to Harry's request. Jake and Lizzie meanwhile, having been fired, make a quick rush to the minister's to get married, carrying their roll of greenbacks in a satchel.

L-KO.

FOR THE LOVE OF MIKE AND ROSIE (Three Parts—April 5).—The cast: A Leech Cross (Henry Lehrmann); Rosie Goldfinger (Louise Orth).

The Goldfingers have just inherited a large fortune and moved into a $5,000 apartment. Everything goes fine with them. A number of young men are suitors for Rosie's hand, but, of course, she has her favorite. Dr. O'Briensky seems to have the best lead. A. Cross Leech, a "box-fighter" of some fame, interrupts the even tenor of the household when he butts into the courtship of Dr. O'Briensky and Rosie. He ousts the Doctor, who is not much on the fight. But Grandpa Goldfinger, who is always there with the bright idea, suggests that they secure the services of one Mike McGinnis, the Irish terror, to oust the Jewish lion. The Irisher arrives on the scene and soon has the Jewish lion on the run.

But there is where the whole trouble began. Rosie looked so good to the terror that he decided he would make his home in the Goldfinger apartment. Father Goldfinger's pleading had no effect on the terror, who stayed and stayed. Police were called in to oust him, but they all beat a hasty retreat. The terror was proud of his ability to play the piano and throughout the entire night he sang and played all his favorite airs, much to the chagrin of the Jewish family.

In the early morning, A. Cross Leech, after a night of anguish, presents himself at the Goldfinger apartment, and this time he is welcomed. They urge him to try and help get the terror out. He at first wishes to beat a hasty retreat, but the sight of the good old coin of the realm changes his opinion and by a ruse he gets the terror outside and wins the bet.

But the Irisher was not to be downed so easily. Mike returned and challenged the Jewish lion to battle, which was to take place at two. The battle was a hard one and after repeated knock downs the fight was stopped by a gent without a cent, who scrambled into the ring and brought the whole house down to assist. The ring collapsed precipitating Irish and Jews together, and a grand free-for-all international fight followed.

happily together for a year, at the end of which Dr. Durant spends more and more of his time with his men friends. As he is older than Charlotte, he doesn't realize that she is lonely and needs some diversion.

One night, as usual, Dr. Durant leaves his wife and goes to his club, giving as an excuse a very urgent case. He meets his friends and the party become quite jolly. A run out to the "Black Horse Inn" is suggested. Dr. Durant sends a note home stating that he will be very late, and the crowd drives to the road house.

Meanwhile, Margaret Hamlin calls on Charlotte, and invites her to attend a dance at the residence of Mrs. Mallory. Charlotte at first refuses, but finally, being lonely, consents to go with Mrs. Hamlin and her husband to the dance, where she meets Frederick Kirkwood, an old and very dear friend. Frederick is a young bachelor about whom there hovers a scandal concerning a married woman. However, he holds Charlotte in all respect, and realizes that he is only her friend.

The hour being late, Charlotte indicates her desire to return home, and Frederick offers to take her in his car. As it is cold, they stop at the "Black Horse Inn" for warm refreshments. They are discovered together by Robert Durant, and an angry scene ensues. Remembering the talk concerning Frederick Kirkwood, Dr. Durant takes Charlotte home, and in the morning indicates that she can see his lawyer regarding arrangements for divorce.

Charlotte protests her innocence, but her husband cannot be induced to change his course. He leaves her and goes to another room preparatory to going away. By accident he knocks a work basket from the table and a small notebook and tiny baby garments fall on the floor. He picks them up and finds that the book is Charlotte's diary. He reads the recent entries and, finding that his wife is innocent, begins to realize how he has been neglecting her. He looks at the baby garments again, and rushes to his wife's bedroom, begging forgiveness. "The silent call" of duty through the still voice of the little unborn stranger has reconciled them.

A CORRECTION.

On page 144 of our last week's issue the stories of two Cub releases were erroneously placed under the head of "American," which made it appear as if they were American subjects. The titles of the Cub pictures are "On the Rampage" and "Jerry and the Smugglers."

CUB.

THE WINNING PUNCH (April 7).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank, the fighter (George George); father (Jefferson Osborne); daughter (Hazel Cole); manager (Louis Fitz-Roy); referee (Arthur Mund); Bill, at Town Hall (Arthur Jackson); gardener (Gordon McGregor). Directed by Milton Fahrney.

Jerry's continued love for the fair sex brings him in contact with the daughter of a village squire. The old man has employed a gardener whose duty it is to see that the fair product of the family shall not even saunter outside of the grounds near the house. But while the gardener is busy pruning trees or clipping the grass, the daughter makes her way to the hedge about the place and there she meets Jerry. The gardener sees him and quickly transmits the incident to his master. They pounce upon Jerry and the girl and during the mix-up Jerry manages to get away with the daughter. The two find shelter on a bench under a tree but just as they are getting interested in each other along comes Hank, "the terrible Swede," who is a terrible pugilist.

Hank has a naughty eye which keeps winking at the girl and when Jerry suddenly gets wise he picks a fight with the Swede. Luckily Jerry is aided by a few handy rocks and an iron bar and he makes the elongated one look foolish. As Hank, the Swede, recovers from the sting of defeat at the hands of this sawed-off being, Jerry makes a hasty exit. Jerry's sprint carries him to the town hall and he arrives in time to see a poster on a fence announcing the debut of "The Terrible Swede," who will meet all comers in the squared arena. Jerry suddenly decides to contest for the honors. The night of the event finds him at the ringside and the manager of the Swede announces that all comers are welcome to try their brain and brawn against the clever boxer. The silence is broken by Jerry's shout, "I'll take 'em on."

Jerry is wildly applauded by the fans and two seconds togg him out in fighting attire. When the Swede enters, he recognizes Jerry as the one who had done him up not many hours previous and he wants to rip him to bits without any ceremony. But Jerry makes a hasty exit to the dressing room. There he spies some weights which are used on the weighing machine and he stuffs his gloves to the fullest extent. Jerry returns to the ring. The gong sounds and they go to it. The Swede has Jerry at his mercy, holding him off with one of his long arms while he pelts him at will with the other. Finally exhausted, Jerry drops and while he is recovering the "champ" is busily engaged bowing here and there to his admirers.

Jerry sees his chance and he lands with both hands on the Swede's "dome" knocking him insensible and the count of ten proclaims Jerry the victor. He is handed his bag of gold and is having a fine time counting it when the police break in. Everyone escapes excepting Jerry and his victim and they are arrested. At the police station Jerry attempts to explain but there is no way out of it. The sergeant takes Jerry's money and is about to place him in a cell when an alarm comes in and the big bell starts to ring. It acts as a tonic on the Swede, who comes to and believing it to be the bell at the ringside he wades in among the cops and puts them all in the land of dreams—with Jerry's assistance. When all are unconscious, Jerry grabs his money and he and the Swede run off to have a good time on the spoils.

FALSTAFF.

RUINING RANDALL'S REPUTATION (April 3).—The cast: Rivington Randall (Riley Chamberlin); his niece (Gladys Dore); her suitor (Walter Hiers).

Rivington Randall was proud of his reputation. In his home town the papers spoke of him as "Honest" Rivington Randall. Therefore his standards were high and when his niece decided to marry a young man, Randall refused, declaring that the young man was not the kind of nephew-in-law he wanted.

The suitor had a friend who was managing the campaign of a Congressional nominee, who had almost a certainty of election. When the suitor told him his troubles, the campaign manager laughed and said he knew how to ruin a business reputation, as that was his life work. Then he added, "We'll get the old chap the opposition nomination for Congress. His reputation is fine now, but when we get our campaign lies started, old Randall won't stand as high in public estimation as an average burglar does."

Nobody wanted the opposition nomination, which probably explains why Randall got it. He took it as a compliment not knowing it was loaded, but the opposition manager was a person of resource and before long poor Randall imagined that Rivington Randall was somebody he had never known. For example, he was pictured as the most heartless of landlords. Randall was a bachelor of unblemished habits, and he was naturally amazed when he met his "wife and child," especially as he had never seen or heard of them in his life, but the woman told a story that seemed to bear the earmarks of truth.

Many of his would-be constituents believed that he robbed the poor-box in church, because a statement to that effect was current and others again knew that he tried to bribe some politicians, for one honest politician returned money. In the end Randall hastily resigned and departed stealthily for South America, leaving a note in which he said: "I have lo[illegible] all my reputation and most of my friends, and I am afraid I'll lose my liberty before election day if I stay here." Did the young man marry the niece? Most certainly, and Rivington Randall was grateful to him, for, as he said to the young man, "It's kind of you to want to belong to our family after all this disgrace."

THE PROFESSOR'S PECULIAR PRECAUTIONS (April 8).—The cast: Girl (Winifred Lane); her father (Sol Aekin); collector of precious gems (Joe Phillips); crooks (Billy Noel and Jock Gironde).

Peter's collection of minerals was regarded as remarkable, and he took great pains to see that it remained in his possession. His house was most carefully guarded against thieves and fire. By opening a certain window the police were automatically told that burglars were on the premises, any extra heat in the room (even the heat of a lighted cigar, as Peter found out) being enough to send an alarm to the fire department, while an ingenious attachment to the safe, held fast any intruder who might try to open it without first turning off a catch. While the intruder was held helpless, a signal flashed in a Burglar Protective Agency, and the scheme was that a sleuth would at once be sent around to lead the criminal to a cell.

Within a very short time Peter had turned in so many false alarms, "testing" the apparatus, that no one paid any attention to him. In fact, the matter became such a joke that the newspapers printed an article about it. This item fell under the eye of a collector who had sold Peter a famous uncut diamond and held Peter's note for $2,000, balance still due. It struck this man that he could easily get the gem, and he called at midnight one evening for that purpose. When he arrived two professional burglars were on the job. They had bound Peter in his chair and were trying to blow up the safe. They miscalculated, somehow, and used too much explosive. The result was that the entire party were blown through the roof, landing in a police station, where the astute Peter collected a reward of $3,000 for the delivery of three burglars. Then he added insult to injury by paying up his note out of the reward money, explaining to his unhappy fellow collector that "perhaps your lawyer may need the cash."

From that time on Peter always defended his system of "testing" fire and burglar apparatus, claiming most justly that he had made $3,000 out of it, and the investment was worth it.

THANHOUSER.

OH! OH! OH! HENERY!! (Two Parts—April 4).—The cast: Henery (Jay C. Yorke); his trusting wife (Frances Keyes); John (Daniel Leighton); his wife (Edith Diestel); the gossip (Nellie Parker Spaulding).

Henery was a pious-looking man and at home a paragon of meekness. His wife believed him to be almost an angel. However, she was much mistaken in her trust, for when her Henery was out of her sight he was "some gay bird." A pretty stenographer worked for Henery, and he bestowed much of his affection upon her.

On the other hand, John's home life was a continual turmoil, due to the jealousy of his wife. Being of striking appearance his wife continually suspected him although he never flirted and attended strictly to business. However, John was unfortunate and fate was unkind to him; for instance, one day a lady coming out of a restaurant accidentally dropped her glove as he was passing. Being a gentleman, he picked up the glove, handing it to the lady, just as a friend of his wife's came along, saw him addressing the owner of the glove, and, of course, told John's wife. At the office one day John's stenographer was examining a new perfume atomizer and some of the perfume accidenally got upon John's coat as he was passing. At home that evening his wife smelled the perfume, and there was more trouble and explanation.

To cap the climax, John's largest customer came to the city and naturally it was John's duty to entertain him. Unfortunately for John the customer brought his wife with him to the restaurant and still more unfortunate was the fact that the customer was called from the table for a telephone message, thus leaving John and the customer's wife alone at the table near the window, where they were again seen by the busybody friend of John's wife.

Hearing all the things about her husband increased her jealousy to such an extent that John's wife decided to investigate for herself. So one day when John phoned that business would detain him and for her not to save dinner for him, it was natural that she would invite Henery's wife and her busybody friend to join her in her investigations.

You can imagine their surprise when the three women entered the restaurant where John supposedly was with some chicken they found Henery with his stenographer and friends having a gay old time. Naturally Henery's wife fainted from the sudden shock and there was a commotion during which Henery was able to escape.

Upon her arrival home John's wife found him dozing at the fireside and being ashamed of her overwrought jealousy she begged his forgiveness, promising never to suspect him again. It would have been a sad night for Henery had he dared to face his wife. He did look into the bedroom window but the missus was laying for him with implements of war and so deciding that "discretion was the better part of valor," our Henery failed to enter.

REVELATIONS (American—Five Parts—March 30).—The cast: Magda (Constance Crawley); Karl Von Kellar (Arthur Maude); Lieutenant Colonel Schwartz (William Carroll).

Magda, the daughter of Colonel Schwartz, a retired army officer, runs away from her home in Germany, and goes to Paris, hoping to gain fame as an opera singer. Her leavetaking breaks her father's heart and brings on a stroke of paralysis, which almost results in his death. After months of careful nursing, he partially recovers, and thereafter, forbids even the mention of Magda's name in his presence.

In Paris the years pass, and Magda failing to realize her ambitions, is reduced to abject poverty, and finally, rather than sell her honor, becomes a common beggar of the streets. Then, one day, penniless and starving, she enters a Bohemian cafe, in the Latin Quartier and sings for the price of a meal. Here she is seen and recognized by an old friend of her childhood days, Karl Von Kellar, who has come to Paris to study law. Learning the pathetic story of Magda's struggles and failure, he takes her to his apartment, and in the course of events she becomes his mistress. After months of happiness, Von Kellar begins to tire of Magda, and then, one day, he is called back to Germany by the death of his father.

A few months later, Magda's child is born, but pride prevents her from communicating the fact to Von Kellar, who has apparently forgotten her. Again reduced to poverty, and cast out upon the streets by a heartless landlord, she wanders up and down the highways, singing, her baby clutched to her breast. Later, to save her child from starvation, and with the promise of attaining the goal of her life's ambition—a musical career—she becomes the mistress of Antony D'Arcy, a rising young operatic manager.

Years pass, and Magda, now a famous opera singer, known as Maddalina Dall Orto, arrives at the principal hotel in her home city, to attend a big musical festival. At the governor's ball that night, which she attends, as the guest of honor, she is instantly recognized by Von Kellar, who is now a dignified and eminently respectable counsellor of state. Meanwhile, Colonel Schwartz, learning that the distinguished guest of the governor's is Magda, his daughter, is prevailed upon to forgive her, and take her back. With her numerous servants and pets, Magda takes up her quarters in the old home, and bedazzles her humble family with the wealth of her jewels and the magnificence of her wardrobe. At a loss to understand how she has attained so much good fortune and fame, her father becomes suspicious, and questions her persistently regarding her past life in Paris.

Then Von Kellar pays a call, and learns for the first time of his child, now a youngster of seven, attending a private academy in Paris. Magda denounces Von Kellar. When Von Kellar has departed, Magda's father, who has overheard enough to confirm his suspicions, confronts Magda and brutally forces a confession from her. In a towering rage, he writes Von Kellar a note, threatening to kill him, unless he consents to an immediate marriage with Magda. Fearing public exposure, and realizing that Magda's position in the world of art, will lend a certain dignity to his political prestige, Von Kellar calls on Colonel Schwartz and heartily agrees to an immediate marriage with his daughter. Alone with Magda, however, Von Kellar refuses to make her his wife, unless she agrees to keep all knowledge of their child a secret from the world. In a fit of outraged pride, she is furiously denouncing him when her father enters and learning what has passed between them, promises Von Kellar that he will force Magda to marry him as she is no longer in a position to choose the conditions under which she will become the honorable wife of her child's father. After Von Kellar has left, Colonel Schwartz locks all the doors, and arming himself with a revolver, threatens to kill both Magda and himself unless she consents to marry Von Kellar at once. She refuses to abandon her child, and as her father slowly raises the pistol to her heart he is seized with a stroke of paralysis and falls back dead. Flinging herself upon her knees by her father's dead body, Magda sobs out her misery and grief, as the story concludes.

THE GIRL AND THE GAME (Chapter 13—"A Fight for a Fortune"—March 20).—As Helen and Storm stood at the mouth of the Superstition Mine, Rhinelander presented to each of them a one-third interest in the rich property. In addition to the present to Storm, the latter was made Rhinelander's personal representative at the workings. At this juncture, Rhinelander received a note from Spike, purporting that "Lefty," a convict, had confessed to the murder of Helen's father, for which Spike had been returned to the penitentiary, and saying that he (Spike) was to receive his freedom in a few days.

Regretting the fact that he had sold himself out of rich property Seagrue congratulated himself on having been able to withhold a minority interest; and advised Rhinelander that a quarterly payment was due the following day. When this message was received, Rhinelander and Helen read it together. It was arranged that Rhinelander should take the cash to Seagrue to avoid any technicality.

Helen decided to go down with Rhinelander and meet Spike when he should leave the jail. When Seagrue received the advice that Rhinelander would be in the next day with the cash, he immediately paid a visit to the lair of his henchman, Ward, closely followed by Adams. The instructions to the two crooks were to separate Rhinelander from the money which he would be carrying to Seagrue.

Ward and Adams boarded the Las Vegas passenger train. When the train stopped for twenty minutes at a small station, the two crooks purchased a bag similar to the one in which Rhinelander carried the money. When dinner was announced, Helen and Rhinelander passed into the diner, tagged closely by Ward and Adams, who, unnoticed, took seats at the adjoining table. At his feet, Rhinelander had placed the money-filled bag. Cautiously, Ward with his foot slid the bag away and replaced it with the one purchased at the station.

Having hastily eaten their luncheon, the two men left the diner ahead of Helen and Rhinelander. Reaching Oceanside, the crooks lagged until they saw Helen and Rhinelander take a taxicab uptown, not having noticed the transfer in bags. Just at this point the crooks were approached and apprehended by two plain clothes detectives.

When the police sergeant demanded the key for the bag, that he might search it, Ward stated fiercely that he was a messenger for Seagrue, of the Colorado and Coast Railway, and did not have a key, also had no idea or knowledge of the contents of the bag. At this, the police officer thrust the bag grimly under the desk, and the two men were locked up. Leaving Rhinelander at the hotel, Helen went at once to the safety deposit vaults to place some securities for safe-keeping, and thence to the penitentiary where she met Spike, who left in her company.

In Seagrue's room, Rhinelander discovered the exchange in bags, and telephones Helen to bring the securities from the safety deposit vault at once to deposit with Seagrue until he could replace the money. She and Spike proceeded to the bank, which they found closed, and their entreaties fell upon the deaf ears of the watchman. Spike led Helen to a side door and thence to the lock box from which Helen withdrew the desired securities, only to be confronted by the watchman and the police. Helen and Spike were escorted to the police station to which Helen's telephone message brought help at once. His explanation soon freed the pair, but Seagrue refused to accept the securities, demanding cash.

As they stood outside of the station, Ward and Adams were released. Rhinelander recognized his bag as they passed, and gave hot pursuit. The crooks outdistanced their pursuers and clambered onto a freight at crossing. Helen caught a passenger train, and clambered to the roof of it. The passenger soon overtook the freight and the fearless girl, leaped to the top of the box car sheltering Ward and Adams, swung down upon them, beat them off and jumped, with the bag, from the car door.

She started north to the next station but was overtaken by Ward and Adams. At this point, Spike, who had come up with Rhinelander in an auto, rushed to her assistance to put the thieves out of the battle. Helen and Spike commandeered Rhinelander with the bag, and they hurried back to pay Seagrue in the legal tender he demanded.

With customary promptness he immediately asks for a retainer and then advises Grace that if she will get a co-respondent her husband will sue for divorce and she will be able to separate from him. She agrees and arrays herself for a catch.

Grace strolls in the park, where she is admired from the distance by Bill Van Deusen, who has just been thrown down and is waiting for something to happen. In the meantime the police are informed that a flirt is working in the park and a policewoman is delegated to get him. Walt, while driving through the park, sees his wife in company with another man. There is a bit of a mixup in which Grace denies all knowledge of knowing her husband, and the lady cop arrests Walt for flirting. She drags him off to jail while Lou advises Grace to get Van Deusen to some roadhouse and he will have her husband see her there. They start for the roadhouse and Lou starts for the jail, where he has Walt released, after receiving a retainer.

Walt trails Billy and Grace to the roadhouse where Lou scouts and finds Grace and Van Deusen in a booth. He informs them that Walt is outside with a gun and offers to arrange an amicable settlement for a certain sum, which Van Deusen provides. Walt and Van Deusen get together and have a battle which is finally brought to a halt by the waiters and attaches in the place. It is then revealed that Lou has been the source of the trouble. Van Deusen, Grace and Walt leave the best of friends.

The plaster falling upon the gentleman from the wild and wooly, aggravates him so that he goes to the room above him and makes the occupant and innocent fat person dance to the music of his smoke wagon, while Bill is hiding under the Fat Man's bed. The Bad Man returning to his room accidentally enters the room of the soubrette and orders a drink from the bell boy. Bill, coming from under the bed, takes the wallet from the Fat Man and departs with it, and going down the stairs he learns of the Bad Man's flirtation and informs his wife of it.

LONESOME LUKE CIRCUS KING (Phunphilms—March 20).—Luke figures a circus is a good money-maker and goes into the business with that idea in mind. But things don't pan out exactly as he had figured, and the net result is nil. He gathers around him all the necessary freaks that go with a modern, up-to-date, honest-to-goodness circus—the bearded lady, the fat girl, the royal something-or-other band, the smallest man in captivity, and so on. But when the beard falls off the bearded lady and reveals a young man, the fat girl proves also to be a boy, the royal band simmers down to a two piece affair, and the dwarf's fake legs are discovered the City Fathers determine on drastic action. The would-be Barnum realizes what drastic action is generally decided on by City Fathers, and determines to save them the trouble. He then "lights out" as fast as his legs will carry him, and the last we see of him is when he leaves the confines of the village far in the rear and vows never to return.

SIBERIA, THE VAST UNKNOWN (Fourth Installment April 1).—These pictures were taken in the dead of winter and picture to great advantage the modes of living of the peculiar peoples inhabiting that region. Fishing is the main occupation of these folk, and it must be done through holes chopped in the ice. The catch is then thrown on the roof of the house where it keeps fresh.

The marriage ceremony is a most unusual one and one which is most interesting. After the ceremony is completed, the wedding party wends its way through the village streets, visiting all the houses, and announcing the glad tidings to the inmates. The day after the wedding the bride and groom, escorted by the village priest and their families, make a tour of the homes of their friends and collect the wedding presents that are awaiting them. The chubby children of the Siberian wilds are also pictured.

THE WALL BETWEEN (Quality—Five Parts—March 20).—Trouble came upon John Kendall on his graduation from college. His father, a prosperous banker, had had his fortune utterly swept away and under circumstances which left his good name under a cloud. He died, and John, unable to clear away the stain, but bitterly resenting it, enlisted. He won quick promotion, and soon became a quartermaster sergeant. He had begun his second term of enlistment when he first saw Edith Ferris, the niece of Colonel Dickinson, his commanding officer. Kendall was granted a month's furlough, with permission to wear citizen's clothes, and it happened that almost the first person he encountered away from the fort was David Barclay, the chum of his college days, who took him to his country home.

When Kendall met Edith Ferris he did not know she was the colonel's niece. For a fortnight every moment of their waking hours, that was not actually demanded by their social duties, they spent in each other's society. The denouement came at a dance at the country club just before Kendall was to return to duty, his furlough being at an end. It happened that Lieutenant Burkett, an unpopular man and officer of Kendall's regiment, was also a guest. Burkett came upon the sergeant, just then in conversation with Edith Ferris and her mother, and brusquely and insultingly ordered him from the club. Kendall chose for the first time in his military life to disobey the command of a superior. Lieutenant Burkett, white with suppressed rage, was escorted to the door, while Kendall remained with Edith.

Until that time, only Edith had shared Kendall's secret. Now that her mother knew that her daughter's suitor was only an enlisted man, however, a sudden change swept over her. Finding she could not persuade Edith to give Kendall up, Mrs. Ferris took sides with Lieutenant Burkett, and they sought to discover facts which might discredit the sergeant. The story of the elder Kendall's failure came to them.

This was some weeks after the happening at the country club, and Edith, who, with her mother, was visiting Colonel Dickinson soon heard of it. That evening Kendall received a brief but urgent note. "Meet me at the pier after taps. Important. Edith." When Kendall met his sweetheart, she told him of the plot to ruin him. Suddenly a sharp commotion at the barracks and a cry for the "Guard" caused both of them to start in alarm. "A prisoner has escaped," exclaimed Kendall. Then he ran with Edith to the storehouse on the shore, of which he alone had the key. There he hid Edith until he had distracted the guards.

How the quartermaster sergeant diverted the guards and gave Edith a chance to avoid being seen, and of his refusal to explain the reasons for his presence near the storehouse, which later was found open, all of which gave Lieutenant Burkett his opportunity to discredit him and bring about his reduction to a mere sergeancy, are all matters of record. It is not generally known, however, that it was Edith's confession of her presence there to her uncle,

Colonel Dickinson, that saved Kendall from further disgrace. In the days that followed the regiment was called to Nicaragua to aid the government there in putting down an insurrection.

Kendall saved the regiment from an ambuscade that threatened to decimate it, while Burkett hid far at the rear. When the regiment returned, Sergeant Kendall found a commission as lieutenant and Edith both waiting for him. Better still, he learned that a train of circumstances had led to the clearing of the stain on his dead father's name and the return of a portion of his fortune.

TANGLED HEARTS (Five Parts—April 2).—The cast: Vera Lane (Louise Lovely); Lucille Seaton (Agnes Vernon); Enid Hammond (Marjorie Ellison); Child (Georgie French); Montgomery Seaton (Haywood Mack); John Hammond (Lon Chaney); Ernest Courtney (Jay Belasco); John Dalton (Bud Chase). Scenario by Ida May Park. Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

Montgomery Seaton is one of the idle-rich, who makes a hobby of befriending everybody upon whom he can intrude his good offices. Thus occupied, he neglects his wife to a considerable degree, and she in turn gives her entire attention to household duties. Vera Lane is a rich widow, with whom Ernest Courtney is in love, but Courtney, being of a bashful nature, is embarrassed in pressing his suit.

Mrs. Hammond comes to Seaton in distress with the story that some years before she left home with a married man and lived with him for several months. Upon discovering that she had been deceived, she returned home and later wedded John Hammond. Some few weeks after her marriage, her husband was called away on a business trip and while he was gone Mrs Hammond became the mother of a child, the result of her conduct previous to her becoming Mrs. Hammond. She concludes with the statement that the nurse who has always secretly cared for her child has just died and that the baby must be provided with a home.

Seaton goes to Hammond and relates a story which in substance made Seaton the parent of the child. He induces Hammond to adopt the baby and thus Mrs. Hammond receives in her own home the child of her illicit adventure. Later Mrs. Hammond writes to Seaton a note telling that the baby was safely arrived in her home, and further makes clear the unfortunate condition under which the baby was born. This note, by mistake, Seaton gives to Hammond, who, upon reading it, concludes that Seaton has played a trick upon him and induced him to adopt the issue of an affair between Mrs. Hammond and Seaton. That very night, while attending a reception, Hammond discovers Seaton and Mrs. Hammond in confidential conversation. Hammond shoots, but the bullet strikes Mrs. Hammond, who has thrown herself in front of Seaton to protect him.

Coincident with these details, Seaton undertakes to present Ernest Courtney's love affair to Vera Lane, the widow, in convincing fashion. While progressing with this purpose, Mrs. Seaton becomes suspicious of her husband and is doubly mystified when she sees him carrying the child to Mrs. Hammond's home.

Having been a witness to the shooting of Mrs. Hammond, and being a friend of all parties concerned, it becomes the widow's mission to straighten the various entanglements, and this she does with such success that the Seatons are restored to each other's confidence and the Hammonds are reconciled after Mrs. Hammond has related to her husband the story of her past.
